

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

REPORTS OF CASES DETERMINED IN
THE SUPREME COURT
JANUARY TERM, 1871.

[No. 2,567.]

CHARLES E. MACK v. MURRY MORRISON AND JANE F. WHITE, EXECUTOR AND EXECUTRIX OF THE ESTATE OF T. J. WHITE, DECEASED.

CONSTRUCTION OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.—Where W. sold to M. a tract of land, supposed to be part of a Mexican grant, for two thousand dollars, six hundred dollars of which was paid down, and it was agreed: first, that the remaining fourteen hundred dollars should be paid when the grant should be finally confirmed and patent issued thereon, embracing these lands; second, that if the title to the grant should be rejected, or, if confirmed, not embrace the land sold, M. should be absolved from further payments; and, third, that if the title should be rejected the six hundred dollars paid should be refunded: held, that a confirmation of the grant, with such boundaries as not to include the tract sold, did not entitle M. to recover the six hundred dollars paid.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventeenth Judicial District, County of Los Angeles.

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

The defendants were the executor and the executrix of the estate of T. J. White, deceased. A copy of the contract was annexed to, and made a part of, the complaint. The contract was dated March 30th, 1858, and the complaint averred that the Sutter grant was confirmed and a patent issued therefor June 20th, 1860, but that the lots sold were not embraced within the boundaries of the grant. The defendants demurred to the complaint. The Court below overruled the demurrer, and the defendants declining to answer, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellants.

The purchasers took the chances of the confirmed grant embracing the locus in quo, and they may have borne such a relation to the property as to have made this arrangement worth to them the six hundred dollars which they paid down for it.

Charles H. Larrabee, also for Appellants.

Alexander, Armstrong & Hinkson, for Respondents, argued that it was the intention of the parties, as shown by the terms of the contract, that the purchasers should have a good title to the land or receive their money back.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Dr. White, in his lifetime, sold to the plaintiff certain "ten acre lots" lying in Sacramento County, south of the city. The whole purchase price was two thousand dollars; six hundred dollars of this sum was paid in hand. Mack was to pay the other one thousand four hundred dollars whenever the Sutter title should be finally confirmed and a patent issued thereon embracing these lands. This is substantially repeated in a subsequent part of the contract, in which it is provided that Mack is not to pay the one thousand four hundred dollars if the Sutter title shall be finally rejected or so confirmed as not to embrace these lands. It is then provided that "in case of the rejection of said title as aforesaid," Dr. White is to repay the six hundred dollars. It turned out afterward that the Sutter title was not "rejected," but was "confirmed," but so confirmed as to exclude these lands. The precise condition upon which Mack was to be released from further payment has thus happened. But he claims that he is, thereby, also entitled to receive again the six hundred dollars. If that is the real meaning of the contract, the parties have been at considerable pains to obscure it. They say, "and it is further expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto, that if said Sutter title shall be finally rejected by the United States courts, or, if confirmed, not embrace the lands above described, then and in that event the above obligation on the part of the said parties of the second part to pay said one thousand four hundred dollars, and interest as aforesaid, shall be null and void." Here they might have added the words: "and said party of the first part shall also repay said six hundred dollars." This would have expressed the agreement just as the plaintiff now claims to understand it. Instead of doing this, however, they add (immediately after the words "null and void") these words: that "in case of rejection of said title as aforesaid," Dr. White is to pay the six hundred dollars.

The parties seem to have contemplated three contingencies, each of which was to produce a result different from either of the others:

First—The Sutter grant might be rejected in toto, in which event Mack was not only to be relieved from the payment of the one thousand four hundred dollars, but White was to repay him the six hundred dollars already received.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

Second — The grant might be confirmed so as to embrace these lands, in which event White was not only to keep the six hundred dollars, but Mack was to pay the remaining one thousand four hundred dollars.

Third — The grant might be confirmed, but not so as to include these lands within the lines of the confirmation, in which case no provision was made for the further payment by Mack, nor for the returning by White of money already paid.

The parties evidently used great care to so express themselves in the contract, and might much more easily and with fewer words have said, if they had so intended, that if these lands should be included in the Sutter patent, then Mack was to pay the balance, otherwise White was to refund the sum already received. Why they thus made a distinction between a total rejection of the Sutter grant on the one hand, and such a confirmation of it as would omit these lands on the other, was a matter for them and not for us to consider. We only see that they have done so. The record is entirely silent as to the possession of the lands when the contract was made. If Mack received it at the time from White, or if he already held it in hostility to the Sutter claim, it would not be difficult to see why this distinction was made.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

Mr. Justice SPRAGUE did not express an opinion.

WILLIAM CARUTHERS v. JOHN MCGARVEY.

SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—A sale of personal property is not completed, so as to pass the title to the property, so long as anything remains to be done to the thing sold, to identify it or discriminate it from other things.

APPEAL from the District Court, Seventeenth Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

Action on a promissory note, given by the defendant to John Lee on the 12th of October, 1867, payable on the 1st day of March, 1868. After the note fell due the payee indorsed it to the plaintiff. The defendant answered, that he paid the note to Lee, before the indorsement thereof to the plaintiff. The evidence to support the plea of payment tended to show that the defendant had a large quantity of corn husked, lying in heaps in his field, and agreed with Lee to sell him enough corn, at one dollar and fifty cents per hundred, to pay the note, and that the defendant and Lee were each to furnish a team to haul it to Lee's crib; but that nothing was done to weigh the corn or separate it from other corn in the field, and that the defendant notified Lee that the corn was ready, but he did not come to help remove it, and declined to take it away.

The Court below rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

V. E. & F. Howard & Sepulveda, and Thom & Ross, for Appellants.

The corn should have been both delivered and accepted. (Benjamin on Sales, 105; Dole v. Stimpson, 21 Pick. 384.) It was no delivery as long as anything remained to be done to ascertain the quantity by segregation from the mass. (1 Comstock, 271.) There could be no delivery or acceptance unless the corn was weighed by both parties. (Howe v.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

Palmer, 5 Eng. C. L. Reps. 303; 3 Barn. & Ald. 321; Stevens v. Stewart, 3 Cal. 140.) There was no change in the character of the possession. (Malone v. Plato, 22 Cal. 103.) "If there was no delivery there could be no acceptance." (Gardet v. Belknap, 1 Cal. 400; Benjamin on Sales, 135.)

Kewen & Howard, and George Cadwalader, for Respondent.

"Where a sale is bona fide and for valuable consideration, slight evidence of delivery is sufficient." (8 Pick. 443.) "The law recognizes a constructive as well as actual delivery; and it is upon the question, what constitutes such constructive delivery, that most of the cases in the books have arisen." (Hilliard on Sales, Chap. III, Sec. 4.) "Where some act remains to be done in relation to the articles which are the subject of the sale, as that of weighing or measuring, and there is no evidence tending to show the intention of the parties to make an absolute and complete sale, the property in such articles does not pass to the vendee until such act is performed. But it is otherwise if the payment of the purchase money is not a condition precedent to the transfer, and it appears that the parties intended that the sale should be complete before the articles were weighed or measured." (Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280; 13 Pick. 182.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The defendant claims that the note in suit was paid, while in the hands of the payee, by the sale to him of corn, at the rate of one dollar and a half percental, the quantity sold to be sufficient to amount to the sum of four hundred and five dollars—the balance due on the note. The payee of the note was notified that the corn was ready for him, but it was not weighed, nor was the quantity to be delivered separated from the other corn in the field. It is elementary law that the property does not pass absolutely unless the sale be completed; and it is not completed, so long as anything remains to be done to the thing sold, to identify it or discriminate it from other things. (1 Pars. on Cont. 441.)

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Neither Mr. Justice CROCKETT nor Mr. Justice SPRAGUE expressed an opinion.

WILLIAM S. WATSON v. SAN FRANCISCO AND HUMBOLDT BAY RAILROAD COMPANY.

PLEADING — SEVERAL CAUSES OF ACTION NOT TO BE UNITED.—The several causes of action upon which a party relies must be set out with directness and precision, the amount due upon each cause of action being separately stated.

DEFAULTS.—Applications to open defaults are addressed to the legal discretion of the Court.

IDEM.—As a general rule, when the circumstances are such as to lead the Court to hesitate upon a motion to open a default, it is better to decide in favor of the application.

TERMS ON OPENING DEFAULT.—In opening a default, terms and conditions ought generally to be imposed, which should be more or less severe, as the circumstances seem to warrant.

WHEN DEFAULT SHOULD BE OPENED.—Where a defendant has been misled by an incorrect publication of the time the suit was commenced, in a printed sheet containing information of Court proceedings, on which the business community generally relied, the default should be opened.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth District, City and County of San Francisco.

The complaint alleged as follows: "That defendant is a corporation duly organized, incorporated, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California. That said defendant is indebted to this plaintiff in the sum of four thousand nine hundred and seventy-three dollars and sixty-two cents, balance due for the work and labor, care and diligence and attendance by said plaintiff made, performed, bestowed, and given in and about the business of the said defendant, and for and at the special instance and request of said defendant; and for money by said plaintiff paid, laid out, and expended to and for the use of, and in and about the business of the said defendant, and for his benefit and use, and at his like special instance and request, from the 4th day of March, A. D. 1868, until the 4th day of December, A. D. 1868, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and in the cities of the Atlantic States, in advocating and urging upon the Congress of the United States the passage of an Act by said Congress granting certain lands to said defendant for the purpose of aiding said defendant in the construction of the road, as set forth in the articles of incorporation; and, also, in negotiating and making provisions for the purchase and delivery of the necessary iron and rolling stock for said defendant. That there remains a balance due this plaintiff from said defendant, for said work and labor, care and diligence and attendance so made, performed, bestowed, and given, and for said sums of money so paid, laid out, and expended, the sum of four thousand nine hundred and seventy-three dollars and sixty-two cents. That said plaintiff has presented his said account to the said defendant for payment, and payment has been refused."

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

O. H. Spencer, for Appellant.

As to what constitutes a legal and sufficient excuse to avoid a judgment by default, we have no direct authority; but as to what does not constitute a sufficient excuse, we respectfully refer to Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 186; Elliott v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 377. We are aware that this Court has repeatedly held, that orders like the present rest very much in the discretion of the court below. "The discretion intended, however, is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but an impartial discretion, guided and controlled in its exercise by fixed legal principles. * * * In a plain case, this discretion has no office to perform, and its exercise is limited to doubtful cases, where an impartial mind hesitates." (Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 424.)

Daingerfield & Olney, for Respondents.

We assume as axioms, that Courts should perform their duties, and that it is the object of law to administer justice. Courts will, therefore, in all cases, where a discretion is left them, so administer, or use that discretion that substantial right may be done between litigants. If, then, in the case under consideration, substantial justice has been done, and the appellant has suffered no wrong, this Court will not reverse the judgment.

Where a judgment is set aside under the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act, and a party permitted to come in and defend, the Supreme Court will not interfere, unless there was a clear abuse of discretion in the Court below. (Roland v. Kreyenkagen, 18 Cal. 455; Mulholland v. Heyneman, 20 Cal.) In setting aside a judgment, the Court below will use its own discretion, and this Court will not interfere, unless in case of gross abuse. (Woodward v. Backus, 20 Cal. 137.) The order will not be vacated unless the discretion has been grossly abused. (Howe v. Independent Co., 27 Cal. 72.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The complaint in this case is directly within the objections pointed out in Buckingham v. Waters, 14 Cal. 147, for it is a jumble of several causes of action in one count. It does not allege, for instance, how much of the four thousand nine hundred and seventy-three dollars sued for was owing to the plaintiff for his own work and labor bestowed upon the business of the defendant, nor how much was paid out for the use of the defendant in California; nor yet, how much was expended on the Atlantic side, "in advocating and urging upon the Congress of the United States the passage of an Act by said Congress, granting certain lands to said defendants," etc. More directness and precision in pleading these matters seems to be required by the code, as interpreted by this Court.

The defendant is a corporation, and the summons was served on its Secretary, August twenty-fourth. The fourth day of September following would be the first day upon which default could be taken for want of an answer. On that day default was entered and final judgment demanded, and on the same day an application was made by the defendant to open the default. This was allowed upon condition that the defendant should pay the plaintiff twenty dollars, and also make answer within five days. From this order this appeal is taken by the plaintiff. Applications of this character are addressed to the discretion — the legal discretion — of the Court in which the default has occurred, and should be disposed of by it as substantial justice may seem to require. Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts, for perhaps no two cases will be found to present the same circumstances for consideration. As a general rule, however, in cases where, as here, the application is made so immediately after default entered as that no considerable delay to the plaintiff is to be occasioned by permitting a defense on the merits, the Court ought to incline to relieve. The exercise of the mere discretion of the Court ought to tend in a reasonable degree, at least, to bring about a judgment on the very merits of the case; and when the circumstances are such as to lead the court to hesitate upon the motion to open the default, it is better, as a general rule, that the doubt should be resolved in favor of the application. In connection with its allowance, terms and conditions ought generally to be imposed upon the party in default, which, of course, should be more or less severe as the particular circumstances would seem to warrant.

In this case, as we have already seen, the defendant was required, as a condition of opening the default, to pay the plaintiff a fixed sum of money, and also to plead issuably within five days.

Upon such an appeal as this the only question for us is, whether or not the Court below abused its discretion in opening the default. If there is no showing of facts whatever in support of the application, an order granting it will be reversed, as was done in People v. O'Connell, 23 Cal. 282. In the case at bar, it appears that the Secretary of the defendant was misled by an incorrect publication of the time of the commencement of the suit, appearing in a printed sheet regularly issued, and containing information of Court proceedings relied upon by the business community in the City of San Francisco, and which had always been theretofore found to be "invariably accurate."

If this sheet had been correct in fact, then the defendant had the whole of the fourth day of September in which to answer. It was on that day that the default was entered, and on that day, too, that application for relief was promptly made by the defendant.

Upon these facts, in view of the statement of a meritorious defense to the action and the conditions imposed upon the defendant, we can not say that the court below abused its discretion in opening the default.

Order affirmed.

GEORGE W. HENLEY AND THOMAS B. HENLEY v.
A. P. HOTALING AND LLOYD TEVIS.

CONVERTING A DEED INTO A MORTGAGE.—When an attempt is made to convert a deed, absolute in form, into a mortgage, the evidence ought to be so clear as to leave no doubt that the real intention of the parties was to execute a mortgage; otherwise, the intention appearing on the face of the deed will prevail.

IDEM.—Parties may buy lands in satisfaction of a debt, or for a consideration paid, and contract to reconvey upon the payment of a sum certain, without any intention that the transaction should create a mortgage.

COVENANT TO RECONVEY.—A covenant to reconvey does not necessarily convert an absolute deed into a mortgage. It may be one among other facts showing that the parties intended the deed to operate as a mortgage.

PUBLIC POLICY.—A sale of land, with a reservation to the vendor of the right to purchase, is not opposed to public policy.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO REPURCHASE.—To convert an absolute deed into a mortgage, something more must be shown than a reservation of the right to repurchase.

NO MORTGAGE WITHOUT DEBT.—The existence of a debt—an obligation to pay money—is essential to the existence of a mortgage.

CLAIM OF LAND.—One in possession of public land, sufficiently describes the same in a power of attorney, by calling it his claim of land.

APPEAL from the District Court, Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

William R. Storms was in the possession of two thousand acres of public land at Round Valley, Mendocino County, and gave to S. P. Storms a power of attorney, of which the following is a copy:

“ROUND VALLEY, 7th Oct., 1859.

“Know all men by these presents, that I, Wm. R. Storms, of Boston, County of Suffolk, State of Massachusetts, have made, constituted, and appointed, and by these presents do make, constitute, and appoint S. P. Storms, of Round Valley, County of Mendocino, State of California, my true and lawful attorney, for me, and in my name, place, and stead, to buy and sell all kinds of stock that is on my ranch in said Round

Statement of Facts.

Valley, or in the State of California; to buy and sell any claims of land in said valley or State; to buy or sell all kinds of merchandise, and to make contracts in any business that may occur to carry on my business in the State of California, giving and granting unto my said attorney full power and authority to do and perform all and every act and thing whatsoever requisite and necessary to be done in the whole State of California, as fully to all intents and purposes as I might or could do if personally present, with full power of substitution and revocation, hereby ratifying and confirming all my said attorney or his substitute shall lawfully do or cause to be done by virtue hereof."

On the 13th of December, 1860, the attorney in fact called upon defendant, Hotaling, and solicited a loan of five thousand dollars, and offered as security a mortgage on said land. Hotaling agreed to make the loan on the security, if his counsel approved of it; and Storms and Hotaling went to the office of his attorney, who advised that the power of attorney did not authorize S. P. Storms to negotiate a loan or execute a mortgage. Hotaling then declined to make the loan. S. P. Storms then offered to sell the land to Hotaling for five thousand dollars, and Hotaling accepted the proposition. S. P. Storms, as attorney in fact, then, on the 13th of December, 1860, executed to Hotaling a deed of the land, absolute on its face, and Hotaling paid him the five thousand dollars. Hotaling then executed to William R. Storms a bond, conditioned that if said Storms paid him five thousand dollars, with interest at three per cent. per month one year from date, he would convey the land to him. The bond provided, that until the payment of the money, it should remain in the custody of Hotaling's attorney as an escrow, and that if Storms failed to pay the money, the bond should be delivered up to Hotaling to be canceled. Hotaling, at the same time, gave S. P. Storms a lease of the land for one year. At the end of the year Storms refused to deliver up possession, and Hotaling recovered possession in an action for holding over contrary to the terms of the lease. In 1862, Wm. R. Storms, being indebted to the plaintiffs, executed to defendant Tevis a deed of the land in trust for the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs brought this action to have the deed to Hotaling canceled, and to obtain possession of the land, and a conveyance from Tevis, their trustee. Storms did not pay the five thousand dollars mentioned in the bond. Defendant, Hotaling, recovered judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

James B. Townsend, for Appellants.

The power did not authorize a sale of the land. The clause under which the power is claimed is that in relation to buying and selling "claims of land." The object of the power was to have his aforesaid business in California "carried on" during his absence from the State.

A power should be construed according to the intention of the parties. (Story on Agency, Secs. 21, 65, 66, 68, 69, 71, 72, 83; Lord v. Sherman, 2 Cal. 499, 501; *Washburn v. The deed given to Hotaling, when viewed in the light of the circumstances which preceded and followed its execution, became in fact and in law a mortgage. (Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 535; Kerr v. Gilmore, 6 Watts, 405, 407; Clark v. Henry, 2 Cow. 327, 330, 331, 332; Bright v. Wagle, 3 Dana, 253; Brown v. Dewey, 1 Sandf. Ch. 61, 64; Morris v. Ex'r of Nixon, 1 How. U. In a court of equity an absolute deed, with a bond or agreement for a reconveyance, is treated as a mortgage. (Polhemus v. Trainer, 30 Cal. 687; Kerr v. Gilmore, 6 Watts, 408; Colwell v. Bale, 2 Vern. 84; Wharf v. Howell, 5 Binn. 499.)

McAllister & Bergin, for Respondents.

The question whether a deed given under circumstances like those in this case was intended as a conditional sale or a mortgage is purely one of fact, and the finding of the Court thereon is conclusive. (Sears v. Dixon, 33 Cal. 330.)

Where there is no debt and no loan, an agreement to resell will not change an absolute conveyance into a mortgage. (Glover v. Payn, 19 Wend. 521; Rich v. Doane, 35 Verm. 135; Slowe v. McMurray, 27 Mo. 113; Williams v. Owens, 5 Mylne & Cr. 303; Hughes v. Sheaff, 19 Iowa, 331.)

Although this transaction had its inception in a proposition to borrow money, yet there was, in fact, no loan of money. (Pearson v. Seay, 35 Alabama, 616; Bodwell v. Webster, 13 Pick.; Flagg v. Mann, 14 Pick. 477; Johnson v. Clarke, 5 Pike, 321; King v. Kinsey, 1 Ired. Eq. 187; McDonald v. McLeod, Id. 221; McLaurin v. Wright, 2 Id. 94; Kelly v. Bryan, 6 Ired. Eq. 284; Hickman v. Cantrell, 9 Yerger, 172; Lans v. Dickerson, 10 Yerger, 373.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

Was the instrument which was executed by William R. Storms, by his attorney in fact, S. F. Storms, to Hotaling, what it purported to be, an absolute conveyance of the premises in controversy, or was it a mortgage? The Court below found it to be the former, and the evidence was amply sufficient to justify the finding. The parties consulted the legal adviser of Hotaling, and by him they were informed that the letter of attorney did not empower the attorney in fact to execute a mortgage. Thereupon a proposition was made by one party, and accepted by the other, for a sale of the premises, and the deed and the other papers relating to the transaction between the parties were prepared and executed under the supervision of the same counsel; and in giving his testimony he says: "The parties gave me positive instructions to have it a sale, and not a mortgage, and if those papers make it anything else, then the papers did not perform the object of the parties and their transaction." The attorney in fact manifested some annoyance when informed that the power of attorney did not authorize him to execute a mortgage, and he suggested a sale, and the papers were drawn with that object. There can be no question, from the evidence, that the counsel who prepared the deed and the other papers relating to the transaction, understood from the parties that they desired a sale of the premises, and that they were prepared and executed under his direction, in the manner stated in the evidence, with the intent that the transaction should not, by construction, be held to amount to a mortgage.

When the intention of the parties to a deed, absolute in form, is sought to be ascertained, not in the usual way, by reading and construing the instrument, in connection with evidence to identify the subject-matter, the parties, etc., but by evidence to establish an equity beyond and outside of the deed, and thus to convert the deed into a mortgage, the evidence ought to be so clear as to leave no doubt that the real intention of the parties was to execute a mortgage, otherwise the intention appearing on the face of the deed ought to prevail. There can be no question that a party may make a purchase of lands either in satisfaction of a precedent debt or for a consideration then paid, and may at the same time contract to reconvey the lands upon the payment of a certain sum, without any intention on the part of either party that the transaction should be, in effect, a mortgage. There is no absolute rule that the covenant to reconvey shall be regarded, either in law or equity, as a defeasance. The covenant to reconvey, it is true, may be one fact, taken in connection with other facts, going to show that the parties really intended the deed to operate as a mortgage, but standing alone, it is not sufficient to work that result. The owner of the lands may be willing to sell at the price agreed upon, and the purchaser may also be willing to give his vendor the right to repurchase upon specified terms; and if such appears to be the intention of the parties, it is not the duty of the Court to attribute to them a different intention. Such a contract is not opposed to public policy, nor is it in any sense illegal; and Courts would depart from the line of their duties should they, in disregard of the real intention of the parties, declare it to be a mortgage. "To deny the power of two individuals," says Chief Justice Marshall, "capable of acting for themselves, to make a contract for the purchase and sale of lands defeasible by the payment of money at a future day; or, in other words, to make a sale with a reservation to the vendor, of the right to repurchase the same land, at a fixed price and at a specified time, would be to transfer to the Court of Chancery, in a considerable degree, the guardianship of adults as well as infants." (Conway's Executors v. Alexander, 7 Cranch, 237.)

Conceding to parties the right to contract in that manner, it necessarily follows that something more than a reservation of the right to repurchase, or a covenant to reconvey, must be shown, in order to convert an absolute deed into a mortgage. There is one fact which is indispensable for this purpose. A mortgage is a security for the performance of an agreement, which is usually to pay a sum of money. Leaving out of view other agreements than those for the payment of money, it is essential that there be an agreement, either express or implied, on the part of the mortgagor, or some one in whose behalf he executes the mortgage, to pay to the mortgagee a sum of money. If there is no debt there is no mortgage. We look in vain, in this case, to find any evidence of a promise on the part of Storms to repay the purchase money, or of the existence of a debt of any kind from him to Hotaling. The arrangement was, that Hotaling should execute a bond to reconvey the premises; but Storms did not agree to repurchase, and the bond was delivered as an escrow, and it remained an escrow until after the time therein mentioned for the execution of the deed, and was then canceled. If the deed was intended as a mortgage, the mortgagee would have a right of action to foreclose the mortgage; but if he had brought such an action, the answer that there was no promise, either express or implied, on the part of the alleged mortgagor, to repay the purchase money, would have been a complete bar. This case differs from Sears v. Dixon, 38 Cal. 326, in the important particular, that in that case the mortgagor covenanted to repay the purchase money at a fixed time, and, under the name of rent, to pay interest thereon at a stipulated rate. And the Court also found that the parties intended to execute a mortgage; but in this case the Court found that the parties intended the deed to be, in fact, as it was in form, an absolute conveyance.

It is contended by the plaintiffs, that if the deed is held to be absolute, it is void, because it was executed by the attorney in fact, without authority. The letter of attorney authorized him "to buy and sell any claims of land in said valley or State" — Round Valley or State of California — and it is insisted that the premises in controversy do not come within the general designation of "claims of land." It appears that at the time the contract was entered into, the "Storms ranch" was public land of the United States, and was in the possession of William R. Storms, his attorney in fact having the management of it. The term "claim" is more frequently used than any other to describe such interest in a parcel of the public lands of the United States as the person in possession thereof holds. (See Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 191.) When a person has entered into possession of public lands, he describes the act by saying that he has taken up a claim; and a sale, abandonment, etc., is mentioned in common speech as a sale, abandonment, etc., of his claim; and that term is employed in contracts in describing his interest in the lands, and the grantor conveys by that designation, as well his interest in the lands in his possession, as his demand for, or asserted right to, the lands in the possession of another.

EX PARTE T. W. VOLL.

PETITION FOR HABEAS CORPUS.— One who applies upon habeas corpus to be admitted to bail, pending an appeal, after conviction for the crime of manslaughter, must state in his petition facts upon which the Court can exercise an intelligent discretion in determining the question; such as, that injustice has been done him during the trial, and that the appeal has been taken in good faith, and others of a like nature.

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, J.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AS TO BAIL.—The Constitution of this State, in declaring bail to be a matter of right, contemplates only those cases in which the party has not been already convicted.

BAIL AFTER CONVICTION.—The statute which makes bail a matter of discretion after conviction for manslaughter is not unconstitutional.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

G. W. Tyler, for Petitioner.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for the People.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Upon petition for writ of habeas corpus.

It appears by the petition filed in this case that the prisoner is now detained at the Penitentiary by the Warden, pursuant to the judgment of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, adjudging him to suffer certain imprisonment there as a punishment for the crime of manslaughter, of which he had been convicted in that Court. It is also averred in the petition that from that judgment the prisoner has taken an appeal to this court, which is yet undetermined, and that he is pecuniarily able to give bail for his appearance if he should be permitted to do so.

The statute (Cr. Pr. Act, Sec. 509) provides that a person charged with such an offense as manslaughter may be admitted to bail before conviction, "as a matter of right," but (Sec. 512) after conviction "as a matter of discretion" merely.

If we are to consider this application as made to our discretion under the statute, the petition is insufficient, in that it sets forth no fact or circumstance whatever upon which it would be possible for us to exercise an intelligent discretion in determining the application. It is not averred, for instance, that any injustice has been done the prisoner in the course of the judicial proceedings had in the District Court; nor that any error of law intervened to his prejudice on his trial; nor that it is hoped that the judgment of conviction appearing to have been rendered against him will, for any reason, be disturbed here. It is not even stated that the appeal appearing to have been taken was taken in good faith; or that it will be prosecuted to a final determination in this Court. For these and like reasons, not necessary to be stated in detail, the petitioner has not brought the case within the statutory requirements concerning applications for bail after conviction of the crime of manslaughter.

The argument however, which was made in support of the petition denies the constitutionality of the statute in so far as it enacts that a conviction already had shall take away the right to bail, and leave it a question to be determined by the mere discretion of the Court, upon the facts appearing in the particular case. In support of this view the Constitution (Art. I, Sec. 7) is cited. Its language is as follows: "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident, or the presumption great."

Upon this it is claimed that the Constitution first announces the general rule that "all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties;" it next declares the only admissible exception to the rule, i. e., "capital offenses;" and, lastly, narrows this exception to those capital offenses "in which the proof is evident, or the presumption great."

It is insisted that the language of the Constitution is sufficiently broad to embrace not only a case where no trial has been had, but equally a case in which a conviction of an offense, less than capital in degree, has occurred; that the Constitution does not regard the particular stage of proceedings which the prosecution may have reached, but only the grade of the offense involved as being less than the capital grade. It is said that at common law an application for bail was addressed solely to the discretion of the Judges,

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

“without certain rules to guide it, which has ever been regarded with jealousy by a people tenacious of liberty;” and that the purpose of the Constitution was to place the right to bail upon a more assured basis than mere discretion. It is true that at common law applications for bail in criminal cases were said to be addressed to the discretion of the Judges, to be exercised upon the circumstances appearing; the form of the entry upon which the prisoner was released on bail being “de gratia curiæ speciali.” We think, however, that the clause of the Constitution cited is only designed to alter this rule of the common law as to certain criminal cases before conviction; and that the matter of bail after conviction is still left discretionary, as it was at common law, with the modifications wrought by the statute of this State. We are of opinion that the Constitution, in declaring bail to be a matter of right, contemplated only those cases in which the guilt of the party had not been already judicially ascertained; cases in which the prisoner as yet stood upon his plea of not guilty, supported with all the presumptions of innocence with which the law delights to surround him. But when his trial has been had, and his plea proven false, the law will not stultify itself by presuming him other than that it has itself adjudged him to be. If the Constitution, indeed, intended to introduce the rule of absolute right to bail, as well after as before conviction of such felonies, it would result that no convict could be punished for his ascertained crime if he had either wealth or friends; for no mere pecuniary considerations could weigh against the alternative of a degrading imprisonment, at hard labor, for a crime involving moral turpitude. It would operate in practice as a mere money commutation for the infamous corporeal punishment which the law has denounced against the perpetration of crime.

The literal interpretation insisted upon—following, as it does, the mere words of the Constitution—would not only entitle the prisoner to bail, pending his appeal taken, but would have done so had he not taken an appeal at all. In this view it was unnecessary for him to have stated, as he has done in his petition, that he had appealed from the judgment of conviction, because, upon the literal reading of the Constitution, upon which he insists, that is not a condition imposed upon his right to bail; it is one which is only to be found in the statute, which he seems, however, to have so far observed, even while coming here to assail its constitutionality. Indeed, upon the interpretation here insisted upon, the right to object would still belong to the prisoner, even if it had appeared in the petition that his appeal was no longer pending here, but that the judgment of the District Court had been affirmed in this Court, because it will be seen that the mere words of the Constitution have not, for this purpose, announced any distinction between cases in which judgments have been already affirmed and cases yet pending on appeal. In either case, or, indeed, in any other conceivable case in which an offense less in degree than capital should be involved, the absolute right to bail must, upon this theory, be accorded to every prisoner; at least, so long as the phrase "all persons" is sufficiently comprehensive to include him, he must continue to be "bailable by sufficient sureties." A construction leading to such consequences cannot be supposed to have been intended by the framers of the Constitution, and, in our opinion, ought not to be attributed by us to that instrument.

The application must be denied and the prisoner remanded, and it is so ordered.

Neither Mr. Justice TEMPLE nor Mr. Justice SPRAGUE expressed an opinion.

VOL. XLII.—8

Statement of Facts.

[No. 2,252.]

CHARLES E. RICH AND MARY ELISE RICH v.
CHARLES STANLEY TUBBS AND HENRY DURANT TUBBS.

SEPARATE PROPERTY OF WIFE.—If the husband purchases real estate with the separate property of the wife, but takes the conveyance to himself, the land thus purchased is also the separate property of the wife, as between the husband and the wife.

HOMESTEAD—TITLE TO—PROBATE COURT.—The Probate Court, in setting apart for the use of the family of the deceased husband or wife property which had been dedicated as a homestead under the Homestead Act, does not change or transfer the title; nor does it adjudicate the question of title.

ISSUE.—The purpose and effect of an order of the Probate Court, setting apart such homestead, is, that the property be relieved from administration, and that it does not constitute assets of the estate of the deceased.

INHERITANCE OF HOMESTEAD.—Under the fourth section of the Homestead Act of 1860 the legitimate children are entitled to take an interest in the homestead upon the death of either the husband or wife.

ISSUE.—Since the passage of the Homestead Act of 1862 the children of the deceased husband or wife do not inherit any interest in the homestead, but the same vests absolutely in the surviving husband or wife.

INHERITANCE.—The inheritance is regulated by the law in force at the time of the death.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The first husband of the plaintiff, Mary Elize Rich, was Mr. Tubbs. To them were born two children during wedlock. At the time of her marriage with Mr. Tubbs she had property, with which, at her request, he purchased the land in controversy. Tubbs and wife filed a declaration of homestead in January, 1861. Tubbs took the conveyance to himself, and afterwards died, and the widow married the other plaintiff, Charles E. Rich. This action was brought to quiet the title to the land thus purchased, against the adverse claim of said children. Judgment was rendered in the Court below in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed from the judgment. The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

B. F. Morrison, for Appellants.

McCullough & Boyd, for Respondents.

Were this a transaction between strangers, undoubtedly it would be held that Mr. Tubbs simply held the legal title in trust for Mrs. Tubbs, who was the real owner. (Bayles v. Baxter, 22 Cal. 575; Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119; Settembre v. Putnam, 30 Cal. 490; Sandfross v. Jones, 35 Cal. 486, 487; Case v. Coddington, 35 Cal. 191.)

As it was, the whole consideration for the premises being paid from the separate property of the wife, it was a mere change in the form, without in the least changing the character of the property as her separate estate; and this fact can always be shown, as against the deed, and when clearly and satisfactorily shown, the property remains the separate estate of the party whose money or other property was employed in the acquisition. (Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 42, 43; Peck v. Vandenberg, 30 Cal. 42.)

[See Barber v. Babel, 36 Cal. 11, as to homestead.—REP.]

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The facts found by the referee, fully establish that, as between the female plaintiff and her then husband, the premises in controversy were the separate property of the wife. The declaration of homestead was executed by both husband and wife; under the Act of 1860; and assuming that the separate property of the wife may be dedicated as a homestead, two questions arise for consideration:

First—What was the effect of the order of the Probate Court, setting apart the homestead for the use of the family of the deceased husband? The Probate Court, in setting apart property which has been dedicated as a homestead under the Homestead Act, does not change nor transmit the title; nor, indeed, does it adjudicate the question of title as between the parties who assert a claim to it. The purpose and effect of the order setting apart such homestead is merely that the property be relieved from administration — that it does not constitute assets of the estate of the deceased — and the order sets it apart for whom it may concern. The question of title, as between the claimants, is to be determined in another forum. (Estate of James, 23 Cal. 417; Estate of Orr, 29 Cal. 101; Estate of Delaney, 37 Cal. 176.)

Second — In whom did the title vest upon the death of the husband? The Homestead Act of 1860 declares, that the husband and wife shall hold the homestead property as joint tenants; but that provision is to be read in connection with the fourth section of the Act, which provides that upon the death of the husband or wife the homestead shall be set apart, by the Probate Court, for the benefit of the survivor, and his or her legitimate children. Although they are denominated joint tenants, they are not such in the full sense of the common law definition of that term. The "legitimate children" are entitled to take an interest upon the death of either the husband or wife. It is unnecessary, in this case, to define the nature of the interest which descends to the children; but it is clear that, under the fourth section of the Act of 1860, they take some interest by inheritance from their deceased father or mother. The Homestead Act of 1862 contains no such provision as is found in Section 4 of the Act of 1860. After providing that the husband and wife shall be joint tenants, it provides that, on the death of either, the homestead property shall vest absolutely in the survivor. No provision is therein made, for the inheritance of any interest in the homestead property, by the children of the deceased. As the defendants (the children of the deceased husband) took nothing by inheritance, unless the law in force at the time of the decease of their father so provided, the question on which the case turns is, at what time did he die? It is found that he died in 1862 — the precise time not being stated. The order of the Probate Court was made July 7th, 1862. The Homestead Act of 1862 was passed and took effect May 12th, 1862. It is incumbent on the defendants alleging error—in other words, claiming that they acquired an interest in the homestead property by inheritance—to show that the deceased died, before their right to take by inheritance, was cut off by the passage of the Act of May 12th, 1862. This fact is not shown by the record.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

William Ross, for Appellant.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton and O. P. Overton, for the People.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The appellant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree, in the alleged killing of Johnson Wilson, and sentenced to be executed.

On the trial, Stewart, being under examination as to his competency as a trial juror, stated that he had heard all about the case—all about the circumstances of the case; that he didn't know that he had formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. He was then asked the question: "Could you, now, after hearing what you have, serve on this jury without any partiality?" He answered: "I do not think that I could." Thereupon the counsel for prisoner said: "We challenge the juror." District Attorney: "We deny the challenge." The Court: "The challenge is overruled." Prisoner's counsel: "We except to the ruling of the Court." Another of the prisoner's counsel here added:

"We object to the juror on the ground of positive bias." Stewart was then peremptorily challenged by the prisoner.

The challenge, as here interposed, is general in its terms; it specifies nothing whatsoever. The language is, "We challenge the juror." For what? If for actual bias, the Court could not determine it, but must appoint triers for that purpose. If for implied bias, it was the duty of the Court itself to decide upon the objection. When a prisoner intends to exercise his right of challenge under the statute, he is bound to designate, in some way, the objection upon which it is his purpose to rely. He is not to be permitted to interpose a challenge of such an indefinite character that it cannot be ascertained if it be for implied bias or for actual bias, nor whether its truth is to be determined by the Court itself or by triers appointed for that purpose.

In the case of The People v. Reynolds, 16 Cal. 130, the challenge was more specific than in the case at bar; it purported to be for implied bias. Yet it was held insufficient.

because it did not specify any one of the causes enumerated in Section 347 of the Criminal Practice Act. Said the Court: "Unless the cause be alleged, the challenge may be disregarded by the Court. It is not enough to say: 'I challenge the juror for implied bias,' and then stop. The particular cause from which such bias is to be inferred must be stated. Such was the rule of the common law, and such is the direction of the statute of this State."

If we are to consider the challenge as made for implied bias, it was properly overruled by the Court, because no one of the several grounds for challenge of that character was made to appear, and it is evident that the challenge was intended to be for implied bias only, for the Court was permitted to decide upon its sufficiency, without objection. It is true that the prisoner excepted to the decision of the Court, but this was an exception to the particular decision, as made in denying the challenge, and not an objection to the right of the court to decide the question at all. The remark made by one of the counsel for the prisoner, after the challenge had been overruled and an exception taken, that he objected to the juror "on the ground of positive bias" (by which we understand him to have meant actual bias), goes for nothing, because it was not passed upon by the Court below nor insisted upon by the counsel; nor, so far as appears, even called to the attention of the Court; nor was any exception based upon it. A party who intends to interpose a challenge for actual bias must allege that the juror is biased against him, and the challenge must be entered on the minutes of the Court. Upon the entry of such a challenge upon the minutes of the Court, its duty is pointed out by the statute, and a failure to pursue it would undoubtedly be erroneous. But when no such challenge is made or entered, and no application to the Court to have the necessary triers appointed, a party cannot complain here, even if he show a state of facts upon which the juror probably would have been excluded by the triers, if they had been appointed.

The evidence upon which the verdict was found was mainly, if not altogether, circumstantial. No witness was produced who saw the prisoner shoot the deceased. We have carefully examined it, and we are satisfied that the Court below did not err in refusing to set aside the verdict as being contrary to the evidence. The offer of the prisoner to prove that the deceased had said, in a conversation some three years before his assassination, that he had enemies in the county who, he was afraid, would take his life, was properly excluded as being too remote. But we do not intend to be understood as intimating that the statement of the deceased, upon that point, would have been admissible, under the circumstances of this case, even if made recently before his death.

The instructions of the Court, given to the jury at considerable length, presented the principles of law applicable to the case with remarkable perspicuity; indeed, there is no complaint made here on the part of the prisoner that any instruction was improperly given or refused by the learned Judge of the Court below.

We see no error in the record, and the judgment is therefore, affirmed.

DAVID MAHONEY AND SOLOMON A. SHARP v.
JOHN MIDDLETON, PATRICK HIGGINS, HER-MAN WOHLER, DANIEL C. BREED, ALFRED
BOREL, — RODGERS, JOHN HIGGINS, EXEC-UTOR OF DANIEL N. BREED, DECEASED, WM. HENRY
GREEN, LEWIS WELSCH, PETER DONAHUE,
JOHN LEMMON, SAMUEL P. MIDDLETON, L.
L. ROBINSON, AND EDWARD SWEENEY.

PRIORITY OF CONVEYANCES AND OF RECORDING DEEDS.—A conveyance to one who has notice of a prior unrecorded deed, given by his grantor to a third person, passes no title to the grantee, and an innocent purchaser from such grantee does not acquire any title, except through the Registry Act, in getting his deed recorded before the record of such prior deed.

PURCHASER WITH CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.—A purchaser from one who bought with notice of a prior unrecorded deed, given by his grantor to a third person, has constructive notice of such prior deed, if it is recorded before the execution of his conveyance, and he is not a purchaser in good faith, although the deed to his grantor may have been recorded before the record of such prior deed. In such case the prior deed will take precedence.

PRESUMPTION THAT SUMMONS WAS SERVED.—When the judgment roll which is offered in evidence is silent as to the issuing and service of process, it will be presumed that process was issued, and served on the defendants, and the judgment is not void.

RECORD NEED NOT SHOW SERVICE OF SUMMONS.—The fact alone, that the judgment roll does not show that summons was served on the defendants, does not sustain a finding of the Court that there was no service of summons. The fact that the judgment roll does not show that summons was served does not tend to sustain such finding.

APPEARANCE OF DEFENDANT BY ATTORNEY.—The appearance of a defendant by an attorney gives the Court jurisdiction over such defendant.

MORTGAGE BY TENANT IN COMMON.—If a party who owns an undivided one seventh of a tract of land, as a tenant in common with others, is in possession of a portion of the tract, and mortgages all such portion, describing it by metes and bounds in the mortgage, and the mortgage is foreclosed, the purchaser at the mortgage sale acquires the title to only an undivided one seventh of the portion thus mortgaged.

EJECTMENT AGAINST TENANT IN COMMON.—In ejectment by one tenant in common against another who is in possession of a portion of the demanded premises described by metes and bounds, the defendant cannot resist a recovery as to the portion he thus possesses, on the ground that in equity his interest in all the demanded premises should be set off so as to include the portion which he thus occupies.

DEED BY TENANT IN COMMON.—If a party purchases from one who owns one undivided one seventh of a tract of land, a portion of such tract described by metes and bounds, he acquires the title to only one undivided one seventh of the portion he has purchased.

EFFECT OF JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT.—A judgment in ejectment does not transfer to the prevailing party the title of the adverse party; but it awards to the successful party the possession, because the opposite party had no title to the land in controversy, and estops him, and those claiming under him, from setting up or offering proof of title to the land recovered, as against the successful party, or his privies in estate.

CONVEYANCE AFTER RECOVERY IN EJECTMENT.—If a party, who owns an undivided one seventh in a tract of land, recovers a judgment in ejectment for such one seventh, against a tenant in common, and afterwards sells his interest in the tract, his conveyance passes to his grantee only the undivided one seventh which he owned before the commencement of the action.

WHEN EJECTMENT LIES.—Ejectment cannot be maintained against one who is not in possession of the demanded premises when the action is commenced.

FINDING INTEREST OF PLAINTIFF IN EJECTMENT.—The plaintiff in ejectment, who owns an undivided interest in the demanded premises, is entitled to recover upon a finding of the fact that he holds an interest in common with others in the premises; but it is not error for the Court to find the extent of his interest, and it is proper that it should do so.

IDEM.—When the plaintiff in ejectment, between tenants in common, has made conveyances of parcels of the demanded premises, the Court should, in finding his interest, deduct the parcels thus conveyed.

JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT.—It is error to recite in a judgment in ejectment between tenants in common, that the plaintiff has owned the premises recovered for a longer period than the proofs warrant.

IDEM.—If the proofs in ejectment show that the plaintiff was, at the commencement of the action, in possession of a portion of the demanded premises, he should not recover judgment for this portion.

FORM OF JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT.—In ejectment against a number of persons who are severally in possession of different portions of the demanded premises, when no damages or mesne profits are claimed, the recovery against each defendant should be confined to the parcel in his possession.

NOTICE OF PRIOR DEED.—When a purchase of land is negotiated and made through an agent, notice to the agent of a prior unrecorded deed, made by the grantor, is notice to the principal.

APPEAL from the District Court, Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

Francisco de Haro died intestate on or about the 1st day of January, 1849, leaving him surviving the following heirs at law, viz.:

1. Josefa de Haro, who intermarried with James G. Deniston;
2. Rosalia de Haro who intermarried with Charles Brown;
3. Prudencio de Haro, a male;
4. Carlotta de Haro, who intermarried with Isaac V. Deniston;
5. Candelaria de Haro, who intermarried with Juan Pruzzo;
6. Natividad de Haro, who intermarried with Paul Tissot;
7. Alonzo de Haro.

The Rancho Laguna de la Merced contained one half a square league of land. Natividad and Paul Tissot, her husband, on the 4th day of March, 1857, mortgaged to Ramon Briones and his wife one undivided one seventh of the rancho, and on the 28th day of October, 1857, a complaint was filed in the Twelfth District Court, in an action to foreclose the mortgage.

On the 7th day of November, 1857, judgment was rendered in the action. On the 22d day of February, 1855, John Middleton was in the possession of a portion of the land contained within the exterior boundaries of said rancho, containing six hundred and forty acres, and called the "Lake House tract," but had no title thereto; and on the same day conveyed it to Michael Reese. April 3d, 1855, said Reese conveyed the same to Charles Brown, the husband of Rosalia. Reese had no title, but Brown entered into possession of the "Lake House tract." The conveyances of this tract described it by metes and bounds. On the third day of April, the same year, Brown and Rosalia, his wife, executed to said Reese a mortgage on the "Lake House tract," in which the property was described as in said deeds, which mortgage was assigned to Joseph C.

Statement of Facts.

Palmer in trust for Middleton's wife, who brought suit in said Court to foreclose the mortgage, on the 15th day of February, 1856. On the fifteenth day of March following both defendants answered by their attorney, and judgment of foreclosure was entered May 25th, 1857. The property was sold by the Sheriff to F. M. Haight, and he received a Sheriff's deed on the 11th day of May, 1858. In the complaint and Sheriff's deed the property was described as in the mortgage. Haight, on the 29th of December, 1858, quit-claimed the same land to said Middleton, who, on the 26th day of May, 1860, conveyed to Daniel Green a portion of the same, described by metes and bounds, and Middleton and his son Samuel, on the 26th day of January, 1861, conveyed one undivided one half of the "Lake House tract" to Levi Parsons, which interest by mesne conveyances, afterwards became vested in the plaintiff Mahoney. Before the commencement of this action, plaintiff Mahoney conveyed to plaintiff Sharp an undivided interest in the rancho equal to two hundred acres. The Court found that the plaintiff, Mahoney, was the owner in fee at the commencement of the action of four hundred and thirty five hundred and sixtieths ($\frac{435}{60}$) of the rancho, and gave judgment that the plaintiffs recover possession of the same. The plaintiffs did not ask a judgment for damages or mesne profits. The defendants were separately in possession of several parcels of the rancho, but the judgment was against the defendants jointly for the interest recovered by the plaintiffs. The interest which the Court found Mahoney owned included the land which he had conveyed to Bergin and others. The defendants appealed. After the judgment was rendered in the Supreme Court, the plaintiff filed the release spoken of in the opinion.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Wilson & Crittenden, for Appellants.

Wohler was not bound to take notice of every paper which was recorded, but only of those in the chain of title down to his immediate grantor. The state of the record at the moment of the recording of his grantor's deed, determined the right in respect to himself. All that was required of him by the law, was to examine the title to that time, and when he found a good conveyance to his grantor, he was under no obligation to look further, not even as said in one of the cases, to look at the records of the next day. (2 Hilliard on Real Property, 457; State of Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296; Trull v. Bigelow, 16 Mass. 419; Hooker v. Pierce, 2 Hill, N. Y. 650.)

If this be not the law then it would follow that every purchaser is chargeable with notice of every instrument upon record, down to the time he records his own deed, if it relates to the land, though it is outside of the title and wholly unconnected with it.

Had the law even imposed on Wohler the obligation to search the records down to the day of the date, and recording of his own deed, and charged him with notice of everything then appearing of record, he would have been a purchaser in good faith.

At that time, the record, it is true, disclosed the fact that Mahoney claimed under a deed from Prudencio, dated June 14th, 1860, but it also disclosed that the deed was void as against Pichoir, whose deed from the same grantor was subsequent in date, but was first recorded.

Wohler had then a right to assume, for the law authorized him to do so, that Pichoir had not at the time of purchasing and the time of recording his deed from Prudencio any notice or knowledge of the prior deed to Mahoney, and was a purchaser in good faith, and, therefore, as against Mahoney and all other persons claiming under him, had the better title to the land. If he could not so assume and with safety purchase from Pichoir upon that assumption, but on the contrary, should be held to have been put, by the subsequent recording of the deed to Mahoney, upon inquiry as to the facts of good faith and actual notice, Pichoir would lose the benefit of that protection which the law was intended to afford him, and the whole policy of the law would be defeated.

The effect of Haight's purchase at the Sheriff's sale was to place him in the position in which he would have stood had he acquired title under a voluntary deed by Brown and wife.

And the question is, simply, what right does one acquire under a conveyance of a designated and described piece of land, parcel of a larger tract, when the conveyance is made by one only of seven, who, as tenants in common, with equal interests, are owners of the whole?

Does he take merely the undivided one seventh of the piece of land described in his deed?

The Court so decides in the present case, for by its judgment it gives to the plaintiff Mahoney the whole one seventh interest of Rosalia in the Rancho Laguna de la Merced, less the undivided one fourteenth of that interest in the "Lake House tract," and it assigns that undivided one fourteenth only to the defendant Middleton.

Or does he take the land conveyed to him subject to the contingency of its being afterwards, upon partition, assigned to him as the share of his grantor; and with the right, until partition, to the use and possession of the land conveyed to him, as a co-tenant with the other tenants in common of his grantor?

We submit that this latter is the correct statement of the nature and quality of the right acquired by such a purchaser. (Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 368-371; Gates v. Salmon, 35 Cal. 578.) And if so, the Court erred in its conclusion upon this point.

Argument for Respondents.

However the judgment of Le Roy against Green might operate as between themselves and by way of estoppel, it certainly did not have the effect of a conveyance from Green to Le Roy; and in the present action, and as against Middleton, could not show, nor tend to show, any transfer of title from Green to Le Roy; and if it had not that effect the deed from Le Roy to Mahoney was irrelevant.

Ejectment is a possessory action, and must be brought against the occupant. It determines no rights but those of possession at the time, and it matters not who has, or claims to have, the title of the premises. If there is a tenant in possession the tenant is the proper party. (Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Fogarty v. Sparks, 22 Cal. 148; Owen v. Fowler, 24 Cal. 192; Hawkins v. Reichart, 28 Cal. 534; Dimick v. Derringer, 32 Cal. 488.)

Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 490, and Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176, only determined that a judgment was as conclusive in an action of ejectment as in any other actions, in respect to what was at issue and tried, and would be an estoppel as between the parties. But this does not touch the question of parties, nor alter the rule upon that subject. There is a manifest absurdity in maintaining an action for possession against one who is not in possession.

W. H. Patterson, for Respondents.

Section twenty-six of the Statute of Conveyances does not make the unrecorded deed void. It passed the title without record. It is void only as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded. (Jackson v. Bogott, 10 Johns. 457, 466; Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. 94; Van Rensselaar v. Clark, 17 Wend. 25; Jackson v. Post, 15 Wend. 588; Averill

v. Loucks, 6 Barb. 373; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 363; Ricks v. Reed, 19 Cal. 553; 26 Cal. 405.)

Borel, Wohler, Middleton, Higgins, Smith, and Breed, having taken their respective conveyances, after the conveyances to Mahoney were recorded, had record notice. (Jackson v. Post, 15 Wend. 588; Van Renesselear v. Clark, 17 Wend. 25; Schutt v. Large, 6 Barb. S. O. 381; Flint, administratrix, v. Arnold, 2 Metcalf, 622, 623; Strong v. Smith, 3 McLean, 362.) The judgment of Briones and Wife v. Tissot and Wife was good.

The record establishes: First, there was a complaint filed; second, that defendants voluntarily appeared and answered. (Practice Act, Secs. 523-35.) Said recital cannot be contradicted. (Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391; Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 575; Sharp v. Lumley, 34 Cal. 616; Banett v. Casney, 34 Cal. 537.)

When it was determined that ejectment involved title, and was res judicata as to something more than possession (Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal.), then the reason of the rule that it could not be maintained except as against the terre tenant ceased, and to be consistent it must be held to be maintainable against him who keeps the tenant there. The landlord is as much a wrongdoer as the tenant. Should he employ another to commit any other tort he would be liable, "and if one by his agent disseise another, he is liable to the injured party." (Gurrioch v. Stanner, April, 1869; Newell v. Woodruff, 30 Conn. 425, 433.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

Action to recover possession of Rancho Laguna de la Merced. The title was confirmed to the seven heirs of Francisco de Haro as tenants in common, and the plaintiffs and all the defendants who set up title, claim under them. It is conceded that the interests held by Josefa and Alonzo — one undivided seventh each—passed to Mahoney, and it appears that three eighths of the interest of Candelaria vested in the plaintiffs, and that the remainder of her interest vested in the defendants, or some of them.

Prudencio conveyed his interest in the rancho — one seventh — to Mahoney, June 14th, 1860, and the deed was recorded in San Francisco, July 2d, 1862, and in San Mateo, July 3d, 1862. The rancho consists of one body of land, and is situated partly in each of those counties. Prudencio also conveyed the same interest to Pichoir — under whom some of the defendants claim — June 28th, 1862, and the deed was recorded in San Francisco on the same day, and in San Mateo, July 2d, 1862. The Court found that Pichoir, before he paid any part of the purchase money, had notice in fact of the prior conveyance to Mahoney.

Carlotta conveyed her interest — one seventh — to Mahoney, March 3d, 1860, and the deed was recorded in San Mateo, April 16th, 1860, and in San Francisco, July 2d, 1862. She also conveyed the same interest to Spear, June 28th, 1862, and the deed was recorded in San Francisco on the same day, and in San Mateo, July 2d, 1862. Some of the defendants claim under this deed. The Court found that Spear, before he paid the purchase money, had notice in fact of the prior deed to Mahoney, and had also constructive notice by means of the record of a deed in San Mateo County. The question presented in regard to the conveyances of the interests of Prudencio and Carlotta, being quite similar, will be considered together.

It is admitted by the defendants' counsel, that Spear and Pichoir, in making their respective purchases and taking their conveyances, were mere trustees; that the purchases were negotiated and conveyances procured through the agency of Parsons & Thorne, and that Thorne had notice of the prior deeds to Mahoney. Notice to Thorne, it is admitted, was notice to his principals. But it is insisted by the defendants that Wohler, who claims a portion of the interests conveyed to Spear and Pichoir, is not chargeable with the notice to Thorne, because Thorne was not his agent. Spear and Pichoir conveyed to Borel, in trust for Wohler, a certain portion of those interests, by deed dated July 14th, 1863, and the deed was recorded August 7th, 1863. The Court found, as appears from the sixteenth finding, that the defendants, except one who is named, had both actual and constructive notice of the prior conveyances to Mahoney. It will be observed that the conveyances to Mahoney, were recorded both in San Mateo and San Francisco Counties, prior to the execution of the deed to Borel. As Spear and Pichoir had notice of Mahoney's deeds, they took no interest in the land under their deeds, and of course could not convey any interest to Borel, except by the aid of the Registry Act. Their conveyance to Borel, standing by itself, passed no title, and the only mode in which it could have been made effectual, was by recording it before the deeds of Mahoney were recorded. The accumulation in this Court of cases waiting decision, forbids the discussion, at any considerable length, of this interesting question, or a review of the authorities bearing upon it. Our conclusion is, that Borel having purchased from Spear and Pichoir, after the deeds of Mahoney were recorded, had constructive notice of those deeds, although the deeds to Spear and Pichoir were first recorded; that because of such notice, he is not a purchaser in good faith, and that therefore the deeds to Mahoney will take precedence over the deed to Borel. (See Flynt v. Arnold, 2 Met. 619; Jackson v. Post, 15 Wend. 588; Van Rensselaer v. Clark, 17 Wend. 25.) The question whether Wohler had actual notice of the conveyances to Mahoney, need not be discussed.

Was the judgment recovered by Briones and wife, against Natividad and Paul Tissot, her husband, void? It is therein recited that "this cause having been brought on to be heard upon the complaint of the plaintiffs, and the confession and answer of the defendants under oath filed herewith, by which it appears that there was due to the plaintiffs at the date of the commencement of said suit," etc. The judgment contains no recital in respect to the issue or service of summons, nor does the roll contain an appearance, answer, or demurrer on the part of the defendants. The record being silent as to the issuing and service of process, it will be presumed that process was duly issued and served on the defendants. (Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391.) The Court having acquired jurisdiction of the defendants, as must be presumed, and there being no question as to its having had jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, the judgment is not void.

There is as little ground to question the validity of the judgment of Palmer against Rosalia and her husband, Charles Brown, as of the judgment last mentioned. There is nothing in the judgment roll tending to prove that Rosalia was not served with process, and it will be presumed, as the defendants on this point contend; that the process was duly served on her. There is no legal evidence in the record in this cause to justify the finding that she was not served. The plaintiffs, to show the want of service, rely on the failure of the judgment roll in that case to directly show the service; but that is manifestly insufficient and does not tend to sustain the finding. Were the finding sustained by the evidence, there is still enough in the case to give the Court jurisdiction of Rosalia, for the appearance of herself and husband in the action, was entered by an attorney of that Court.

The judgment in that case, ordered the Lake House tract to be sold, in satisfaction of the amount found due on the mortgage. The tract was accordingly sold, and was conveyed by the Sheriff to the purchaser. What interest passed to the purchaser by that conveyance? Throwing out of consideration any possession which Brown may have had—as it is of no moment in the controversy between the holders of the title—it is apparent that the only title which passed, was the undivided seventh of the interest in that tract, which was held by Rosalia. The purchaser took her position in respect to the tract, and until a partition shall be made, he and his assigns will hold the same right to the possession, that she would have enjoyed, had her interest therein not been sold. Whether there are any legal or equitable reasons, why Rosalia's interest in the whole rancho, shall be set off so as to include the Lake House tract, is a question that will not arise except on proceedings for partition; but in the meantime, the purchaser at the foreclosure sale and his assigns, succeeded only to such right of possession as she held at the time of the sale. It appears from the evidence, that Rosalia's interest in all the rancho, except the Lake House tract, vested in Mahoney, and that one half of her interest in the latter tract which passed at the foreclosure sale also vested in Mahoney, and the other half vested in Middleton. The decision of the Court in respect to that interest, was in accordance with the evidence, and is correct.

There is a further question in respect to the Lake House tract, arising upon this state of fact. While Middleton was the owner of the interest which passed at the foreclosure sale, he conveyed a specific parcel of the land to Daniel Green. Subsequently Le Roy, claiming one undivided seventh of the entire rancho, commenced an action of ejectment against Green and others, to recover the possession of the rancho. It was adjudged in the action, that he was the owner of one seventh of the rancho; and he had judgment for the possession of the same against Green and other defendants. After the recovery of the judgment, Le Roy conveyed all his interest in the rancho to Mahoney. The interest which Green took under the deed, was the undivided seventh of the parcel described in the deed—that is to say, the title thereto which Rosalia held previous to the foreclosure sale. The judgment rendered against him, while he was thus the owner of the one seventh of the specific parcel described in the deed, operated by way of estoppel, so as to preclude him from setting up such title against Le Roy or his privies in estate. A judgment in ejectment, does not transfer to the successful party, the title of the adverse party, but if presented in the proper mode, whenever such adverse title is drawn in issue, it shuts out all proof of such adverse title. Its effect bears a closer resemblance to an extinguishment, than a transfer of the adverse title. The judgment awards the possession to the prevailing party, because he had title at the commencement of the action, and because the losing party had no title, or not such title as would authorize him to withhold the possession; but it neither directly nor indirectly transfers the title. The conveyance of Le Roy to Mahoney passed to the latter only such interest as Le Roy had before the commencement of that action; and Mahoney, by virtue of the privity in estate thus created, can avail himself of the judgment of Le Roy against Green, as a bar or by way of estoppel, as the case may require, whenever the title of Green is set up against him.

Borel was not shown to be in possession of any portion of the rancho. It has been held, from an early date, in this State, that ejectment cannot be maintained against a person who is not in possession. (Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; Hawkins v. Reichart, 28 Cal. 534; Dimick v. Derringer, 32 Cal. 488.) The judgment, therefore, as to him, is erroneous.

The defendants complain of the findings and judgment, because they determine the amount of interest held by the plaintiffs, and they say that this course was both unnecessary and improper. The plaintiffs would be entitled to a recovery—so far as it depended on the issue of title—upon a finding, that they held an interest in common with others in the premises. But it is not improper to find the extent of such interest. The parties may be tenants in common, and if such be the fact, they are entitled to the rents and profits in proportion to their respective interests in the premises; and in order to determine their rights in that respect, when the plaintiffs shall be admitted into possession with the defendants, it would not be improper to determine the extent of their interest. In a controversy of this character, when the Court is finding whether the plaintiff has any interest in the premises, there is no reason why the court should not find and determine the amount of such interest. But the Court in this case erred in finding the amount of Mahoney's interest, and the length of time during which the plaintiffs had held their interests. The interest of the plaintiff, Sharp—an undivided interest of two hundred acres—was derived from Mahoney, and should be deducted from the amount of interest adjudged to be held by Mahoney. Mahoney also conveyed to Thomas I. Bergin an undivided interest of twenty acres; to John B. Felton and Benjamin S. Brooks an undivided interest of eight acres; and Susan M. Green a like interest; and to Alonzo de Haro an undivided interest of seventy acres in the rancho; and those interests should be deducted from the interest found in Mahoney.

The Court recited in the judgment, that the plaintiffs had been, for over three years next prior to the commencement of the action, the owners of the respective interests therein mentioned; but it does not appear how long before the commencement of the action Sharp acquired his interest, and it is shown that three eighths of the interest of Candelaria was conveyed to Mahoney five months before the commencement of the action, and that Le Roy conveyed his interest to Mahoney six months before the commencement of the action.

The recovery included the whole rancho, but Mahoney testified that at the commencement of the action he was in possession of about three hundred acres of the rancho. He cannot maintain the action as to the portion of which he had possession; nor should there be a recovery against any of the defendants, except as to the respective parcels in their possession. The error, however, in rendering judgment against a defendant, for land not in his possession, would be immaterial, were it not for the rule permitting the plaintiff to offer the judgment in evidence, in a suit for the recovery of damages and mesne profits.

Judgment as to Boral reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

WILBUR CURTIS v. THOMAS SPRAGUE AND CHARLES E. HUSE.

STRIKING OUT PART OF ANSWER.—It is error in the Court to strike out a counter claim in an answer, without a motion being made for that purpose.

REPLY.—A replication, setting up the Statute of Limitations to a counter claim contained in an answer, does not authorize the Court to strike out the counter claim.

Argument for Appellant.

MOTION TO STRIKE OUT PLEADING.—A demurrer to a replication, filed to a counter claim set up in an answer, is not equivalent to a motion to strike out the counter claim.

COUNTER CLAIM.—Query: In an action against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, brought by one to whom it was indorsed after it fell due, must not a counter claim set up in the answer be confined to some matter connected with the note, such as payment, want or failure of consideration, etc., or can a collateral demand be set up as such counter claim?

IDEM.—Query: In such action, if the counter claim exceeds the amount due on the note, can judgment be rendered against the plaintiff for the balance?

IDEM.—Query: In an action against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, must not a counter claim, to be available at law, be one existing in favor of the defendants jointly?

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, County of Santa Barbara.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Barnes & Bowie, for Appellant.

The action of the Court in these proceedings was erroneous. Courts are not counsel and Court, making motions and orders in civil cases ex suo motu. They are not intrusted with any duty other than that of administering the law between parties who invoke it. If the plaintiff had found himself aggrieved by denials that were bad, or by sham defenses, he should have tested them by moving for judgment upon the pleadings, or to strike out the answers as sham; failing to do so, the defendants' right to stand upon their pleadings was complete. While it is the duty of Courts to grant meritorious motions, properly made, we conceive it to be error in any Court to administer what it may consider justice without itself pursuing and requiring parties to pursue the ancient and customary paths of practice.

Albert Packard, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Curtis commenced this action against Sprague, the maker, and Huse, the indorser of a negotiable promissory note, made to one Thomas Dennis, as payee, and assigned by him to the plaintiff after it had become long overdue. The note fell due in November, 1865, and was assigned to Curtis in May, 1869, and this action was brought shortly thereafter. The complaint, after setting out the note sued upon, admitted that certain payments had been made thereon, and concluded with a prayer for judgment for the balance.

The defendants answered, and set up a payment of two hundred dollars, which, they alleged, had been in fact made on the note, but was not credited in the complaint. As it is conceded, however, that in the judgment, which the Court subsequently rendered in favor of the plaintiff, this two hundred dollars credit was allowed in favor of the defendants, no further notice of this part of the answer need be taken.

The defendants further relied upon a counter claim, which was alleged to have existed at the time of the assignment, in favor of the defendant Huse, and against Dennis, the assignor of the note sued on. This counter claim arose on an instrument in writing, signed by Dennis, and of which the following is a copy:

“SANTA BARBARA, December 15, 1862.

“I, Thomas Dennis, defendant in the suit of Lewis T. Barton v. Thomas Dennis, Sheriff of Santa Barbara County, hereby appoint Charles E. Huse as my attorney to obtain a dissolution of the injunction in said action; and I hereby agree to pay him one thousand dollars as a fee for obtaining the dissolution of said injunction. Witness my hand and seal the day and year above written.

It was averred in the answer that no part of the fee had been paid. To so much of the answer as set up the counter claim the plaintiff demurred, "for insufficiency in not stating facts sufficient to constitute a counter claim." This demurrer was overruled.

The plaintiff, therefore, filed a replication to the counter claim contained in the answer, in which he set up the Statute of Limitations, that Dennis "never signed the article of agreement set forth in the answer for the purposes as set forth in said counter claim," and that Huse himself was interested in the dissolution of the injunction named in the obligation signed by Dennis, and that his services in procuring the dissolution were in his own behalf, and for his own benefit. On motion of the defendants the replication was stricken out. At the June term of the Court, about six months thereafter, the plaintiff, by leave of the Court, and over the objection of the defendants, filed an amended replication. This was followed at the same term by a motion of the defendants to strike out the "amended replication," which motion was denied. This amended replication again set up the Statute of Limitations against the counter claim, and averred, in general terms, that the instrument on which the counter claim was founded was obtained by Huse from Dennis by misrepresentation of its contents; that no services were performed by Huse on behalf of Dennis in the dissolution of the injunction, nor had Dennis any interest in getting it dissolved.

When the Court denied their motion to strike out the amended replication the defendants demurred to it, and the demurrer was overruled. Upon overruling the demurrer the Court below ordered the counter claim to be stricken from the answer, holding "that the plea of the Statute of Limitations in the amended reply was well and properly pleaded, and that the same was effective as against the counter claim set up in the answer of the defendants." The Court thereupon directed its Commissioner to compute the amount due on the note, allowing the two hundred dollars credit claimed in the answer, and subsequently rendered judgment for the balance appearing to be due.

We think the Court erred in striking out the counter claim, so called, from the answer. There was no motion before the Court to strike it out, and the demurrer to the replication was not equivalent to such a motion.

We are not to be understood as determining the sufficiency of the defense interposed in this case. Its consideration involves several important questions not argued before us—at least not on the part of the respondent.

Is the agreement of Dennis to pay Huse one thousand dollars a counter claim against Curtis within the second subdivision of section forty-six of the Practice Act? If it be really a counter claim, and had exceeded the amount due on the note in suit, could judgment be rendered against Curtis for the balance owing by Dennis, under section one hundred and seventy-six and section one hundred and ninety-nine of the Practice Act? Supposing the demand against the defendants to be joint, must not the set-off, to be available at law, under section five, be one existing in favor of the defendants jointly, as was held in Warner v. Barker, 3 Wend. 399, and Banks v. Pik., 15 Maine R. 268? Though Curtis received the note overdue, is it in his hands subject to the collateral claim here interposed, or does not the rule confine the defense to some matter connected with the note itself, such as payments, want or failure of consideration, etc., according to the doctrine of Burrough v. Moss, 10 B. & C. 558; Whitehead v. Walker, 10 Meeson & Welsby, 695; Gullett v. Hoy & Orten, 15 Mo. R. 399? These and other important questions arise in the record, but they have not been argued before us. We are not to be expected to perform the duties of counsel.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to set aside the order striking out the counter claim, and to permit the plaintiff to file a demurrer to the answer, or to such portion thereof as he may be advised.

MANDAMUS ON COUNTY TREASURER.—If, in an application for a writ of mandate, to compel a County Treasurer to pay money, such Treasurer stipulates as to the facts, without the advice of counsel, and no attorney appears for him, the Court will order the proceedings to be stayed until a copy of the record is served on the District Attorney and Chairman of the Board of Supervisors.

Haymond & Stratton, for Petitioner.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The purpose of this action is to compel the defendant, as the Treasurer of Sutter County, to pay certain warrants.

The application for the writ of mandamus is presented on a statement of facts, signed by the attorneys for the petitioner, and by the defendant in person, as the Treasurer of Sutter County. The Treasurer is not represented in this Court by an attorney; nor does it appear that in agreeing to the statement of facts, he acted under the advice of counsel. An officer, either of the State or of a county or city, having public funds or property under his control, ought not to enter into a stipulation in respect to the facts in a case, affecting such funds or property, without acting under the advice of counsel.

The money sought to be reached in this case belongs to the Swamp Land Fund of one of the districts in Sutter County; and the Supervisors of the county ought to be apprised of these proceedings, so that such action may be taken, as they may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the county, or of the Swamp Land Funds.

It is therefore ordered that the proceedings in this cause be stayed, until a copy of the record in the cause be served upon the District Attorney and the Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Sutter County; and that thereafter, upon five days' notice to them, or to the attorney for the defendant, should he appear by an attorney, the petitioner may have the cause placed on the calendar for hearing.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

R. F. Ryan, for Appellants.

H. P. Irving, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The plaintiff brought this action against the defendants, under section two hundred and fifty-four of the Practice Act, to quiet his title to certain real property, of which he was in the admitted actual possession at the time.

The cause was tried by the Court without the intervention of a jury. Findings were filed, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff. From the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, the defendants appealed.

The points relied upon for reversal are only those errors which were assigned as grounds in support of the motion for a new trial in the Court below.

The first, second, third, fifth, and sixth of these grounds are, in substance, that the defendants were in the adverse possession of the premises from 1853 until 1867 (at which time the defendants claim that the plaintiff obtained possession by collusion with a tenant of theirs). We have carefully examined the record and find a substantial conflict upon this point. For instance, the plaintiff, who was called as a witness by the defendants themselves, stated, on his cross-examination, as follows: "I bought in 1860-1861; I bought the whole plot, No. 20, from Mr. Jules Bangelli; Mr. Bangelli bought from Mr. Alstrun; I was put in entire possession of the whole property according to this plot, and this piece of land was considered a portion of it." The witness further stated that he was in possession in March

1866, when he went on a visit to the East — “in the undoubted possession of the property” — which is near three acres in extent; that he had a fence around it, and used it as a pasture lot, etc. The credibility of this witness is not for us but was for the court below to consider, and we cannot disturb the conclusions arrived at upon that matter.

The fourth ground is that the Court below excluded certain records offered by the defendants, by which it would have appeared that at the time of the commencement of this action there was already pending in the County Court of Alameda County another action, in which the defendants here and one Buchan were plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs here and one Gunter were defendants. A sufficient answer to this point is found in the fact that no such defense as that there is another action pending between the same parties, for the same cause, is pleaded. But if such a plea had been filed, the facts offered to be shown by the record from the County Court would not have supported the plea. The parties in these two suits are not the same. The plaintiff here is not the plaintiff in the County Court. The very foundation of such a defense is the maxim “Nemo debet bis vexari,” etc.; and manifestly this can have no application when the first suit is brought, not by, but against, the person who is the plaintiff in the second action.

I see no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

QUITCLAIM DEED OF SPANISH GRANT.—A quitclaim deed of a Spanish grant, executed by the grantee before he receives a patent from the United States, conveys to the purchaser the title, and the patent afterwards issues to his benefit.

APPEAL from the District Court, Third Judicial District, County of Alameda.

Action in ejectment, and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial. The Court denied the motion, and defendant appealed from the judgment and from the order of the Court denying the motion for a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

E. A. Lawrence, for Appellant.

First — Ejectment could be maintained upon strict title, as this is (the plaintiff and his grantors never having been in possession) only by the patentees Alviso and Pacheco, or by those who were their grantors subsequent to the patent, which was issued February 21st, 1866. (Emeric v. Penniman, 26 Cal. 119; Clark v. Lockwood, 21 Cal. 222; Salmon v. Simonds, 30 Cal. 306; Minturn v. Brower, 24 Cal. 744; Henderson v. Pointdexter, 12 Wheat. 543.

Second — Plaintiff was not a grantee of Alviso or Pacheco subsequent to the patent, because he acquired his title by divers mesne conveyances passing through Strode, who acquired his title by deed of October 14th, 1852.

Third — Neither did plaintiff acquire the benefit of this after-acquired title of Pacheco's by estoppel — because the deed from Pacheco to Strode of October 14th, 1852, was a quit-claim deed — it is alleged merely to convey "all his (Pacheco's) interest in said rancho." It is also alleged that he (Pacheco) "granted, bargained, and sold" all his interest to Strode; but it is not alleged that he did so by a grant, bargain, and sale deed, or by a deed with covenants.

Fourth — The character of the other mesne conveyances, except the one from Pacheco to Strode, is not set forth, and the Court will not presume that they had covenants trans-lative of the after-acquired title of the patent.

Even if the title of Pacheco acquired by the patent inured for the benefit of Strode by his deed, there is nothing to show that it inured to Strode's grantee or the plaintiff, because the character of their deeds is not set forth.

A. M. Crane, for Respondent.

The point of appellant resolves itself into the proposition that a conveyance of grant, bargain, and sale in fee simple by a Mexican grantee, made before the confirmation of the claim, does not convey the legal title. It is quite unnecessary to contend against this assumption, and it would be but a waste of time to argue that the authorities cited by appellant sustain no such proposition.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The description of the land, as contained in the complaint, findings, and judgment, is sufficiently certain to identify it, which is all that is necessary. It appears that the land in contest was granted by the Mexican Government to Pacheco and Alviso, and their title having been finally confirmed, a patent was duly issued to them in 1866. In 1852 Pacheco conveyed to Strode all his interest in the rancho, of which the land in controversy forms a part; and thereupon a deed of partition was executed between Strode and Alviso, whereby, as the Court finds, the premises in controversy were set apart to Strode, from whom the plaintiff derails title by regular mesne conveyances. The defendant shows no title, but claims: first, that by the partition deed the said premises, if they formed any part of the rancho, were set apart to Alviso, and not to Strode; and second, that, even though they were set apart to Strode, the legal title conveyed by the patent did not inure to his benefit, inasmuch as Pacheco conveyed to him only by quitclaim deed. On the first point it is sufficient to say that there is evidence to support the finding to the effect that said premises are included in the patent, and by the partition deed were set apart to Strode.

The second point is not tenable. The patent, on its face, runs to Pacheco and Alviso, their heirs and assigns; and upon well settled rules of construction their prior vendees are their assignees of the title, in a legal sense. It is clear that the patent inured to the benefit of Strode, and of the plaintiff, as his successor in interest.

IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS.—Where the defendant introduces witnesses to impeach the credibility of one of plaintiff's witnesses, it is not an abuse of discretion in the court to limit him to eight witnesses, provided the plaintiff introduces no witnesses to sustain his credibility.

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY.—Where an instruction asked has already been given substantially by the Court, it is not error to refuse it, but in a criminal case the better course is to give it.

INFERENCE OF GUILT FROM CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.—The law does not require, in order to justify the inference of legal guilt in cases of circumstantial evidence, that the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt. The true rule is, that the fact shall not only be consistent with the guilt of the accused, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion.

The defendant was convicted of the crime of an assault with intent to commit murder, and appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Whitesides & McQuaid, and Coffroth & Spaulding, for Appellant.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for the People.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The record does not show that the prosecution introduced any evidence, to sustain the witness, whose credibility was attacked by the defendant. Under those circumstances, it was not an abuse of discretion, for the Court to limit the defendant to eight witnesses, on the question of the credibility of the witness for the prosecution.

The defendant's first instruction was substantially given in the charge of the Court, and its refusal, therefore, was not erroneous. But, as has frequently been said by this Court, it is the better course for the Court in such case to give the instruction. The labor and expense of a motion for a new trial, or of an appeal, may thus be sometimes avoided.

The appellant's third point is not tenable. The instruction refused is as follows: "In order to justify the inference of legal guilt, the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt." To require the facts to be "absolutely incompatible" with the innocence of the accused, is to require proof of his guilt beyond the possibility of a doubt. The law requires that the facts shall not only be consistent with the guilt of the accused, but inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. A higher degree of certainty, in establishing the guilt of the accused, by means of circumstantial evidence, cannot be required without rendering such evidence valueless. (People v. Dick, 32 Cal. 215; People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 201.)

APPEAL from the District Court, Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

James C. Goods, District Attorney, and Daniel J. Thomas, for Appellant.

First—The Court had no jurisdiction in this proceeding to render any judgment except one of dismissal.

Second—If it had in this case power to render any judgment other than of dismissal, that power only extended to a direction to the Supervisors to act, and did not extend to an order to pay a specific sum of money. (People v. El Dorado County, 8 Cal. 61.)

Blackstone Canal Co.*, 10 Pick. 244, cited as authority by this Court in People v. Sexton, 24 Cal. 83.)

"The mandate can proceed no further than to order them [the Supervisors] to take action on the report." (People v. Lake Co., 33 Cal. 493; Hastings v. San Francisco, 18 Cal. 59; People v. Pratt, 28 Cal. 169; Flagley v. Hubbard, 22 Cal. 36.)

John K. Alexander, District Attorney, also for Appellant.

Bowie & Catlin, and R. C. Clark, for Respondent.

Whether the remedy adopted by the petitioner in this case is the proper one involves the question whether the act which he demands the Supervisors to perform is a judicial act, or whether it is merely a ministerial duty.

Mandamus may compel an inferior tribunal to perform a judicial function, but it will not guide or direct as to the manner of the performance. The resolution passed by the Board leaves nothing to be done except the mere ministerial duty of ordering the bill to be paid. (Hunt v. Supervisors of San Francisco, 28 Cal. 429; Moses on Mandamus, 103, 105, 125; People v. Supervisors of Richmond County, 20 N. Y. 253.)

In Sacramento County the functions of the writ of mandate are enlarged by the Act which tenders this writ in lieu of all other remedies.

S. W. Sanderson, also for Respondent.

The plaintiff's claim is a legal charge against the county. Mandamus is the proper and legal remedy, and the plaintiff has no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. There is no remedy against the County of Sacramento, except such as may be afforded by certiorari, mandamus, or injunction. Neither certiorari nor injunction will afford any relief. Supervisors exercise mixed functions, partly judicial, and partly ministerial. When there is nothing of a claim left, except the question whether it is a legal charge, mandamus is the remedy. (C. W. & Z. R. R. Co. v. Com. of Clinton Co., Ohio State R. 77, 105; People v. Supervisors Richmond Co., 20 N. Y. 253; Bright v. Supervisors of Chenango, 18 John. 242; People v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 659.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

It is provided by the Act of April 25th, 1863, that the Board of Supervisors of Sacramento County "shall not be sued in any action whatever," but that they may be proceeded against by certiorari, mandamus, or injunction to prevent or compel their proceedings, "if the same can legally be prevented or compelled."

Tilden presented a claim to the Board and it was disallowed. He then obtained a writ of mandamus from the Court below, commanding the Board to allow a specified portion of the claim. From this judgment the Board bring this appeal.

In disallowing the claim the Board unquestionably acted in the exercise of judicial functions, and having arrived at a determination upon the matter pending before it, it is not to be turned round to some other judgment, not its own, through the instrumentality of the writ of mandamus. Before such a writ can be properly awarded, it must be made to appear that the Board refuses to perform some designated act which the law specially enjoins upon it as a duty. The complaint here is that it refuses to allow Tilden's claim. But the answer is, that there is no duty resting on the Board to allow this particular claim, either in whole or in part; that its only duty was to act upon it as a claim, and that that duty is as fully discharged (so far as a writ of mandamus can enforce it) by a rejection as it would have been by an allowance of the claim.

Our attention has been called to the fact that at the time at which the Board rejected the claim it also adopted the following resolution:

“Resolved, Whereas, doubts exist in the minds of a majority of the Board of Supervisors of Sacramento County whether the claims against said county presented to said Board by M. C. Tilden, City Attorney, for fees of that office, are a legal charge against said county, and are desirous of having a legal decision by some Court of competent jurisdiction and authority to determine the same; and whereas, said Board and said City Attorney are desirous of testing said question in Court, with as little expense and delay as possible; with a view to that end, it is hereby admitted on the part of said county and said Board of Supervisors that the claims filed by said Tilden with the Clerk of said Board on the — day of April, 1868, marked “A” and “B,” were presented in due form; that the labor therein charged for was performed by said Tilden, while City Attorney of Sacramento City, at the dates therein set forth, and that no part of said fees have been paid by the county or otherwise, and that the above claims have been rejected and disallowed by said Board; and the District Attorney is hereby directed to enter the appearance of this Board in any action or proceeding which said Tilden may commence in any Court, not a Court of a Justice of the Peace, for the purpose of requiring said Board to allow the said claims, and defend the action of this Board therein.”

It is said that the Board thus substantially determined in favor of the claim, while formally rejecting it; that it found all the facts to be true, which are necessary to make out a valid claim in favor of Tilden, and that in this condition it had remaining no judicial discretion to reject the claim. The language of the resolution is, that certain facts are "admitted," and this seems to have been done merely with a view to making an agreed case for determination in the Courts. It looked to something in the nature of an arbitration; it was never accepted or agreed to by Tilden, and was, therefore, certainly revocable by the Board. Acting under its own sense of duty to the public, it afterwards instructed the District Attorney to resist the claim of Tilden upon all possible grounds. This, I think, it had a right to do, if it saw proper.

There is nothing in the proposition that the writ of mandamus, when directed to the Board of Supervisors of the County of Sacramento, should have a more enlarged or more efficacious operation than is to be accorded to it under general rules when issued against other Boards of County Supervisors. It is true that the statute which has been cited denies any other remedy than this one to the petitioner; and so far it may be said to show that he has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law; but there is nothing in the statute which, even in such a case, undertakes to change the essential nature or office of the writ itself, as not being designed to control the judicial discretion of the Board, or to compel it to any particular determination.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the writ.

Mr. Chief Justice RHODES delivered the following concurring opinion, Mr. Justice TEMPLE concurring:

When a claim against a county is presented to the Board of Supervisors, there are only four courses which may be adopted. The Board may allow the claim in whole or in part; it may reject it — that is to say, refuse to allow any portion of it; or it may refuse to take cognizance of the claim; or, after having taken jurisdiction of the claim, it may, for some cause, refuse to proceed; and in that case, if the right of the claimant is clear, the Board may be compelled to proceed to a determination of the matter. In the first and second cases the Board takes jurisdiction of and passes on the claim; and in the third case it refuses to entertain jurisdiction of or consider the claim. I cannot conceive of any other mode in which the Board can act. The order in this case is a rejection of the claim, as I read it. The claim certainly was not allowed, nor can it be claimed that the Board refused to consider it, for it was finally disposed of, so far as the Board was concerned. The validity or invalidity of the grounds or reasons on which the Board acted, afford no test of the question as to whether the Board did disallow and reject the claim. If a claim is disallowed because the evidence is deemed insufficient, or because, in the opinion of the Board, it is not a county charge, or because the Board doubts whether it is a county charge, the final determination is the same—that is to say, the claim is rejected. When certain facts are presented to a Court or a Board, exercising judicial functions, there is only one judgment or determination that can legally be rendered or made; and if the judgment or order which is rendered or made is not such as the law demanded, it is merely erroneous—assuming that the Court or Board had acquired jurisdiction, and had competent authority to render or make the judgment or order—but because the facts were misapprehended, or the law misunderstood or doubted, it cannot be said that the matter presented for determination has not been decided. It will not be contended that the judgment of a Court rendered pro forma, because of doubts entertained as to the law applicable to the case, and in order that the case may be heard by an appellate Court, is not a judgment. In this case the Board doubted whether the petitioner's claim was legally chargeable against the county; and in order that the question might be determined by the proper Court, the Board, doubtless misapprehending the effect of the special statute which had been tinkered up for Sacramento County, providing what actions may be maintained against the county, rejected the claim. However desirable it may be that the question as to the legality of the claim should be answered, the law of mandamus must not be tortured for the purpose of eliciting the answer.

It is contended that, as the performance of the services mentioned in the petitioner's account was sufficiently proven, there was no duty to be performed by the Board except that of the allowance of the account, and that such duty is merely ministerial. I am not aware of any authority which sustains that position; and it appears to me to be altogether indefensible on principle. The Board, in passing on a claim, acts judicially. The allowance or rejection of the claim is the determination of the matter submitted to the Board; and it occupies the same relation to the claim, that a judgment does to an action. If, in an action where the facts are admitted, or otherwise satisfactorily proven, the rendering of judgment is a ministerial act, then the order of the Board allowing or rejecting a claim, upon similar proof of the facts, is also a ministerial act; but if the former is necessarily a judicial act, so is the latter. Mandamus does not lie to a Board to compel it to enter a particular order of a judicial character; and clearly not to enter an order reversing its former order.

I concur with Mr. Justice WALLACE, and think the writ should be dismissed.

CROCKETT, J., dissenting:

The plaintiff was the City Attorney of the City of Sacramento, and, in his official capacity, conducted certain prosecutions for violations of the laws of the State and other prosecutions for violations of city ordinances. Claiming that he was entitled to be paid for these services by the county of Sacramento, under the statutes then in force, he made out his account against the county and presented the same to the Board of Supervisors for allowance. In the account he claimed to be entitled to the sum of four hundred and sixty-one dollars, for prosecutions for violations of the laws of the State, and the remainder of the account was for prosecutions for the violation of city ordinances. The Board of Supervisors, on examining the account, was satisfied that the plaintiff had rendered the services as charged, and that the items of the account were just, but doubted whether, under the law, the account was a county charge; and because of this doubt, and for that reason only, as appears by the record of their proceedings, refused to allow the account. The plaintiff applied to the District Court for a mandamus, to compel the Supervisors to audit and allow the account. On the hearing, the District Court ordered a mandamus to issue, requiring the Supervisors to audit and allow so much of the account as was for services rendered in conducting prosecutions for violations of State laws, but denied the mandamus as to the remainder of the account. Neither the plaintiff nor the District Attorney was satisfied with this decision, the former claiming that a mandamus should have issued directing the whole account to be allowed, whilst the District Attorney insists: First—That no part of the account should have been allowed. Second—That if the account was a county charge and justly due, mandamus was not the proper remedy. We shall first consider the latter point. On the former hearing of this cause we held that this was not a proper case for mandamus; that it was the province of the Board of Supervisors to audit and allow, or reject the plaintiff's claim; and that having acted in the premises by rejecting the claim, they could not be compelled by the writ of mandamus to reverse their decision, and allow the demand, even though we should be satisfied that the claim was improperly rejected. On further reflection, I am convinced we fell into an error in this respect. Whilst it is perfectly well settled, by an almost unbroken line of decisions, that where an inferior tribunal is authorized to exercise its discretion, whether or not it will perform a given act, or as to the mode or manner of its performance, it cannot be controlled in the exercise of this discretion by means of the writ of mandamus, nevertheless, if it refuses to act at all, and to exercise the discretion with which it is clothed, and if there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, it may be set in motion by this writ, and compelled to act. But there is a large class of cases in which an inferior tribunal acts in a twofold capacity; in one of which it is required to exercise a discretion on a given subject, and after having exercised it, will still have to perform a merely ministerial duty in carrying its decision into effect. In so far as the exercise of its discretion is concerned, it cannot be controlled by mandamus; but after having exercised its discretion in the given case, if there results therefrom a merely ministerial duty, involving the exercise of no discretion, it may be compelled by mandamus to perform it, if the law has provided no other speedy, plain, adequate remedy for such a case. In the case supposed, all that required the exercise of discretion has been performed, and nothing remains to be done except a mere ministerial act; and if the law has provided no other method to compel the performance of this act, the party aggrieved would be wholly without redress unless he could invoke the aid of this writ, the peculiar province of which is to enforce the performance of purely ministerial duties. These principles have been repeatedly recognized in this and other courts. (C. W. & Z. R. R. Co. v. Commissioners of Clinton County, O. St. R. 77, 105; People v. Supervisors of Richmond County, 20 N. Y. 253; Bright v. Supervisors of Oneida, 19 Johns. 259; 3 Mich. 475; People v. Mead, 24 N. Y. 121; Fowler v. Pierce, 2 Cal. 165; McDougall v. Bell, 4 Cal. 177; Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 286; People v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 659; McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; Frank v. City and County of San Francisco, 21 Cal. 668; Ex parte Spring Valley Water Works, 17 Cal. 132; Perry v. Washburne, 20 Cal. 318; People v. Supervisors etc., 28 Cal. 429; Anderson v. Pennie, 31 Cal. 265.)

In this case the only discretion to be exercised by the Board of Supervisors was in respect to the fact whether or not the plaintiff had rendered the services which he claimed to have performed. Having ascertained this fact, as they did, to their satisfaction, all the rest was a mere matter of law. The statute fixed the compensation for such services, and all that remained for the Board of Supervisors was to determine whether the claim was a county charge to be paid out of the County Treasury. It appears the Board decided this question in the negative, and on that ground only refused to allow the claim. If they were mistaken in their view of the law, it was their duty to direct their Clerk to enter an order allowing the claim, so that it might be paid by the County Treasurer. If the performance of mere ministerial duties cannot be enforced by mandamus, simply because the officer or Board charged with their performance misconstrues the law, the writ would be of but little value and would be deprived of one of its most useful functions. Upon that theory in almost every case, it would be a sufficient answer to the writ for the officer or tribunal to whom it was directed to say that, in his opinion, the law did not authorize or require him to perform the given act; that they had the right to decide the law of the case, and having decided it, their action could not be reviewed by the writ of mandamus. This would be to destroy the efficacy of the writ in a large class of cases which most demand its aid. Nor is there in this case any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, inasmuch as there is no appeal from the order of the Supervisors; and even if a suit in the ordinary form against the county should be deemed a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, the statute denies this form of redress. (Stats. 1863, p. 503, sec. 1.)

I deem it unnecessary, in this opinion, to enter into a critical analysis of the several statutes defining the duties and fixing the compensation of the City Attorney of the City of Sacramento. It will suffice to say on this point that after a careful examination of these statutes, I am satisfied the county is responsible for the compensation of the City Attorney, for services rendered in prosecutions for violations of the laws of the State; but is not liable for services rendered in prosecutions for violations of city ordinances.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the order of the District Court directing a mandamus to issue to compel payment of the first, and denying it as to the latter class of services, was correct, and ought to be affirmed.

JUDGMENT — MARRIED WOMAN.— A judgment against a married woman upon a contract, made by her during the marriage, is valid until reversed, and cannot be impeached in a collateral action on the ground of her coverture.

MARRIED WOMAN — HOMESTEAD.— A declaration of homestead made by a married woman, under the Homestead Act of 1860, is valid, notwithstanding her husband never resided or made his home on such homestead, and never executed or acknowledged the homestead claim made by her, and in the absence of any showing as to the causes of his absence from such homestead, or that he had a home or fixed residence elsewhere, or any family other than his wife.

Argument for Appellant.

Issue.— The question as to the validity of the wife's homestead claim, when it appears that she and her husband were living separate by agreement, or that he had abandoned her, or that he had fixed a home and residence elsewhere, not decided.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The case is stated in the opinion.

J. H. Budd and F. T. Baldwin, for Appellant.

First— The said judgment rendered in said Justice's Court was binding and conclusive as to all matters in issue in that action. (1 Green. Ev., Sec. 528; 20 Howell, 538; Harvey v. Richards, 2 Gall. 229; Hibrands v. Dullevan, 4 Halst. 183; Bridge v. Sumner, 1 Pick. 371.)

Second— In this action plaintiff had no opportunity to plead said judgment of said Justice's Court in bar as an estoppel, and said judgment is equally conclusive as if it had been so pleaded. (1 Green. Ev., Sec. 631; Howell v. Mitchell, 14 Mass. 241; Howes v. McMichael, 6 Paige, 139.)

Third— The premises sued for in this action were not a homestead at the time of said Constable's sale. To constitute a homestead there must have been residence by the head of the family on the land claimed as a homestead. The alleged husband of the said defendant in the action in said Justice's Court never lived on said premises.

The defendant in this action claims that the property sued for was the separate property of the said Isadora Rodriguez, in findings in this action mentioned. The findings show that her husband never resided on the land, and the same could not become a homestead under the laws of this State. (Cary v. Rice, 6 Cal. 625.)

The husband cannot have two homesteads of the family, and unless he resided on the premises they never could have become a homestead; otherwise married people may have two homesteads, the one claimed by the husband, the other claimed by the wife, as such. It has been held that even if the wife did not reside on the land claimed as a homestead it cannot be held as such. A Court of limited jurisdiction has a right to determine whether the facts of any particular case sustain such jurisdiction. (Crepps v. Duden et als., 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 827, and the authorities there cited.)

Fourth — The husband is the head of the family, and not the wife. (Guiod v. Guiod, 14 Cal. 506.)

Byers and Elliott, for Respondent.

A married woman cannot incur a personal liability. Under the law of this State and decisions of this court she cannot create a personal liability by contract in any form, unless in exceptional cases, as under the Sole Trader's Act, etc., which could be enforced in equity against her or her separate property. (Simpers et al. v. Sloan et al., 5 Cal. 457; Luning v. Brady et al., 10 Cal. 265; MacLay v. Love et al., 25 Cal. 367; Smith v. Greer et al., 31 Cal. 476.) Certainly no valid judgment could be obtained in a Justice's Court against a married woman, whether she plead coverture or not.

The contract being void, it is not a matter to be avoided or not at the pleasure of the feme covert; but any judgment by default would be as utterly without validity as though the coverture had been plead, proved, and judgment rendered notwithstanding. (1 Parsons on Contracts, 346, 5th ed.; 3 Parsons on Contracts, 413, 5th ed.)

The judgment of the Justice could not have been plead as an estoppel if the action had been brought by defendant against plaintiff, because the parties to the two actions are not the same, neither is the subject matter the same. (1 Greenleaf's Evidence, Sec. 528.)

The cases cited by appellant have no bearing upon the homestead law under which Isadora Rodriguez took her homestead — this law having been enacted subsequent to the decisions quoted. Under the Homestead Act of 1860 either the wife or the husband may make the declaration. It does not follow that the husband had any other homestead than that taken by his wife. Why he had never lived with his wife on the homestead does not appear, but it will hardly be contended that, should a husband desert his wife, she would not be entitled to make a homestead for the benefit of herself and those under her charge, or even for herself alone, being married and without family. The Court finds a homestead; hence the conclusion is that the Judge believed that, whereas the said Isidora claimed the niece and sister as part of her family, the niece and sister constituted a part of her family.

A purchaser at Sheriff's or Constable's sale is bound to see that there is a judgment which is not void. (Blood v. Light, October Term, 1868, of this Court; Wells v. Stout, 9 Cal. 498.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone, by the plaintiff in ejectment, from a judgment in favor of the defendant. It appears from the findings that an action was commenced in a Justice's Court against one Isidora Briones, a married woman, to recover a sum of money alleged to be due on a contract, which it now appears was made during the marriage; that the said Isidora was duly served with a summons in said cause, and filed an answer therein, setting up her coverture as a defense to the action. The cause was tried by the Justice, who rendered a judgment against her for the amount claimed to be due; on which judgment an execution was duly issued, and was levied on the land in contest as her property. The land having been sold by the Constable, under the execution, and purchased by the plaintiff in this action, and there having been no redemption, he obtained the Constable's deed therefor.

This is the plaintiff's title. It further appears from the findings that the said lot of land was the separate estate of the said Isidora prior to her marriage in 1864, and that after her marriage she actually resided on said lot with her sister and a young niece, whom she had raised, and whom she claimed to be a part of her family; that in 1866, whilst actually residing upon said lot with her sister and niece, and claiming it as her home, she filed a declaration in due form, claiming said lot as a homestead, which claim of homestead has never been abandoned. It further appears that the husband of Isidora has never at any time resided upon said lot, or made his home there, and never executed or acknowledged the homestead claim filed by her. But it does not appear why the husband did not reside with his wife on said premises, nor where he resided, nor that he in any manner dissented from her action in filing the homestead claim, or that he claimed a homestead elsewhere.

On these facts two questions are raised on this appeal, to wit: first, whether the judgment against Isidora Briones in the Justice's Court was void on account of her coverture; and second, whether her homestead claim was valid.

The judgment in the Justice's Court was clearly valid until reversed, and cannot be impeached in a collateral action on the ground alleged. The Justice had jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, and of the person of the defendant, whose coverture was made an issue in the cause. This issue was decided against her by the Justice, and, for aught that appears, may have been properly so decided on that trial for want of proof of the marriage. But however erroneous the judgment may have been, it was not void. There would be no safety in purchasing at judicial sales, under judgments rendered after due service of process on female defendants, if the title of the purchaser could be defeated by proof in a collateral action, that the defendant in the judgment was a married woman at the time of the institution of the suit, or that she was incapable in law of contracting the debt for which the judgment was rendered. The fact that the Court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, and of the person of the defendant, is sufficient to establish the validity of the judgment until reversed or set aside. (Moore v. Martin, 38 Cal. 428.)

The second point raised on the appeal presents more difficulty. Under the Homestead Act, as it originally stood, all that was necessary to create the exemption of the property from forced sale was, that the premises should be occupied by the family as a home; and under the provisions of that act it was held that a homestead claim could not be created by the residence of the husband alone, in the absence of the wife and family. (Cary v. Tice, 6 Cal. 625; Benedict v. Bunnell, 7 Cal. 245; Benson v. Aitken, 17 Cal. 163.)

But the Homestead Act was materially modified by the statute of April 28th, 1860. (Stats. 1860, p. 311.) By the provisions of that act, either the husband or wife, or other head of a family, was authorized to select and dedicate the homestead by a declaration in writing, to be executed and recorded as provided in the Act. In construing this statute we have held that an actual residence upon the land was necessary to consummate the homestead claim. (Gregg v. Bostwick, 33 Cal. 220; Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 316.)

But the question is now presented for the first time, whether the residence of the wife alone, under the circumstances stated in the findings, will be sufficient to establish the homestead claim when a proper declaration has been filed by her.

On the one side it is said that the husband is the head of the family, and that, in contemplation of law, his residence is the residence of his wife; and that if the residence of the wife alone would establish the homestead, the husband also might establish another homestead by his separate residence at another place, and thus there would be two valid homesteads, when the law authorizes but one; and that it is, therefore, plain that the homestead claim can only exist when the husband, who is the head of the family, has dedicated it as such by his actual residence on the land.

On the other hand it is said that the absence of the husband may be, and for aught that appears was, in this case, involuntary; that he may during the whole period of the marriage have been a soldier in active service at a remote point, or confined in the State Prison, or in a lunatic asylum, or voluntarily absent on a long journey, and that under such circumstances it would contravene the spirit of the Act if the wife was not allowed to establish a homestead by an actual residence on the land with other members of her family.

The point is not free from difficulty. It is clear that under the Act there cannot be two separate valid homestead claims, the one by the husband and the other by the wife, upon separate parcels of land; but in the absence of any showing as to the causes of the absence of the husband from the homestead selected by his wife, or any proof that he had a home or fixed residence elsewhere, or any other family than his wife, it appears to me to be entirely consistent with the spirit of the Homestead Act that the wife, having a family of her own, should be allowed to select and establish a homestead by her own residence upon it with her family.

This view appears to be supported by the provisions of the Act of 1860, defining what the declaration of homestead shall contain. It provides that "said declaration shall state that they, or either of them, are married, or if not married, that he or she is the head of a family; that they, or either of them, as the case may be, are at the time of making such declaration residing with their family, or with the person under their care and maintenance on the premises."

It is unnecessary to decide in this case how the validity of the wife's homestead claim would have been affected if it had appeared that she and her husband had been living apart by agreement, or that he had abandoned her, or that he had a fixed home and residence elsewhere; but, upon the facts contained in the findings in this case, I think the homestead claim of the wife was valid, and that the judgment ought to be affirmed

INSERTING NAME OF GRANTEE IN A DEED.—A deed, in due form, signed and acknowledged by the grantor, does not become his deed until the name of a grantee is inserted therein; and an agent of the grantor cannot insert the name of a grantee in the absence of a grantor, unless his authority is in writing.

DEED FRAUDULENT IN LAW.—If the grantor leave with his agent a deed, in due form, signed and acknowledged, with a blank left for the grantee, and the agent, without authority in writing and in the absence of the grantor, fill the blank with the name of a grantee and deliver it, the deed is fraudulent in law and void.

JUDGMENT ON FRAUDULENT DEED.—If a deed is fraudulent in law and void, the proper judgment is that the deed be canceled. The judgment should not direct the grantee to reconvey.

The Court below dismissed the complaint, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

defendant, because not authorized in writing so to do. (Sec. 6 of the Act concerning fraudulent conveyances and contracts, passed April 19th, 1850, p. 266; Gardner v. Gardner, 5 Cush. Rep. 583; Lloyd v. Titus, 2 Johns. Rep. 430.)

W. L. Dudley, for Respondent.

We cannot see how the sixth section of the Statute of Frauds avails the plaintiff. It has no application to this case, because the interest granted in this land was by act of plaintiff himself. We admit that there is some conflict of authorities upon the question whether a parol authority is adequate to authorize an alteration or addition to a sealed instrument; but Mr. Justice NELSON, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Drury v. Foster, 2 Wallace's Reports, 24, in speaking of authority by parol to alter or add to a sealed instrument, says: "Although it was at one time doubted whether parol authority was sufficient, etc., the better opinion at this day is that the power is sufficient." In the case of The Inhabitants of South Berwick v. Huntress et al., 53 Maine, 89, the Court held that "a party executing a deed, bond, or other instrument, and delivering the same to another as his deed, knowing that there are blanks in it to be filled, necessary to make it a perfect instrument, must be considered as agreeing that the blanks may be thus filled up after he has executed it." And in the same case the Court say: "It seems to be now well settled that where a party executes a deed, or bond, or other instrument, and delivers the same to another in an imperfect state, and gives authority to that person to fill up the blanks, and thus perfect the instrument, and he does so, its validity cannot be controverted. This authority may be by parol. It may be implied from the facts proved, when those facts fairly considered justify the inference." In this case will be found numerous authorities cited on this subject.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The plaintiff being the owner of the tracts of land described in the complaint, offered to sell the same to two certain persons, and before they had accepted the offer, he signed and acknowledged an instrument, in form a deed, sufficient to convey the lands, except that a blank was left for the insertion of the names of the proposed purchasers as the grantees. He left this instrument with Webster, and gave him verbal directions to fill the blank with the names of the proposed purchasers if they accepted the offer. During the absence of the plaintiff, Webster sold the lands to the defendant, on the same terms that the plaintiff had offered to sell them to the proposed purchasers from him, caused the name of the defendant to be inserted in the instrument above mentioned, delivered it to the defendant as the plaintiff's deed, and received and still retains the portion of purchase money which was paid in hand, and the defendant's promissory note payable to the plaintiff for the residue of the purchase money. Upon the plaintiff's return, he refused to receive from Webster the money or the note.

When that instrument was left with Webster by the plaintiff, it was not his deed, for the obvious reason that there was only one party to it. No one could convert it into his deed except the plaintiff himself, or some one by him thereto duly authorized; and as it could not become the plaintiff's deed until the name of a grantee was inserted, that act could not be performed by an agent, in the absence of the plaintiff, unless his authority was in writing. (Story on Agency, Sec. 49, and notes; Dunlap's Paley on Agency, 157, and notes.) The case comes within the sixth section of the Statute of Frauds.

The plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the findings, but not to the judgment which he prayed for in his complaint—that the defendant be ordered to reconvey the premises to the plaintiff—for the deed not being the deed of the plaintiff, the title to the premises did not pass to the defendant. But the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment ordering the deed to be canceled. It apparently conveys the title; but as to the plaintiff, it was at its inception, fraudulent in law and void, and it became and still remains a cloud upon his title.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter a judgment, ordering the deed to be delivered up and canceled.

TESTIMONY CONFINED TO ISSUES.—In reviewing a case, the appellate Court will not consider the testimony as going beyond or outside the issues made in the pleadings.

EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.—The judgment will not be reversed by the appellate Court, on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain it, if there was some evidence tending to support the conclusion arrived at by the Court below.

FACTS TENDING TO SHOW A TRUST.—In an action by the wife against the husband to obtain a divorce, and to have property which the husband has deeded to a third person, decreed to be held in trust for the husband, and adjudged to be community property, and awarded to her, the facts that such third person is a brother of the husband, that the latter held a letter of attorney from the former, who lived in the Atlantic States, that the husband managed the property as he pleased, and the brother took little or no interest in it, that the brother was a man of small means at his own home, while the property here was valuable, and that the brother was not present at the trial in which his title was involved, are some evidence tending to show that the husband is the true owner, and that the sale to the brother was fraudulent.

Argument for Appellant.

POINT NOT DECIDED.—Will the appellate Court, on an appeal from the judgment, with a statement of the evidence annexed to the judgment roll, review the testimony, for the purpose of determining whether any evidence was introduced in the Court below to sustain the allegations of the complaint on which issue is taken?

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. A. Wheaton, for Appellant.

1. All questions of pure law can properly be considered by this Court on an appeal taken from the judgment, without any motion for a new trial having been made in the lower Court.

2. A plaintiff, having the affirmative of an issue to establish, must introduce some evidence tending to prove his side of that issue, or if he fails in so doing, the defendant has a right, as a matter of law, to a decision in his favor upon the issue.

3. In all cases the question as to whether the evidence introduced tends to prove the affirmative of a contested issue, is a question of pure law, and nothing else.

The first of the foregoing propositions is established in Preston v. Walls, 25 Cal. 61, 62; Rice v. Gashire, 18 Cal. 53; Brown v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 399; Harper v. Miner, 27 Cal. 109, 110; Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 604.

The second proposition is little less than a legal axiom. The maxim is, "Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit non qui negat." (1 Greenleaf on Ev., Secs. 51, 71, 81.) Also the cases hereinafter cited where nonsuits were granted. (Prevost v. Gratz, 6 Wheat. 494; Dewey v. Gravens, 13 Cal. 49; Pratt v. Hull, 13 John. 354; Masten v. Griffing, 33 Cal. 114; Dow v. Gould & Curry S. M. Co., 31 Cal. 650.)

Argument for Respondent.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, also for Appellant.

If the plaintiff's theory be correct, the sequence she claims cannot be sustained by law. However fraudulent the transfer was as to creditors, it was good between the parties to it. (Montgomery v. Hunt, 5 Cal. 368; Thornburg v. Hand, 7 Cal. 561; Page v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 498.)

That the husband can make a conveyance of his separate estate without consideration, and which will be good against all the world except existing creditors, there can be no doubt. Upon the plaintiff's own theory of the facts in this case, had the property in dispute been the separate property of George Brown, the conveyances to this appellant would have been entirely valid against the plaintiff. She claims, however, that the property was the common property of herself and George Brown, and not his separate property. In that case even an undivided one half of the property belonged to George Brown, which he could convey as he saw fit; and as to this half, the conveyances were valid and binding, and an undivided half of the property awarded belonged to this appellant clear from any claims of plaintiff.

R. W. Hunt and John L. Love, for Respondent.

This Court will not review the facts of a case on an appeal from the judgment. (Griswold v. Sharp, 2 Cal. 17; Brown v. Graves, 2 Cal. 118; Ingraham v. Gildermeister, 2 Cal. 483; Covillaud v. Tanner, 7 Cal. 38; Brown v. Tolles, 7 Cal. 399; Garwood v. Simpson, 8 Cal. 101; Rhine v. Bogardus, 18 Cal. 73; Liening v. Gould, 13 Cal. 598; McCartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 184; Gagliardo v. Hoberlin, 18 Cal. 394; Allen v. Fennon, 27 Cal. 68.)

As an abstract proposition of law, that a husband can convey away, without consideration, the common property of himself and wife, in anticipation of a divorce suit, and with the intent to defraud or deprive his wife of her interest therein or to defeat the judgment of the Court awarding more than half of the common property to the wife, the assertion of counsel that it is good as to one half, is not correct. The conveyance being without consideration, the equitable title was in the husband still, and the Court could control it in making its award. The fee remains in the husband. The naked legal title goes to the grantee in the deed. His interest is nihil. What he never had he can't be deprived of. (Frakes v. Brown, 11 Blackford, 295.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The plaintiff having brought an action against her then husband, one George Brown, obtained a decree of divorce from him upon the ground of extreme cruelty. He seems content with the decree, and does not appeal. The action, however, was not limited to the matter of divorce merely; it involved the alleged common property of the spouses, claimed to be of the value of fifty thousand dollars, consisting, in part, of several lots in San Francisco; and the complaint averred that this property was nominally held by Benjamin X. Brown, a brother of George Brown (who was, therefore, made a defendant, and is the sole appellant here), in trust for George, who is alleged to be the true owner, etc.

A jury trial was first had, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, George; and the verdict was that the latter was guilty of the extreme cruelty charged in the complaint.

The case was then referred to a Commissioner, to take and report to the Court the testimony concerning the alleged common property. Upon the coming in of the report, the Court adjudged that three several lots in the City of San Francisco, appearing in the name of the appellant, Benjamin, were, in fact, property belonging to the community about to be dissolved. It awarded the whole of the property to the plaintiff, and directed the defendant, Benjamin, to convey it to her for her own use and benefit. It is this portion only of the decree which is brought in question by the appeal.

The issue made by the pleadings, between the plaintiff upon the one part and the appellant upon the other, concerned the ownership of this real property. The plaintiff, in the Court below, claimed that it belonged altogether to the marital community, of which she was a member; the appellant, on the other hand, asserted that neither the community nor either of its members had any interest in it whatever, but that it was wholly his own. I do not propose, therefore, to consider the argument now made here, and which suggests, for the first time, that, after all, the community may have owned one undivided half and the appellant the other undivided half of the premises in controversy. The pleadings exclude that question, and the testimony cannot, of course, be considered as going beyond or without the issues presented by the pleadings. This would be so, even if a motion for a new trial had been denied; but no motion for a new trial was made in the Court below. The appeal is brought only upon the judgment roll, to which is annexed a statement on appeal, which, in upwards of two hundred folios, presents in extenso the evidence taken before the referee, by question and answer, but not a single exception or even an objection appears. The point now made upon the record is that there was no evidence tending to support the findings and decree of the Court below. It is conceded by the counsel for the appellant that this Court cannot review the evidence except a motion for a new trial be first made in the Court below; yet it is claimed that a statement on appeal may be made for the purpose of showing that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's allegations were fully denied by the answer, there was no evidence whatever adduced in support of the complaint, and therefore it was error, in point of law, to have rendered judgment for her. It is likened, in argument, to a case in which A. sues B. in an action of assumpsit; the latter answers, traversing every allegation of the complaint. In this condition of the pleadings a trial is had, in which the plaintiff offers no evidence whatever to sustain the allegations of his complaint, but, nevertheless, recovers judgment. It is said that in such a case a motion for a new trial is not necessary, but that a statement may properly be made and annexed to the judgment roll, by which this obvious error may be made to appear. This may be so, but it is not necessary now to determine the supposed case. In the case actually here there are more than sixty closely printed pages of evidence, given on the hearing below, and considered by the Court without objection. I have looked into it somewhat, enough to see that it is not true that "no evidence whatever was adduced in support of the complaint." The ultimate fact sought to be established by the plaintiff, and which she did succeed in proving to the satisfaction of the Court below, was, that the appellant was a mere stakeholder for his brother George. The fact that these two are brothers; that George lived in this State, and held a letter of attorney from the appellant, who lived in one of the Atlantic States; that under this power of attorney George managed the property here as he pleased; that the appellant seemed to take little or no interest in how it was managed; that, though a man of small means at his own home, he paid little or no personal attention to this comparatively valuable estate; that he was not even present at the trial in which his alleged title was involved; these, and a variety of other cognate facts that might be pointed out in the record, though each of itself not sufficient to prove that George was the true owner and the appellant only his trustee, yet, when taken together, show that there was some evidence tending to support the conclusion arrived at by the Court below.

EDWIN TOMLINSON v. ALONZO MONROE.

AMBIGUOUS COMPLAINT.—A complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain, which avers that the plaintiff delivered a horse to the defendant of the value of three hundred dollars, on an agreement that the latter would sell him and account for the proceeds; and that the defendant accepted the horse at the price of three hundred dollars, and promised to sell him at that price and account for the proceeds, and that the defendant sold the horse without stating at what price.

IDEM.—Such a complaint is founded on contract and not upon tort.

PROOF OF ALLEGATION WHEN DENIED.—If the answer denies the contract as alleged in the complaint, the plaintiff must prove it substantially as alleged.

VARIANCE BETWEEN ALLEGATION AND PROOF.—A material variance between the contract as alleged and proved, is a ground of nonsuit, unless the plaintiff obtains leave to amend his complaint, so as to make it conform to the proofs.

IDEM.—If the complaint alleges that the defendant accepted a horse upon an agreement to sell him for a price not less than three hundred dollars, testimony that the horse was left with the defendant with authority to sell him at not less than three hundred dollars is no proof that the defendant bound himself to sell at not less than three hundred dollars, and there is a variance.

IDEM.—If the complaint avers that the defendant accepted a horse with an agreement to sell him and account for the proceeds, proof that the price of sale was limited to three hundred dollars is also a variance.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District, County of Humboldt.

The complaint averred that the horse was delivered to the defendant at Eureka, Humboldt County, California, and that the defendant proceeded to the City of Austin, State of Nevada, and there sold the horse.

The proofs of the plaintiff showed that the horse was left at a livery stable in Eureka, Humboldt County, in which Fenton Tomlinson, a brother of the plaintiff, owned, in partnership with the defendant.

When the plaintiff rested, the defendant's attorney moved for a nonsuit, because Fenton Tomlinson was jointly liable with the defendant.

The Court granted a nonsuit, and the plaintiff appealed.

L. M. Buck, and A. G. Stafford, for Appellant, argued that the action was for a tort, and that, in actions for a wrong, all the parties might be sued jointly, or either might be sued severally, and that as the defendant Monroe had not in his answer pleaded the nonjoinder of Fenton Tomlinson, the question could not be raised on motion for a nonsuit.

H. W. Havens, and Elisha Cook, for Respondent, argued, that as the complaint alleged that the defendant sold the horse in pursuance of an agreement, the action did not sound in tort; that the proof did not sustain the allegations of the complaint, and that the nonsuit was properly granted—it mattered not what reason the Court assigned for granting it.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

If the complaint in this action had been demurred to as ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain, the demurrer ought to have been sustained. It sets out with an averment that the horse in contest was of the value of three hundred dollars, and that the plaintiff delivered him to the defendant on an agreement that the latter would sell him and account to the plaintiff for the proceeds; and it avers that the defendant sold the horse in Nevada, but does not state at what price. It then alleges that the defendant accepted the horse at the agreed price of three hundred dollars, and promised to sell him at that price, and to account therefor to the plaintiff; and avers that he has failed to account for that sum, for which it prays judgment. Taking all these averments together, the only rational construction that can be given to the complaint is that it was intended to aver that the plaintiff delivered the horse to the defendant for sale at a price to be not less than three hundred dollars, and that the defendant has sold the horse and failed to account for the proceeds. But whatever the complaint may mean, it is clear that it is founded upon contract and not upon tort. The answer explicitly denies the contract; and it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove it substantially as alleged. A material variance between the contract as alleged and proved would be a ground of nonsuit, unless the plaintiff obtained leave to amend his complaint so as to make it conform to the proofs. In this case there was a fatal variance between the contract alleged and the one proved, and the plaintiff failed to ask leave to amend his complaint. The proof does not show or tend to show that the defendant accepted the horse upon an agreement to sell him for a price not less than three hundred dollars. On the contrary, the testimony of the plaintiff himself was that the horse was left with the defendant with authority to sell him at not less than three hundred dollars, and there is no proof whatever that the defendant bound himself, as averred in the complaint, to sell him for that price. On the other hand, if the complaint be construed as setting out a contract to the effect that the defendant was to sell the horse and account to the plaintiff for the proceeds, there was still a fatal variance between the complaint and the contract as proved, inasmuch as the plaintiff testifies that the price was limited at three hundred dollars, which was a material element in the contract, and was not averred in the complaint. In any view, therefore, which I have been able to take of the complaint, the proof did not sustain it, and the nonsuit was properly granted.

CHARLES SMITH v. ROBERT CUSHING ET AL.

FINDINGS OF FACTS.—Where there are findings of facts the presumption is that the Court has found all the facts in issue in favor of the party in whose favor the judgment is rendered, unless the contrary appears from the findings themselves.

FINDINGS OF FACTS AND JUDGMENT.—Whether there are findings of fact or not, and if there are findings, whether they cover all the issues or not, the appellate Court will not disturb the judgment, unless the appellant can show that the facts found, or some of them, are inconsistent with the judgment.

ABANDONMENT OF TOWN LOTS.—The fact that one who purchases town lots at auction, which were in the possession of his grantor, does not inclose, cultivate, or improve them, or put them to any actual use, does not show an abandonment of them.

ABANDONMENT.—To constitute an abandonment the premises must be left vacant without the intention of reclaiming the possession, and open for the occupation of any one who may choose to enter.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

In 1851 Alfred Green inclosed a tract of land containing one hundred and sixty acres in the City and County of San Francisco, and resided on it until 1853, when he sold it to D. C. Broderick, who kept the same inclosed with a fence, and cultivated it until 1859, when he died; and his executors continued to use and cultivate it until 1861, when they divided it into lots and blocks and sold the same at public auction. At the sale Charles Alpers bought two of the lots, and received a deed, and afterwards, in 1867, sold it to the plaintiff. After the sale at auction the exterior fences were not kept up, and streets were opened through the land, and many lots were built on and used as homesteads. Neither the plaintiff nor his grantor inclosed or used the lots in controversy. October 2d, 1867, the defendants entered into possession of said lots and inclosed the same. On the fourteenth day of November following this action was commenced. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Barstow, Stetson & Houghton, and W. H. Patterson, for Appellants.

The language, "except to hold the same as town or city lots," and the facts which he states in the same finding, rebut the presumption of intention, for they show an entire absence of any act throughout the period of six years, on the part of Alpers, until he made a conveyance to the plaintiff, two months before this action was brought. He was not at liberty to take six years to decide whether at the end of that time it would be to his advantage to assert a right to the property, and especially so with respect to property of this description. And the mere act of executing a conveyance at the end of that period is no evidence of previous intention. (Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 192; Davis v. Perty, 30 Cal. 630; Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. 510; Gluckauf v. Reed, 22 Cal. 468; Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 26; Kean v. Canavan, 21 Cal. 291; Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 278.)

Wilson & Crittenden, for Respondents.

The correctness of the judgment is to be tested by the facts applicable to the issues, and not merely by the facts set forth in the findings; and the Court will presume that every fact admissible under the issues was not only proved, but actually found in favor of the prevailing party.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

This is an action of ejectment. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and the cause comes before us on the judgment roll. The Court found for the plaintiff, and ordered judgment accordingly. No objection was taken to the findings that, in any respect or upon any issue, they were defective. The presumption therefore is, as has repeatedly been announced (see Henry v. Everts, 30 Cal. 425; James v. Williams, 31 Cal. 211; Sears v. Dixon, 33 Cal. 326; Emmal v. Webb, 36 Cal. 197), that the Court found all the facts in issue for the plaintiff, unless the contrary appears from the findings themselves.

When the complaint states facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a recovery, and the Court orders judgment for the plaintiff, whether any findings are filed or not, and if filed, whether or not they cover all the issues tendered in the action, the defendant cannot maintain the position that the facts, as found, do not sustain the judgment, unless he can show that such facts, or some of them, are opposed to, or inconsistent with, the judgment. This brings up the only question which is necessary to be considered on this appeal.

The defendants contend, that the findings show an abandonment of the premises, by the plaintiff, and reliance is placed upon the eighth finding, which is as follows: "That subsequently to said auction sale, neither the plaintiff, nor his grantor, had inclosed the subdivisions or lots described in the complaint as cultivated or improved, or put the same to any actual use, except to hold the same as town or city lots." The Court had already found the possession of the plaintiff's grantor, beginning in 1851, and extending to the auction sale in 1861, when the plaintiff purchased. The eighth finding does not find the ultimate fact of abandonment; nor does it find all the probative facts, necessary to constitute that ultimate fact. The probative facts there stated, were competent evidence in support of the issue of abandonment, but were not sufficient, of themselves, to sustain that issue. It is not found among those probative facts, that the plaintiff left the premises vacant without the intention of reclaiming the possession, nor that he intended to leave the premises open, for the occupation of any one who might choose to enter. The essential elements of abandonment have so frequently been mentioned by this Court, and abandonment has so often been defined, that it is unnecessary at this time to renew the discussion. There is nothing in that finding, as it now stands, which is repugnant to the judgment.

SALE ON FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE.— If the mortgagor conveys the legal title to another person, whose deed is recorded before the decree of foreclosure is entered, and this grantee is not made a party to the suit foreclosing the mortgage, the purchaser at the Sheriff's sale does not acquire the legal title.

MORTGAGE OF LAND IN POSSESSION.— If the owner of a mortgage on an undivided interest in land is also the owner of another undivided interest in the same tract of land, his entry into possession of the whole tract does not constitute him a mortgagee in possession.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

P. Dunlap, and Beatty & Denson, for Appellant.

Even if the foreclosure and sale were valid as to John S. Fowler, it did not affect the legal title of the one undivided half of the property, which was then vested in McCracken:

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

First — Because McCracken had his title before suit brought.

Second — That title was duly recorded before the records of the District Court showed any action pending in the name of Talbot H. Green v. John S. Fowler.

(See Carpentier v. Williamson, 25 Cal. 154, and the California cases therein cited; 23 Barb. 90; 6 Abb. 120; 14 How. Pr. 32; Bloodworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 255; Skinner v. Buck, 29 Cal. 253; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 609; 5 Cal. 334.)

It is not shown that McCracken was on the premises, or knew anything about Green's taking possession as the mortgagee.

A. P. Catlin, for Respondents.

The mortgagee, in possession by consent of the mortgagor, cannot be evicted until the debt is paid. (Waring v. Smyth, 2 Barb. Ch. 135; Frische v. Kramer, 16 Ohio, 125; Watson v. Spence, 20 Wend. 260; Dutton v. Warschauer, 21 Cal. 626.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This is an action of ejectment in which Davenport, as the grantee of one McCracken, seeks to recover of Turpin and others, who are tenants of one Howard, an undivided half of that lot in Sacramento which was owned in 1849 by one John S. Fowler and Samuel Brannan, and upon which Fowler then kept the City Hotel.

That Howard, the landlord of the defendants, is the owner of one undivided half of the premises is conceded. The controversy here concerns the other undivided half.

It appears that in September, 1849, Brannan leased his undivided half to Fowler, to hold until October 1, 1850, at a monthly rent of upward of two thousand dollars. To secure the payment of this rent Fowler gave Brannan a mortgage upon the other undivided half of the premises. In August, 1850, Brannan, having previously sold to Green his undivided half, assigned to him the lease thereon and the rents to grow due, and also the mortgage upon the Fowler half, made to secure the payment of those rents. On the 10th of September, 1850, Fowler conveyed his undivided half of the premises to one McCracken, under whom the plaintiff claims title. This conveyance was recorded on the fifth of the following December.

In October, 1850, an action was instituted on behalf of Green (but in the name of Brannan, and for the use of Green) to foreclose this mortgage, because of the non-payment of rent due by Fowler; but no notice of the pendency of the action was filed. In January, 1851, the complaint in the action of foreclosure was, by leave of Court, amended by striking out the name of Brannan as a plaintiff, leaving the action to proceed in the name of Green as plaintiff. Fowler was the sole defendant, and a decree having passed against him in the usual form, Green purchased at the sale; and having received a sheriff's deed, he "took possession of the whole of the said demanded premises without any opposition from the said McCracken, or those in possession" (as found by the Court below). Green subsequently conveyed to Howard, the landlord of the defendants.

Upon this statement of facts it is clear that the legal title to the Fowler half of the premises did not pass to Green by the Sheriff's deed. At the time that the action was instituted against Fowler he had already conveyed that title to McCracken, who was not made a party defendant, and whose deed had been delivered and was of record before the decree of foreclosure was entered against Fowler. It results that the legal title to this half is in the plaintiff, Davenport. This was the conclusion reached by the Court below on the trial of the cause. Judgment, however, was rendered for the defendants below, because "Green took possession of the whole of the demanded premises without any opposition from the said McCracken or those in possession," the Court being of opinion that this fact constituted Green and those claiming under him "mortgagees in possession," who cannot be evicted without payment of the mortgage debt being first made to them. When Green took possession he was, irrespective of his purchase at Sheriff's sale, a tenant in common of the premises, and as such had a right to enter upon them. McCracken, his co-tenant, therefore, could not have lawfully prevented his entry thereon, even if he had desired to do so. The mere fact of his acquiescence in the entry of Green, who owned one undivided half of the premises, is not, therefore, at all inconsistent with his own claim of title to the other undivided half. Besides, it is not found, in this connection, that McCracken was in possession when Green entered, or that the latter turned him out of possession, or that McCracken even had knowledge that Green had entered at all. The facts found by the Court in this respect go but a little way toward constituting the defendants, or those under whom they hold, "mortgagees in possession."

Judgment and order denying new trial reversed, and cause remanded.

EVIDENCE IN DIVORCE CASES.—In an action to obtain a divorce, the confessions or admissions of the defendant can be given in evidence.

IDEM.—The eighth section of the Act of 1851, concerning divorces, does not prohibit evidence of such admissions from being received in evidence. It only prohibits a divorce from being granted on admissions of the defendant without any other proofs.

PROOF OF ADULTERY.—The act of adultery, like any other fact, may be established by circumstantial proof.

Argument for Appellant.

ENTERING HOUSE OF PROSTITUTION.—The fact that a married man enters a house of prostitution in the evening and remains all night raises a strong presumption of adulterous intercourse, and casts the burden on the party who does so of showing that he is innocent.

By CROCKETT, J., TEMPLE, J., concurring:

CORROBORATING EVIDENCE IN DIVORCE SUIT.—If the wife, when plaintiff in an action for a divorce, testifies that she detected her husband in the act of adulterous intercourse, her testimony is sufficiently corroborated, under the second section of the Act concerning divorces, if it appears that the other party to such adulterous intercourse was of a doubtful character for chastity, and that the husband was in the habit of associating with women of bad character, and that this woman had been the only female inmate of his house for a long time.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, Lassen County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

H. L. Gear, and E. V. Spencer, for Appellant.

A married man going to a brothel, knowing it to be a house of that description, raises a suspicion of adultery necessary to be rebutted by the very best evidence. (Shelford on Marriage and Divorce, 410; Astley v. Astley, 1 Hagg. Ecc. R. 720; Van Epps v. Van Epps, 6 Barb. 322.)

"It is a fundamental rule," says Lord Stowell, in the great leading case of Loveden v. Loveden, upon the subject of evidence of adultery, "that it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of adultery; because, if it were otherwise, there is not one case in a hundred in which that proof would be attainable. In every case, almost, the fact is inferred from circumstances that lead to it by fair inference as a necessary conclusion; and, unless this were so held, no protection whatever could be given to marital rights. * * * The only general rule that can be laid down upon the subject is, that the circumstances must be such as would lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man to the conclusion. * * * The facts are not of a technical nature;

they are facts determinable upon common grounds of reason. Upon such subjects the rational and the legal interpretation must be the same. (Loveden v. Loveden, 4 Eng. Ecc. R. 461; Paynter on Marriage and Divorce, 187, et seq.; Jeter v. Jeter, 36 Ala. 391; State v. Potest, 8 Iredell, 23; Day v. Day, 3 Green Ch. 444.)

By definition, "to corroborate" is simply "to strengthen," "to confirm;" and any evidence, circumstantial or direct, which tends to strengthen or confirm the evidence of a witness, in respect to any material element in his or her testimony, is corroborative thereof; and where, from all the evidence taken together, there is no good reason to doubt the veracity of the witness, or the truth of his or her narrative, and such narrative is rendered probable and credible in view of other testimony, the ends of justice can require nothing further.

"The presumption that the criminal act had been committed," says the Supreme Court of Alabama, "would be strengthened by proof that the general reputation of the female was that of a woman who was not disinclined to yield to the temptations and improve the opportunities established by such evidence." (Blockman v. The State, 36 Ala. 296.)

J. Lambert, for Respondent.

The admission or confession of a party, in cases like the one at bar, must be attended with certain requisites to render it legally admissible. Such confession or admission must be "full, confidential, relevant, free from suspicion of collusion, and corroborated by circumstances." (Matchin v. Matchin, 6 Barb. 332.) Again, such admissions require: First, undoubted proof that they were made; second, that the expressions were clear and distinct; and third, that the admissions were sincere. (Bishop, Marriage and Divorce, Vol. 2, note under Sec. 242, and authorities there cited.)

"With respect to going to houses of ill-fame, the mere going there, unconnected with other circumstances, does not necessarily create an inference of guilt." (1 Adams, 411, et seq. Appeal to the Court of Arches, 1 Adams, 68, note.)

We submit that the cases cited by appellant are in strict accord with this principle, and the expression used by Lord Stowell in Loveden v. Loveden, 4 Eng. Ecc. R. 472, quoted by appellant's counsel, was used in connection with the facts and circumstances of that case, and those facts and circumstances were such as to lead the mind to the irresistible conclusion of guilt on the part of the defendant. So, too, in Astley v. Astley, 1 Hagg. Ecc. 720, and in Van Epps v. Van Epps, 6 Barb. 322. In the former of these cases the circumstances were conclusive of adultery with a prostitute, and the particeps criminis was a prostitute.

"There must be something more than opportunity. There must be some overt act, or some circumstances to show that he was disposed to avail himself of the opportunity to commit adultery."

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action by the wife for a divorce, on the ground of adultery, alleged to have been committed by the husband; and the judgment having been for the defendant, the plaintiff has appealed, assigning as error: First, the exclusion by the Court of certain declarations and admissions of the defendant, offered to be proved by the plaintiff on the trial; and second, that the judgment is not supported by the evidence.

The evidence which was excluded was of admissions of the defendant, that he had had adulterous intercourse with prostitutes. The eighth section of the Act of 1851, concerning divorces, which provides that a divorce shall not be granted on the confession or admission of the defendant, was intended to prevent collusive divorces, and requires other proof of the facts alleged, but does not prohibit such admissions from being given in evidence in connection with other proofs. Standing alone, and unsupported by other evidence, they would not be sufficient to authorize the divorce. Nevertheless, they are competent evidence, and are to be weighed in connection with the other proofs. This was the construction given to the statute in Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, and is, doubtless, the correct one. The Court, therefore, erred in excluding the evidence.

On the proofs in this cause I am at a loss to comprehend on what theory the Court could have arrived at the conclusion that the charge of adultery was not proven. It was shown by the testimony of a witness, who was neither contradicted nor impeached, that on one occasion the defendant entered a house of prostitution in Marysville, and was seen to emerge from it on the following morning. No explanation whatever was given or attempted by the defendant of the purpose of his visit to this house; and in the absence of all proof to the contrary, the natural and reasonable presumption is that he went there for the purpose indicated by the character of the house. If the object of his visit and his conduct whilst there were innocent, the onus probandi was on him to show it. The mere fact that a married man enters a house of prostitution in the evening and remains all night, raises so strong a presumption of adulterous intercourse as to require the most satisfactory evidence to rebut it. The act of adultery, like any other fact, may be established by circumstantial proof; and it would shock the moral sense of the community to hold that such proof as this, if unexplained, would not raise a strong presumption of adulterous intercourse. This was the view of Lord

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

Stowell, an eminent Judge in this class of cases. (See Loveden v. Loveden, 4 Eng. Ecc. R. 472.)

But, in addition to this proof, the plaintiff, who was examined as a witness on her own behalf, testified that on one occasion, just prior to her separation from her husband, she detected him in flagrante delictu—in the very act of adulterous intercourse—with one Mary Wall. There is no rebutting testimony whatever on this point. The said Mary Wall, though called as a witness for the defense, was not examined in respect to the adulterous act testified to by Mrs. Evans; and the defendant did not offer himself as a witness to contradict her. Her testimony on this point stands wholly uncontradicted and unimpeached. But it is said that by the second section of the Act of March 12th, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 291), it is provided that no divorce shall be granted on the testimony of either husband or wife, “unless corroborated by other evidence;” and it is claimed that, in respect to this particular transaction, Mrs. Evans was not corroborated by other evidence. The statute does not define to what extent the corroboration must go. In the very nature of the case it would be impossible to lay down any general rule as to the degree of corroboration which will be requisite. Hence the statute only requires that there shall be some corroborating evidence; and there was sufficient evidence of that character in this case to satisfy the statute. The more than doubtful character of Mary Wall for chastity, the fact that for some years she was the sole female inmate of the defendant’s house, and the proclivity of the defendant to associate with women of that class, all tend strongly to fortify the testimony of Mrs. Evans in respect to this particular transaction. But without attempting a further analysis of the testimony, it will suffice to say, on this point, that if the act of adultery was not sufficiently proved in this case it will be in vain for injured wives to appeal to the Courts for a redress of this class of grievances.

Nor did the evidence establish that these offenses of the defendant had been condoned by the plaintiff after she was aware of their existence.

LOUIS SEIGEL v. FRANCIS F. EISEN AND GEORGE EISEN, DOING BUSINESS UNDER FIRM NAME OF "EISEN BROTHERS."

NEGLECT, CONTRIBUTING TO INJURY.—The fact that plaintiff was standing on the rear platform of a street car, with his hand on the railing, when his hand was injured by defendant's dray, as it passed the rear of the car, is not, as a matter of law, such negligence as contributes to the injury.

QUESTION FOR THE JURY.—The question whether the collision by which the injury was caused could have been avoided by proper care, is question of fact for the jury.

COLLISION CAUSED BY NEGLIGENCE.—In an action to recover damages caused by defendant's dray running against a street car, the fact that the collision would not have occurred except for the slipping of the wheels of the dray on the iron track does not conclusively repel the imputation of negligence.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Argument for Respondent.

Action brought to recover damages for injury to the person of plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the agent of defendants, while engaged in defendants' business, by carelessly and negligently driving defendants' dray against the person of the plaintiff, who at that time was standing on the platform of a street car, as a passenger. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial, the Court denied the motion, and defendants appealed from the judgment and from the order of the Court denying the motion for a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Henry E. Highton, for Appellants.

The complaint itself, and the evidence on the part of the respondent, show that the respondent's negligence caused, or at least contributed to the injury complained of, and the allegation of negligence upon the part of the servant of appellants was not only unsustained by testimony, but was completely disproved when the case for respondent was closed. The motion for a nonsuit, therefore, should have been granted. (Kelly v. Cunningham, 1 Cal. 366, 367; Innis v. The Steamer Senator, 1 Cal. 460, 461; Richmond v. Sac. Valley R. R. Co., 18 Cal. 353; Richardson v. Kier, 34 Cal. 75; Gray v. White, 34 Cal. 163, 164.)

James Nichols, for Respondent.

The defendants are liable in law for injuries sustained by the negligence of their servant. Thus, if a servant, in the course of his master's business, negligently drive his cart against the carriage of another person, by which he is injured in his person or his property, the master is liable. A very slight degree of negligence is sufficient. (Cowen's Treatise, 4th ed., 1861, Secs. 383-486.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The Court cannot pronounce, as matter of law, that the conduct of the plaintiff, in standing on the rear platform of the street car and steadying himself by holding the rail of the platform, was contributory negligence—that it contributed proximately to the injury inflicted on his hand by the wheel of the defendants' dray, which was passing along the rear of the car.

The question whether the defendants' drayman could, by proper care, have avoided the collision between the dray and car, is a question of fact for the jury. His testimony that the collision would not have occurred, except for the slipping of the wheels of the dray on the track, does not conclusively repel the imputation of negligence. The railroad track was higher than the street, and in crossing the track in the manner he did the wheels of his dray would almost necessarily slip on the track; and if the jury believed from the evidence, that he knew or could readily have seen the condition of the track, and that he did not take proper precaution in crossing the track with his dray, they were justified in finding the negligence imputed to him.

We see no substantial error in the charge to the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

EXPRESS WARRANTY OF TITLE TO CHATTELS.—There is no breach of an express warranty of title to chattels sold until the vendee's possession is disturbed by the true owner.

them to the purchaser, nothing being said as to the title, the law implies that he warrants the title to the property sold.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.—The Statute of Limitations, upon an implied warranty of title to chattels sold by one in possession, does not commence running until the vendee is disturbed in his possession by the true owner.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

W. L. Dudley, for the Appellant, argued that under the fourth subdivision of section seventeen of the Act concerning limitations, which provides that actions shall be commenced within two years "upon a contract, obligation, or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing," the Statute of Limitations commenced to run from the date of the sale and delivery of the chattel; and cited Chitty on Cont. 10th Am. ed. 920, 921; Howard v. Young, 5 B. & C. 259; Bishop v. Little, 3 Me. 371; Angell on Limitations, 5th ed. 191, 192; Wilcox v. Plummer's Exr., 4 Pet. U. S. 172; Hilliard on Sales, 2d ed. 295.

J. H. Budd, and Barna McKinne, for Respondent.

In an action of breach of warranty, express or implied, in the sale of personal property, the Statute of Limitations begins to run against the plaintiff in the action from the time of the recovery of the property in an action against him by the real owner. (Long v. Hickingbottom, 28 Miss. Reps. 778, 789; Case v. Hall and Van Elken, 24 Wend. 103; Vibbard and Abbott v. Johnson, 19 John. 77; 1 John. 274, 517; Ang. Lims. 123, Note 1; id. 115, 116, 117; 2 Kent, 621, 632, *478, 11th Am. ed.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The defendant, a dealer in musical instruments, sold and delivered to the plaintiff a pianoforte, nothing being said at the time concerning the title to the chattel. This was in February, 1867. In August, 1869, certain persons, claiming and ultimately showing themselves to be the owners of the chattel, commenced an action against Gross for its recovery. The latter thereupon gave notice to his vendor, the defendant, of the bringing of the action. In September following judgment passed against Gross. In October the pianoforte was taken from his possession, and in November, 1869, he brought the present action against Kierski for breach of the warranty of title to the chattel. The Court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is brought.

The vendor of goods and chattels in possession is held, by implication of law, to warrant the title. This rule was recognized by this Court in the case of Miller v. Van Tassel, 24 Cal. 458, and may be said to have become firmly ingrafted in the jurisprudence of this country, whatever may be the doubts at present surrounding it in England, as indicated in the recent cases of Morley v. Attenborough, 3 Welsby, Hurlstone & Gordon Exch. R. 507, and Sims v. Marryat, 17 Q. B. 290, where it was said by Lord CAMPBELL, C. J., that "on that point the law is not in a satisfactory state."

In the case at bar this general rule is not questioned by the defendant, but it is claimed that the action here was not brought within two years next after the breach of the warranty, and is therefore barred by the Statute of Limitations, which was pleaded below, and is insisted upon in this Court; and this presents the only question to be determined.

The statute undoubtedly commenced to run from the earliest time at which the plaintiff might have sued. This would, of course, be that period at which the breach must be considered to have happened. And this is the precise question upon which the parties are at issue here—the defendant claiming that his warranty was broken in February, 1867, when he sold and delivered the chattel, and the plaintiff insisting that the breach did not occur until October, 1869, when the property was taken by the true owner.

In an action brought against the vendor of chattels upon an express warranty of title, the authorities are believed to be uniform upon the point that there is no breach in contemplation of law until the vendee's possession of the goods is in some way disturbed, by reason of the title of the true owner.

No substantial difference in this respect is perceived between an express warranty of title made by a vendor upon sale of chattels out of possession and the warranty of title implied by law upon a sale of goods in possession. The fact of the goods being out of the possession of the vendor may well be considered to put the vendee upon his guard, and it is his own folly if, under such circumstances, he will not protect himself by exacting an express agreement to warrant the title. The doctrine of caveat emptor would apply to such a case.

But when the goods are at the time in the possession of the vendor, who deals with them as owner, and under such circumstances sells and delivers them to the purchaser, the law will imply against the vendor that he warrants the title to the property sold. This implication is indulged for the protection of the purchaser against what would otherwise be the fraud of the vendor, practiced upon him when he is himself not chargeable with negligence; for it is unreasonable to exact of the purchaser of goods that he is in every case to institute an inquiry into the title of his merchant, upon pain of losing both the goods and their price. The purpose of the law in implying the warranty is the protection of the purchaser; it determines that the vendor did warrant the title to the goods, because it considers that, under the circumstances, he ought to have done so. It declares that his silence shall be taken to be a warranty of the soundness of his title. The sale and delivery of the goods in possession, where nothing is said about the title, is, therefore, precisely equivalent to an express warranty of title, and, the facts being ascertained, the rights and liabilities of the parties are exactly the same.

It is true that the Court of Appeals of Kentucky hold that there is a distinction between an express warranty of title to chattels and the warranty of title implied by law. The express warranty is likened to a covenant to warrant and defend the title, when inserted in a deed of conveyance of lands, and is, therefore, said to be unbroken until an eviction by the true owner, under paramount title, has taken place. The implied warranty is, however, compared to a covenant of seisin, which is said to be broken, if at all, at the instant that it is entered into. As a consequence, it is the settled rule in that State that the Statute of Limitations upon breach of an express warranty of title to personal property commences to run from the time when the vendee is disturbed; while in case of implied warranty it is set in motion instantly upon the sale and delivery of the goods. (4 Bibb, 304; 2 Marsh. 217; 4 B. Monroe, 201; 1 Metc. Ky. R. 572.) For the distinction thus made I think that no good reason can be shown. Its operation would, in many instances, deprive the purchaser of the very protection which it is the purpose of the implication to afford. Nor is it clear that the analogy supposed to exist between the covenant of seisin and the implied warranty of chattels can be maintained. Mr. Rawle, in his treatise on the covenant of seisin (Rawle on Cov. 3d ed. 50), assumes that the implied warranty of title to chattels is understood to be "a title sufficient to retain the possession in the vendee of the chattels," and in illustration of the distinction between seisin in fact and seisin in law, as to real property, he says: "An analogy may be found in the rule with respect to chattels.

In the sale of these a warranty of title is implied by the civil and the common law. * * * Yet a subsequent loss of possession by title paramount will be a breach of this warranty, because the vendor is understood to have agreed lawfully to transfer a possession which can be retained," etc.

The doctrine of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky is believed to be unsupported either by text writers upon the law or the adjudications of the Courts of other States of the Union.

In Word v. Cavin, 1 Head, 507, the Supreme Court of Tennessee held that, upon breach of the implied warranty of title to chattels the Statute of Limitations commenced to run upon the possession of the chattel being lost, or upon voluntary offer by the vendee to restore it to the seller.

Linton v. Porter, 31 Ill. 107, was an action upon a promissory note given upon the purchase of a chattel with implied warranty of title. The Supreme Court of Illinois held that it was no defense to say that the vendor had no title while the possession of the vendee remained undisturbed by the true owner.

In Case v. Hall, 24 Wend. 102, upon a state of facts substantially similar to those in Linton v. Porter, the defense was overruled on the ground that where the vendee relies upon the warranty of title, express or implied, there must be a recovery by the real owner before an action can be maintained. (See, also, Vibbard et al. v. Johnson, 19 Johns. 77; Story on Sales, Sec. 203; Parsons Merc. Law, 2d ed. 50, and cases there cited in note; Hilliard on Sales, 3d ed. 391, and cases cited in note.)

It results from these views that the plaintiff's cause of action accrued upon the loss of the chattel in October, 1869, and the Statute of Limitations will not avail the defendant.

PHILIP L. WEAVER ET AL. v. LUTHER HAYWARD.

AFFIDAVIT FOR ATTACHMENT.—The affidavit for an attachment need not state the facts out of which the indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff arose.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Crockett, Whiting & Naphtaly, for Appellant.

An attachment is the creature of the statute, and the statute must be construed as being in derogation of the defendant's common law right to the enjoyment of his property until the termination of the litigation. (Roberts v. Landecker, 9 Cal. 265.) An insufficient affidavit confers no jurisdiction to issue the writ. (1 Selden, 164.) The statute requires that the affidavit should show:

First — That the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff upon a contract expressed or implied, etc.

Second — That the indebtedness over all legal set-offs and counter claims should be specified.

Third — That the sum for which attachment is asked is an actual and bona fide existing debt, etc.

The affidavit in this case simply sets forth the requirements of the statute in hæc verba, without detailing a single fact upon which the mind of the Clerk could act. (In the Matter of Falkner, 4 Hill, 601; 5 How. Pr. 387; 6 Hill, 288; 1 Barb. 247; 7 Hill. 153.)

adjudicated upon by him; for who has or can constitute a Clerk of the county a Judge, in the legal acceptance of the term? (6 Dana, 324.) We say the right of the Clerk to refuse the writ exists only when the creditor will not swear to the existence of all the causes enumerated in section one hundred and twenty-one of the Practice Act, why the debtor's property should be seized before he has a hearing in Court. If he does so swear, the Clerk shall issue it. (7 Barb. 661; 3 Jones, 295; 16 Ohio, Griswold, 304.)

Appeal from an order refusing to dissolve an attachment. The ground of the motion is, that the affidavit does not state the facts showing that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff, but merely states the conclusion that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff. In other words, the objection is that the plaintiff did not restate his complaint in the affidavit, but only stated that the express contract upon which the defendant was indebted to him was a promissory note. The practice, since the adoption of the statute, has generally been in accordance with the form employed in this case; and we can conceive of no useful purpose that would be subserved, by setting out in the affidavit all the facts in respect to the contract, which are necessary to be stated in the complaint.

J. W. CLARK ET AL. v. G. W. GRIDLEY.

PARTNERSHIP ACCOUNTS.—Where the complaint, in an action for the dissolution of a partnership and a settlement of the accounts, avers a loss in the transactions of the firm, borne exclusively by the plaintiff, and asks for a judgment against the defendant for his proportion of such loss, the plaintiff may prove a loss resulting from his own act, done in violation of the partnership agreement.

NOTE.—In such case the plaintiff is entitled to a settlement of the partnership accounts, on such terms as may be equitable; and the defendant may show, as a matter of defense, that he suffered loss by such violation of the contract, and may charge the plaintiff with it.

NOTE.—The plaintiff in such action need not aver in his complaint that the act from which the loss resulted was in violation of the partnership agreement, in order to let in the testimony as to the loss.

JUDGMENT IN ACTION TO DISSOLVE PARTNERSHIP.—If the complaint, in an action to dissolve a partnership and settle its accounts, avers a loss, borne exclusively by plaintiff, and asks for judgment for defendant's proportion, and the evidence shows a profit realized by plaintiff in one transaction, as well as a loss borne by him in another, the account taken should credit the defendant with his part of the profit realized, as well as charge him with his proportion of the loss sustained.

NOTE.—In such case, if the plaintiff has settled with the defendant for his part of the profit realized, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show that fact on the trial.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Tully R. Wise, for Appellant.

If the defendant's consent was necessary to enable the plaintiff to forward the wool to suitable Eastern markets, then, if forwarded without his consent, the transaction did not bind him. It is necessary, then, to allege and prove that he did consent to ship the wool to Boston. The allegata and probata must correspond.

It also appeared upon the trial that the plaintiffs received a large amount of wool, which they sold in San Francisco at a profit, which they have never accounted for. This suit was for an account, and the Court, after hearing the evidence, ought to have directed the plaintiffs to account for sales in San Francisco. But instead of doing that, it took Clark and Perkins' statements of the account in the East, and ordered judgment for them for half of the supposed difference.

Barstow, Stetson & Houghton, for Respondent.

The express consent of the defendant to send the wool to Boston was not required by the contract—the only clause bearing upon this question being contained in folios six and seven; and the words “as may appear best to both parties” can require no more, at the most, than that Gridley should be kept informed of what was going on, and thus have the opportunity to object, if he wished, to any contemplated disposition of the wool. Section sixty of the Practice Act provides that it shall not be necessary to plead the facts showing the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, but that it shall be enough to allege due performance of all such conditions, and if such performance be controverted, then the facts showing such performance are to be established at the trial. The precise course marked out by this section of the Practice Act has been followed in this case. The contract was set out in full in the complaint; then followed the allegation of performance of all the terms of the contract that were to be performed by plaintiff; and, finally, at the trial, the facts showing the performance of the conditions were established. (See California Steam Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 258-263; Stoddard v. Treadwell, 26 Cal. 294-299.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiffs and defendant entered into a partnership venture for the purchase and sale of wool; and the plaintiffs claim that the enterprise resulted in a considerable loss, which was borne by them exclusively; and this action is brought for a settlement of the partnership accounts, and to enforce payment by the defendant of his share of the loss. The answer denies that the venture resulted in a loss. On the contrary, it claims that there was a large profit, which the plaintiffs received, and for which they have not accounted. It appears, from the written agreement between the parties, that the wool was to be sold by the plaintiffs in the San Francisco market, or to be forwarded "to suitable Eastern markets for sale, as may appear best to both parties to this agreement." On the trial the plaintiffs offered to prove that a large portion of the wool was shipped by them to Boston, and sold in that market, and that these sales resulted in a loss. The defendant objected to this proof, on the ground that there was no allegation in the complaint that the wool was shipped to Boston for sale with his consent; and he claimed that without such an averment the proof was inadmissible, inasmuch as it appeared by the agreement that the plaintiffs had no right to ship the wool to an Eastern market, except with the consent of both parties. I discover no force in this objection. Even though it had been expressly admitted on the face of the complaint that the wool was shipped to Boston without the consent of the defendant, and in violation of the contract, the plaintiffs would, nevertheless, have been entitled to a settlement of the partnership accounts, on such terms as might be just and equitable; but the defendant, in that event, would have been entitled, as a matter of defense, to show that he had suffered loss by reason of this violation of the contract, and to charge the plaintiffs with it. But it certainly was not necessary to aver in the complaint that the plaintiffs had violated the contract in this respect; but that was a proper matter of defense to be set up by the defendant. The Court, therefore, did not err in admitting the proof. The only other error assigned is that the evidence does not support the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. There was included within the issues the settlement of the entire partnership accounts between the parties, including all the sales and disbursements during the venture. It appears clearly from the evidence, which is in no respect contradictory on this point, that a portion of the wool was sold by the plaintiffs in San Francisco at a profit, and there is no proof whatever in the cause that the plaintiffs at any time, or in any manner, accounted to the defendant for his share of this profit. The judgment appears to ignore entirely this portion of the partnership transaction; and the judgment against the defendant is for his share of the losses incurred by reason of the sales made in the Boston market, without crediting him with any sum on account of the profits realized from the sales at San Francisco. If the San Francisco sales had been accounted for by the plaintiffs to the defendant, leaving nothing to be settled in respect to that part of the transaction, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to show that fact at the trial; and this they failed to do. The attention of the District Court was explicitly called to this point by the defendant, on his motion for a new trial—this having been assigned as one of the grounds on which the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment—and the defendant's answer notified the plaintiffs that this ground of defense would be relied upon at the trial. The Court, therefore, erred in denying the motion for a new trial.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Neither Mr. Chief Justice RHODES nor Mr. Justice SPRAGUE expressed any opinion.

LLOYD TEVIS v. WILLIAM HICKS, H. C. SWAIN, D. O. MILLS, EDGAR MILLS, HENRY MILLER, AND JAMES LANSING.

TESTIMONY, WHEN PART OF THE RES GESTÆ.— In an action by the creditor of the husband to set aside a deed of gift made by a third person to the wife, on the ground that the land was purchased with the husband's money, and that the deed to the wife was a fraud, evidence of conversations at the time of the creditor sale, between the grantor and one who negotiated the sale, are admissible as a part of the res gestæ.

IDEM.— The admissibility of such testimony does not depend on the question whether the conversation was brought home to the husband, as it does not affect him unless the negotiator was his agent.

IDEM.— In such action, evidence of a sale of land, held by an agent of the debtor in trust for him, is not admissible unless averred in the complaint.

EVIDENCE TO CORRESPOND WITH ALLEGATIONS.— Where a party in an action to set aside a sale as fraudulent, pleads that he was indebted to the person to whom the sale was made, in consideration of which he delivered the property in litigation to that person, evidence that the indebtedness was to the wife of the person designated is inadmissible.

FACTS ADMITTED IN PLEADINGS.— The question as to what facts are admitted by the pleadings is one for the Court and not for the jury; and the Court should not submit such a question to a jury.

IDEM — ALLEGATION NOT DENIED.— In a case where a fact is alleged in the complaint and not denied in the answer, the jury should be instructed that the fact is admitted in the pleadings.

VERDICT INCONSISTENT WITH PLEADINGS.— The jury have no right to find a fact in favor of a party which is contrary to or inconsistent with the pleadings.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS.— If the allegations of the complaint are not denied in the answer, the plaintiff, if he desires judgment on the pleadings, should move for it before introducing evidence to support the complaint.

FRAUD IN INSOLVENT PROCEEDINGS.— In an action to set aside a discharge in insolvency, because fraudulently obtained, a verdict, which finds that the insolvent did not turn over all his property to his assignee, does not necessarily establish that the property was fraudulently or purposely omitted from the schedule.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

Statement of Facts.

This was an action brought in October, 1867, to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of twelve hundred and eighty sheep from William Hicks to H. C. Swain, and of some horses, cattle, and hogs to D. O. Mills & Co., and to set aside as fraudulent and void a discharge in insolvency granted by the County Court of Sacramento County to William Hicks, in May, 1867.

The complaint alleged that the sheep, which were claimed by Swain, a stepson of Hicks, as a gift from Hicks, were conveyed by Hicks when he was insolvent, and without consideration, Swain being largely indebted to Hicks. In his answer, Hicks denied that Swain was ever indebted to him; averred that he was indebted to Swain in the sum of one thousand six hundred and seventy-five dollars, and that the sheep were delivered in payment of that indebtedness; but he did not deny that the delivery was made when he was insolvent.

The complaint also averred that in June, 1866, the defendant Hicks purchased a tract of land from one Bandeen, for six hundred dollars, and caused it to be conveyed by deed of gift to his wife, in order to conceal it from his creditors. On the trial, Bandeen was called as a witness to show what took place at the time of the conveyance, and his testimony was, on defendant's objection, ruled out by the Court as hearsay.

Another averment in the complaint was that Hicks, at the time he applied for a decree of insolvency, was in possession of eight hundred and twenty acres of valuable swamp lands, obtained by entries in the names of other parties; that he had five thousand dollars in money; and that he did not include this property in his schedule of indebtedness. A witness was introduced at the trial to prove the sale of the land for the benefit of Hicks, shortly before he applied for a discharge from his debts; and the testimony was ruled out because the matter had not been alleged in the complaint.

The following instructions to the jury, asked by the plaintiff, were refused by the Court:

First—That all the material allegations of the complaint, not denied by the answer, must be considered by you as true, irrespective of the question whether they are sustained by the evidence or disproved.

Third—That the transfer of the sheep from Hicks to Swain was a mere colorable contrivance, to enable said Hicks to create the same from his creditors.

The jury found a verdict in favor of Hicks and D. O. Mills & Co. as against the charge of fraud, and found specially that Swain was entitled to five hundred and fifty-seven of the sheep, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the remainder—seven hundred and twenty-three. The plaintiff appealed, asking a new trial as to D. O. Mills & Co., and also asking that the court below be directed to enter a decree declaring the discharge of Hicks in insolvency void.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George Cadwalader, for the Appellant, argued that what passed between Spaulding and Bandeen relative to the deed of gift to Mrs. Hicks was a part of the res gestæ, and no rule of law made it hearsay, or required the calling of Spaulding. The plaintiff was trying to establish the allegation of the complaint, that the purchase was made by Hicks, through Spaulding. Hicks made Spaulding his agent for the purpose of completing the purchase of the two hundred acres of land. The conveyance took the form of a deed of gift; the consideration, love and affection. He also argued that the Court should have permitted plaintiff to show the sale of the swamp lands before Hicks applied for a discharge in insolvency.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

Coffroth & Spaulding, for the Respondents, argued that the testimony of Banteen, in regard to the conversation between himself and Spaulding, concerning the deed of gift, was irrelevant, for the reason that Spaulding was not proved to be the agent or attorney of Hicks at the time the deed of gift was made. They argued, further, that Spaulding's testimony relative to the proceeds of the sale of the swamp lands, was inadmissible, because the fact proposed to be proved had not been alleged in the complaint.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

I see no valid objection to the question asked of Banteen, as to what passed between him and Spaulding, in respect to the sale and conveyance of the land, about which the witness was testifying. The complaint charged that Hicks bargained for the land, paid the purchase money, and caused it to be conveyed to his wife by a deed of gift. It was shown that the land was conveyed by a deed of gift to Mrs. Hicks; that the purchase was negotiated by Spaulding, at his office, and that Hicks was present a portion of the time pending the negotiation. The answer to the question asked of the witness would show what took place at the time of the sale and conveyance; and the general rule is that such matters are admissible as a part of the res gestæ. Their admissibility does not depend on the question whether they were brought home to Hicks. If he did not know, or, knowing, did not assent to, what was said or done at that transaction, the evidence would not affect him, unless Spaulding was, in fact, his agent.

Second — The plaintiff's second point is not well taken. The matter to which the inquiry related was not averred in the complaint.

Third — The Court should have excluded the testimony of Hicks, to the effect that his indebtedness, in consideration of which the sheep were delivered, was to Mrs. Swain, instead of Mr. Swain, her husband; because it is averred, in the answer of Hicks and of Swain, that Hicks was indebted, in a specified amount, to Swain.

Fourth — The first instruction requested by the plaintiff was properly refused, for it, in effect, submitted to the jury the question as to what facts were admitted by the pleadings. That question is for the Court.

Fifth — The plaintiff's third instruction should have been given, for the fact therein stated was expressly alleged in the complaint, and was not specifically denied in the answer of Hicks or Swain. The jury should be instructed, in such case, that the fact mentioned in the instruction was admitted by the pleadings. The oral instruction given by the court, when refusing to give that instruction, is erroneous in one particular. The jury were instructed that they might consider the testimony in respect to the sheep, in connection with the pleadings, and that if they believed the pleadings were erroneous in that regard — that Hicks did actually surrender all his property to his assignee in insolvency — they might "give him the benefit of it." The jury have no right to find a fact in favor of a party, which is contrary to, or inconsistent with, his pleadings. If a pleading does not correctly state the facts, application should be made to amend.

Sixth — The plaintiff's eighth instruction is only a repetition of facts stated in the complaint, and not denied in the answers. It should have been given, together with the statement, that those facts were admitted by the pleadings. These remarks are applicable to certain other of the instructions requested by the plaintiff, which need not be particularly noticed. It is sufficiently indicated by what has already been said that several of the denials in the answer of Hicks are not specific, within the meaning of the code.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

The record does not disclose any error materially affecting the judgment in favor of D. O. Mills & Co.

Seventh — The plaintiff renews here the motion, made after judgment in the Court below, for a judgment, declaring the discharge in insolvency of Hicks void. The motion was heard on the pleadings and verdict. Several of the material allegations of the complaint are not sufficiently denied in the answer of Hicks; but neither the plaintiff nor the Court below treated the facts which were stated in those allegations as admitted, and the plaintiff adduced evidence to prove them. Had the opposite course been taken, Hicks doubtless would have asked leave to amend his answer. The verdict, by finding for the plaintiff as to a certain number of the sheep, determine that Hicks did not surrender all his property to his assignee; but it does not necessarily establish that the property was fraudulently or purposely omitted from his schedule. Under these circumstances, the motion was properly denied. The plaintiff should not have delayed the making of the motion, until after the cause had proceeded to such a stage, that Hicks could not amend his answer when its defects were pointed out.

Judgment as to D. O. Mills, Edgar Mills, and Henry Miller affirmed, and the judgment in favor of the defendants, Hicks and Lansing, reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Mr. Justice SPRAGUE expressed no opinion.

JOHN NYLAND.CONSTITUTIONAL CONSTRUCTION — MUNICIPAL COURT OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The Municipal Criminal Court of San Francisco, established by Act of the Legislature March 31st, 1870, is a constitutional Court. (Ex Parte John Stratman, 39 Cal. 517, affirmed on this point.)

IDEM — COUNTY COURT — RIGHT OF APPEAL.—The provision in section eight, Article VI, of the Constitution, giving to the County Courts appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in such inferior Courts as may be established in pursuance of section one, of the same Article, is not a guaranty of individual right; but either confers the absolute right of appeal from the Municipal Court to the County Court, or confers upon the latter the capacity to exercise the jurisdiction, when the Legislature shall provide the mode and means of doing so.

IDEM.—The question whether the Constitution confers upon the County Court appellate jurisdiction in cases transferred from the County Court to the Municipal Court for trial is reversed.

CRIMINAL PRACTICE — EVIDENCE.—In a criminal case the prosecution may show, by other witnesses, that a witness for defendant had given a different account of what occurred at the time the offense was committed, from that testified to by the witness on the stand.

APPEAL from the Municipal Criminal Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

Defendant was tried and convicted, on an indictment for robbery, in the Municipal Criminal Court of the City and County of San Francisco. Defendant then moved the Court for a new trial; the Court denied the motion; the defendant moved for an arrest of judgment; the Court denied the motion, and entered judgment; and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George W. Tyler, for Appellant.

First — Article VI, section one, of the Constitution, provides for the organization of courts inferior in jurisdiction to the County Court in any incorporated city or town.

Argument for Respondent.

Second — Section one, of Article VI, is the only section of the Constitution permitting the organization of any Court other than Supreme, District, County, and Probate Courts, and Justices of the Peace, and therefore the Municipal Criminal Court of San Francisco must be organized under that section of the Constitution.

Third — Every citizen is entitled to all the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the State.

Fourth — Section eight, of Article VI, of the Constitution, provides that an appeal shall lie, to the County Courts from all inferior Courts, organized pursuant to Article VI, section one.

Fifth — The Act organizing the Municipal Criminal Court does not provide for an appeal to the County Court, but does provide for an appeal direct to the Supreme Court.

Sixth — That the act organizing the Municipal Criminal Court, being the later statute, repeals the first subdivision of section four hundred and eighty-one of the Criminal Practice Act, and therefore no appeal lies, from that Court to the County Court, unless the section of the Constitution, ex proprio vigore, gives such appeal.

Seventh — That the Constitution is not self-executing in that respect, but requires legislation to carry the right of appeal guaranteed by the Constitution into effect.

Eighth — The Legislature has no power to impair or take away the appellate jurisdiction of the County Court (Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 297), and therefore, inasmuch as an appeal to the County Court is not provided for by law, the Act organizing the Court is unconstitutional.

Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, for Respondent.

The Municipal Court of San Francisco, created by Act approved March 31st, 1870, is but an arm of the County Court. No cases originate or arise in that Court; the cases are merely transferred to it from the County Court, and its existence does not conflict with section eight, Article VI, of the Constitution.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The first question raised on this appeal is as to the constitutionality of the Act of the Legislature which organizes the Municipal Criminal Court of the City and County of San Francisco (Stats. 1869-70, p. 528), and which confers on that Court jurisdiction to try cases of felony, and provides for no appeal to the County Court. The main question was discussed by Mr. Justice WALLACE In Re John Stratman; and the conclusion there arrived at, declaring the Court constitutional, we fully indorse and approve.

In this case it is claimed that, although the Legislature has the power to establish such a Court, and confer upon it jurisdiction to try such cases, yet, in doing so, it must provide for an appeal to the County Court from its judgments; that the Court was organized by virtue of the power conferred upon the Legislature by section one, Article VI of the Constitution, and that section eight of the same Article gives to the County Courts appellate jurisdiction of all cases arising in the Courts authorized by section one; that the defendant is entitled to all the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution, one of which is, that if convicted in one of the Courts organized under section one, he shall have the right to appeal to the County Court, and there have a trial de novo; that the Act in question provides for trials and convictions in the Municipal Court, but has not provided for an appeal to the County Court; that in this it attempts to deprive the County Court of some portion of its constitutional jurisdiction, and denies to parties tried and convicted in the Municipal Court a right secured by the Constitution, and is, therefore, void.

Admitting all the premises of counsel, I fail to see the logical necessity of the conclusion. If the clause of the Constitution is self-executing, there is no foundation for the argument for the right of appeal, and the power of the Court to entertain it exists under the law. If the constitutional provision is not self-executing, then it merely confers upon the County Court the capacity to exercise the jurisdiction when the Legislature shall provide the means of exercising it. The provision is in no sense a guaranty of individual right. It is a grant of power to the Court, which possibly creates a corresponding duty upon the part of the Legislature to provide the mode and means of its exercise.

The question whether the Constitution confers upon the County Court appellate jurisdiction in cases transferred from the County Court to the Municipal Court for trial does not necessarily arise; and, as very little discussion has been had upon that part of the case, the question is reserved.

All the evidence given by the witness Harmon appears to be set out in the record. Upon an examination we fail to find anything which could have been of the slightest benefit to the defendant. It, therefore, could not have injured him to allow the witness to be impeached. The witness was called by the prosecution, and simply proved that he knew nothing whatever concerning the case.

There was no error in allowing the prosecution to show by other witnesses that Mrs. Nyland, the wife of defendant, had given a different account of what occurred at the time of the robbery from that testified to by her while on the stand. There is no question as to the relevancy of such testimony. (1 Greenl. Ev., Sec. 462.)

DAVID W. PATTERSON, WILLIAM L. SPENCER, AND FERDINAND SPENCER v. WILLIAM H.
SHARP, JOHN M. BYRNE, AND TOWNSEND BAG-LEY.

PRACTICE ON APPEAL—JUDGMENT ROLL.—When a judgment is rendered on facts, alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, the question, whether the judgment ordered the payment of too large a sum of money, arises on the judgment roll without bringing up the evidence.

TENDER—INTEREST.—A tender of the principal sum due, with the stipulated interest up to the time of the tender, puts a stop to the accruing of interest from the date of the tender.

EVIDENCE.—Evidence is not admissible to controvert facts admitted by the pleadings.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The questions presented and decided in this case sufficiently appear from the following extract from the notice of appeal, and from the opinion of the Court:

“The plaintiffs hereby appeal to the Supreme Court of this State from so much of the judgment of the District Court as is in favor of defendants or either of them, and against the plaintiffs; that is to say, from so much of said judgment as in effect orders, adjudges, and decrees that said plaintiffs shall pay to said defendant Byrne, the sum of seven thousand eight hundred and thirty-six dollars, in United States gold coin, instead of six thousand two hundred and twenty-four dollars, in like coin; the said amount so required by said judgment to be paid, being in excess of the amount justly due in the sum of one thousand six hundred and twelve dollars. And the said plaintiffs will ask said Supreme Court to so modify the said judgment as to require the plaintiffs to pay to said defendants the sum of six thousand dollars, in United States gold coin, with such interest thereon as to such Supreme Court may seem just and proper."

Currey & Evans, for Appellants.

The District Court erred in rendering judgment requiring the plaintiff to pay the defendant, Byrne, the sum of seven thousand eight hundred and thirty-six dollars, in United States gold coin, instead of six thousand two hundred and twenty-four dollars in like gold coin — being an excess of one thousand six hundred and twelve dollars of the amount justly due.

1. The complaint contains an allegation that six thousand two hundred and twenty-four dollars was tendered on the 11th day of June, 1869, by the plaintiffs to the defendant, Sharp, in payment of the sum specified in the written contract set forth in the complaint, with the interest due thereon. This allegation stands admitted for want of a denial of it in the defendant's answer. (Practice Act, Sec. 65; Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 416, 417; Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545.)

2. The amount due being tendered on the 11th of June, 1869, interest thereon should cease from that time. (Hill v. Place, 5 Abbott's Pr. R. [N. S.], 18; s. c., 36 How. Pr. R. 26; Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. R. 343, and cases there cited.) The plaintiffs alleged that they had, from the time of the tender, continued ready to pay the amount due. (Kortright v. Cady, 23 Barb. 490.)

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondents.

1. The appellants cannot attack the judgment, upon the ground that it was excessive, or for more than was due, because the decree shows that the action was tried, and as the evidence is not before the Court, and no motion for new trial made, the appellants cannot urge this objection, because the evidence must be presumed sufficient to justify the decision. This argument also disposes of the point in reference to the tender. (Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 280.)

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

2. The appellants assume that the record established the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties; but the material allegations of the complaint, in this particular, were all denied by the answer; and the decree, expressly assuming that the legal title to the premises was in the defendant Byrne, gave the appellants a certain period of time wherein to pay the sum of money awarded. This Court cannot, without the evidence presented below, say that this decree was erroneous in fact; and that it was not erroneous in form is established by the decision of this tribunal in Tyler v. Granger (No. 2,280), July Term, 1870 (not reported).

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

It is alleged in the complaint that the plaintiffs tendered to Sharp, and also to Byrne, six thousand dollars, the money advanced, together with interest thereon at two per cent per month — the stipulated rate — at a specified time; that they refused to accept the money; and that the plaintiffs, from the time of the tender, have continued ready to pay that amount of money. These facts, not being denied by the answer, are admitted; and as evidence would not be admissible for the purpose of controverting facts thus established, the question whether the judgment ordered the payment by the plaintiffs, of too large a sum of money, arises upon the judgment roll without bringing up the evidence, if any, that may have been offered on that point. The amount of money tendered by the plaintiffs — six thousand two hundred and twenty-four dollars — was the amount due at the time of the tender, and the tender put a stop to the accruing of interest. (3 Para. on Cont. 150, and cases cited.)

by striking out the sum of seven thousand eight hundred and thirty-six dollars wherever it occurs in the judgment, and inserting in the place thereof, the sum of six thousand two hundred and twenty-four dollars, and ordering said sum to be paid within ten days from the entry of the judgment.

ALEXANDER McABEE v. CHARLES W. RANDALL.

APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT.—On an appeal from a judgment, without a statement or bill of exceptions, the Court will review the judgment roll only.

REVIEW OF ORDER.—An order made by the Court below, denying a motion for judgment on the pleadings, will not be reviewed by the Supreme Court, unless presented by a statement or bill of exceptions.

AN ATTORNEY MUST STAND BY HIS DEFINITION OF HIS PLEADINGS.—If the defendant calls his answer a counter claim, and goes to trial in the Court below on that theory, he will not be permitted for the first time, in the Supreme Court, to call it a cross complaint, to obtain a review of an order denying his motion for judgment on the pleadings.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

When the cause was called for trial in the Court below, the defendant's attorney moved for judgment on the pleadings. The Court denied the motion; the cause was then tried, and the plaintiff recovered judgment. The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

John L. Love, for Appellant.

It is true this defense was, in the hurry of the pleader, called a counter claim. We assert that under our system a pleading is not what an attorney may happen to call it, but what it really is as shown by the facts alleged in the pleading. The calling it by another name is mere surplusage.

Botts & Wise, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The appeal here is taken from the final judgment only. There being no statement on appeal, nor bill of exceptions, the record before us for review is limited to such papers as are declared by section two hundred and three to constitute the "judgment roll." It would seem from the minutes of the trial, which are found in the transcript, and from the argument of counsel, that the real purpose of the appeal from the judgment here taken is to review an order said to have been made by the Court below after the coming on of the cause for trial, by which order a motion of the defendant for judgment in her favor on the pleadings was denied.

If it properly appeared that such an order was really made, it would undoubtedly be examinable here by means of an appeal from the final judgment itself; in fact, it could be reviewed in no other way. The order which we are asked to review is not one disposing of a demurrer, nor relating to a change of parties, and, therefore, cannot be considered here, unless presented by bill of exceptions, or statement on appeal.

So far as the record discloses to us, then, it appears that the parties went to trial in the Court below without objection made upon the part of either to the pleadings of the other, as not permitting that other to be heard on the merits. The defendant's answer was there styled by himself a "counter claim," and not a "cross complaint," which he now says it is; and the trial proceeded on that idea.

Under repeated rulings in this Court, we will not hear the defendant assert here, for the first time, that he made a mistake in this respect — that his answer was, after all, a “cross complaint;” that its allegations were not denied by plaintiff, and that, as a consequence, he is now entitled to judgment, over against the plaintiff on the pleadings.

Judgment affirmed.

ANGELO LAVERONE v. G. MANGIANTI ET AL.

FEROCEOUS DOG.—The owner of a ferocious dog, knowing the vicious propensities of the animal, keeps it at his own risk, and is responsible for any injury inflicted by it upon a person who is free from fault.

By CROCKETT, J., dissenting:

IDEM.—The owner of a dangerous or ferocious dog is liable for such damages only as result from his negligence in keeping it.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice CROCKETT.

Botts & Wise, for Appellants.

A man may lawfully keep a fierce dog for the protection of his house, knowing that he will bite, provided he keeps him under proper restraint, and with due care. (Sarch v. Blackburn, 4 Carr. & Payne, 287.)

Quint & Hardy, for Respondent.

It is admitted that the dog was a ferocious animal, and accustomed to bite mankind, and, further, that the defendants knew it. The scienter being established, the law creates a liability on the part of the owners. (1 Abbott's Forms, 442, Note 1; Buckley v. Leonard, 4 Denio, 500; Auchmutz v. Ham, 1 id. 495; Smith v. Pelah, 2 Str. 1264; McCoskill v. Elliott, 5 Strob. 198; Loomis v. Terry, 17 Wend. 496; Jones v. Perry, 2 Esp. R. 482; Norris v. Peak, 487 S. C.; Blackman v. Simmons, 3 Carr. & Payne, 138; Popperell v. Rine, 10 Cush. 509.)

There are three, and but three, allegations necessary to be made and proved in this case:

First—That the dog was vicious and in the habit of biting mankind.

Second—That the owners (defendants) knew it.

Third—That he bit and injured the plaintiff.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

It is insisted, on behalf of the defendants, that a person may lawfully keep a ferocious dog—one that is accustomed to bite mankind. That position may be conceded, and it may also be conceded that he has the same right to keep a tiger. The danger to mankind and the injury, if any is suffered, comes from the same source—the ferocity of the animal. In determining the responsibility of the keeper for an injury inflicted by either animal, the only difference I can see between the two cases is, that in case of an injury caused by a dog, the knowledge of the keeper that the dog was ferocious, must be alleged and proven, for all dogs are not ferocious; while in the case of a tiger, such knowledge will be presumed from the nature of the animal. This knowledge, however established, whether by evidence or by presumption, is the same in substance, and works the same results. When the facts in two or more cases are alike, the law will pronounce similar judgments. It will not be doubted that for an injury inflicted by a tiger, his owner will be responsible, and in my opinion there is as little reason to doubt that the owner of a dog, which he knows to be ferocious, is equally liable for a similar injury occasioned by it. In either case, the owner, knowing the vicious propensities and ferocious nature of the animal, keeps it at his own risk, and he should bear the responsibility for any injury inflicted by it upon a person who is free from fault.

In my opinion the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

CROCKETT, J., delivered the following dissenting opinion:

The plaintiff was bitten by the defendants' dog, and sues to recover damages for the injury, and having obtained a judgment for five hundred dollars, the defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and they appealed to this Court. The proof shows that the dog was chained under the steps leading to the defendants' house, in such manner that he could not reach any one ascending the steps; that the plaintiff, in entering the house upon a lawful business, was ascending the steps, when one of the steps which was loose, slipped from its position, and the plaintiff's leg went through the opening, when it was seized and bitten by the dog under the steps. If any negligence can be imputed to the defendants, it was in keeping the dog under the steps so loosely covered as to expose persons ascending the steps to accidents of this character. But no negligence is averred in the complaint and the action is based on the theory that the owner of a dog, which he knows to be vicious and inclined to bite human beings, is bound, at his peril, so to keep him that no one shall be bitten by him, unless it be through the culpable negligence of the party who suffers the injury. On the other hand, the defendants claim that the owner is not responsible, if he takes reasonable precautions to prevent damage from the vicious qualities of the dog; and they claim that such precautions were taken in this case; that the defendants were guilty of no negligence, and, consequently, are not responsible for the injury to the plaintiff. If the defendants' proposition is correct, that the defendants were not responsible, except for negligence in the manner of keeping the dog, it is evident the complaint is not good, inasmuch as it avers no negligence on the part of the defendants. The only legal proposition, therefore, which was involved in the action was, whether or not, conceding that the defendants were free from negligence, they were liable to the plaintiff for the damage which he suffered, and to which he did not contribute by his own negligence. The authorities are not uniform on this point, some of them holding that he who keeps a ferocious dog, knowing that he is accustomed to bite mankind, does so at his peril, and is responsible to any person who, without any fault on his part, is bitten by the dog, whether he was negligently kept or not. The following cases appear to support this proposition, or, at least, to lend some countenance to it: (Buckley v. Leonard, 4 Den. 500; Auchmutz v. Ham, 1 Den. 495; Smith v. Pelah, 2 Str. 1264; McCoskill v. Elliott, 5 Strob. 198; Loomis v. Terry, 17 Wend. 496; Jones v. Perry, 2 Esp. 482; Norris v. Peak, 487 S. C.; Blackman v. Simmons, 3 Carr. & Payne, 138; Popperell v. Rine, 10 Cush. 509.)

On the other hand, there are very respectable authorities which hold that every one has a right to keep a watch dog for the protection of his premises, and that he is only responsible for such damages as shall result from the negligent keeping of the dog, and is not an insurer against injuries which may happen, notwithstanding all reasonable and proper care was used to guard against them. (Sarch v. Blackburn, 4 Carr. & Payne, 207; Curtis v. Mills, 5 id. 489.) In Ficken v. Jones, 28 Cal. 618, the action was for damages caused by a steer which was being driven through the streets of San Francisco, and the Court held that the defendants were not liable unless they were guilty of negligence in the mode of driving and managing the steer. I think the more reasonable rule is announced in Sarch v. Blackburn, supra, to the effect that every one has a right to keep a watch dog for the protection of his premises, and is only responsible for injuries resulting from negligence in the keeping. It may be conceded that no one has a right to keep upon his premises wild beasts of such strength and ferocity that no reasonable care or prudence would be a safeguard against injury from them. If one should see fit to keep upon his premises a tiger or a lion, or a dog known to be mad, he would doubtless be responsible for injuries caused by them, however carefully he might guard them. Such beasts are too dangerous to human life to be kept under the pretense of guarding the premises of the keeper from the intrusion of marauders. But dogs are not ordinarily of a dangerous and ferocious nature, and with reasonable care and prudence may be so kept as to render them usually harmless, and should not be subject to the same rule which applies to savage and ferocious beasts of an untamable nature. In modern times they have become so domesticated, and are so subservient to the use of man, as to exclude them from the general rule, which is applicable to beasts of so savage and ferocious a nature that they can be devoted to no useful purpose, and cannot be kept except at the imminent risk of human life. Whilst the majority of all domestic animals are usually tractable, docile, and harmless, a few of them are, nevertheless, vicious and dangerous. It is a well-known fact that some of the most valuable horses for breeding and the turf have been extremely vicious, dangerous, and unmanageable. It would be a harsh rule to hold that the owner of such animals must destroy them, on pain of being held responsible for any damage they may cause, however cautiously they may have been guarded to prevent the injury. If the owner of a savage and dangerous bull should have him in a perfectly secure inclosure, where he could do no possible harm, and if a thoughtless or mischievous boy, without the knowledge or consent of the owner, should open the gate and turn him loose into a crowded thoroughfare, from which damage ensued, it would be a great hardship to hold the owner responsible for it. Whilst savage dogs may be somewhat more dangerous than vicious horses or cattle, they are nevertheless useful domestic animals, which every one has a right to keep; and whilst they may demand greater vigilance to prevent harm, this only involves the question of the degree of caution to be used, and does not affect the question of their right to keep them, provided they use the proper care. If the earlier cases establish a different rule, the interests of society demand that it should now be abrogated, considering the various useful purposes for which such animals are now employed.

On the trial, the Court ignored this view of the law in its instructions to the jury, and for this reason the judgment should be reversed. But inasmuch as the defendants were possibly guilty of negligence in keeping the dog under steps covered with boards either entirely loose, or so insecurely fastened as to be easily displaced by an accidental cause, from which negligence in so keeping the dog the injury to the plaintiff may have resulted, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his complaint. I think, therefore, the judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint.

THE SUPREME COURT

APRIL TERM, 1871.

THE STOCKTON AND VISALIA RAILROAD COMPANY v. THE COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF STOCKTON.

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION — POLICY OF LAW NOT TO BE CONSIDERED.— In the consideration of a statute, duly passed by the Legislature, the Supreme Court will not inquire into the motives of its author, or entertain the question whether it be a wise or a foolish law.

POWER OF JUDICIARY TO DECLARE STATUTE UNCONSTITUTIONAL.— The power of the judiciary to declare a statute unconstitutional should never be exerted, except where the conflict between it and the Constitution is palpable, and incapable of reconciliation.

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF TAXATION — LEGISLATIVE DISCRETION.— The principle upon which taxation is to be imposed by the State Government is pointed out by the Constitution; but the extent to which it may be carried is left unlimited, except by legislative discretion.

"PUBLIC USE" A MATTER OF LEGISLATIVE DETERMINATION.— The "public use," mentioned in the Constitution (Art. X, Sec. 8), upon which the power of eminent domain is to be exerted, is left in large measure to legislative determination; and the legislative resolve, by which a tax is imposed or private property taken, is such a legislative determination that the public use is to be promoted by the tax or the taking directed.

NAPA VALLEY RAILROAD Co. v. NAPA COUNTY, 30 Cal. 437, on the point that railroads concern the public interest as a matter of legal judgment, and that legislative action to that effect is not open to review by the judicial department, cited as controlling authority.

"PUBLIC USE" TO SUPPORT TAXATION FOR RAILROAD PURPOSES.—The same kind of "public use" which will authorize the taking of private property in aid of a particular railroad, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, will support the laying of a tax in aid of the same road, under the taxing power.

RAILROADS MAY BE OF "PUBLIC USE," THOUGH ALSO FOR PRIVATE PROFIT.—The mere fact that a railroad is owned and operated by a private corporation, and for private profit, does not prevent it from being also of "public use."

MEANS OF AID TO RAILROADS.—Aid, as fostering a public use, may be extended to the construction of a railroad, by means of the power of eminent domain, or of subscription to capital stock, and by donation made by cities and other political subdivisions of the State, under the authority of the Legislature.

STOCKTON CITY RAILROAD—SUBSIDY ACT CONSTITUTIONAL—MANDAMUS.—The Act of April 1, 1870, empowering the City of Stockton to aid in the construction of the Stockton and Visalia Railroad (Stats. 1869-70, p. 551), declared constitutional; and the Common Council of Stockton required by mandamus to levy a tax to pay interest accruing under its provisions.

THIS was an original application in the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to require the Common Council of the City of Stockton to levy a tax sufficient to raise the sum of twenty-one thousand dollars, in gold coin, being the interest for the first year (1870) on the bonds issued under and by virtue of "An Act to empower the City of Stockton to aid in the construction of the Stockton and Visalia Railroad," approved April 1, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 551). The petition set forth the facts, and, among other things, that the defendant, in response to a written demand made upon it by the petitioner, refused to levy such tax "then, or at any other time," assigning as a reason that the statute was unconstitutional and void. The same ground substantially was taken by the answer in this proceeding.

Argument for Petitioner.

J. B. McConnell, and J. B. Hall, for Petitioner.

The Act in question is constitutional and valid, as a law emanating from the supreme legislative power. In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the legislative authority is, to all intents, supreme, and, humanly speaking, omnipotent. (See 1 Black. 160; Smith's Stat. and Const. Construction, 243-258; Sedgwick's Stat. Const. 243, 475; 1 Kent, 448; Cooley on Limitations, 83-92; Commonwealth v. McCloskey, 2 Rawle, 374; Beebe v. The State, 6 Ind. 528; Johnson v. The Commonwealth, 1 Bibb, 602; People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 543; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 136; Winehamer v. The People, 13 N. Y. 391; Cooley on Limitations, 87, 168, notes; Sharpless v. The Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Pa. St. 162.)

The taxing power is left by the Constitution unlimited, both as to its objects and to the amount imposed. (Cooley on Limitations, 479; McCullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 428; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Peters, 661; Booth v. The Town of Woodbury, 32 Conn. 124; Broadhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624; Dinehart v. Town of Lafayette, 19 Wis. 677.) In California the only limitation upon the taxing power is the constitutional provision requiring "taxation to be equal and uniform." Subject to this restriction, the authority to impose taxes is with us as unlimited as in any other sovereign community on the globe. (Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 85; McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; People v. Seymour, 18 Cal. 332; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 251.)

The statute in question provides for a case of taxation—not of eminent domain. The City of Stockton is a municipal body, fully competent to tax its citizens within legitimate bounds; and the Act does not empower or attempt to empower it to exceed those bounds; nor does it conflict with any clause of the Constitution relating to taxation. (Town of Guilford v. Supervisors, 18 Barb. 616; People v. Coleman,

Argument for Petitioner.

4 Cal. 46; High v. Shoemaker, 22 Cal. 363; Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343; Burnett v. Mayor of Sacramento, 12 Cal. 72; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 251; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432; Beals v. Amador County, 35 Cal. 630; People v. Alameda County, 26 Cal. 647; Napa Valley R. R. Co. v. Napa County, 30 Cal. 435; People v. Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 Comst. 420; Prettyman v. Sup. of Tazewell Co., 19 Ill. 411; Bank of Rome v. Village of Rome, 18 N. Y. 38.)

We admit that the Legislature cannot take one man's property from him and give it to another, for this would be to deprive him of his property without due process of law. Nor can the Legislature, under pretense of taxation, do [indirectly] what it cannot do directly. A tax, therefore, imposed purely and singly for the purpose of paying money to a man for his sole benefit, would come within the category of void legislation. But such is not the case with railroads, and particularly with the railroad intended by this Act. It is of such a public character as to justify taxation in its behalf. The mere fact of its ownership being individuals does not prevent its use from being public and even wholly public. There is abundant and conclusive authority to show that railroads in general are now regarded as of public concern. (Constitution, Art. IV, Sec. 37; Hittell's Gen. Indeed, it is not saying too much to assert that no question has been mooted in the Courts of these States, upon which a doubt at all could hinge, in the determination of which there has been so remarkable a concurrence of opinion.

There are several cases, such as State v. County of Argument for Petitioner.

Wapello, 13 Iowa, 390; Whiting v. Sheboygan Railway Co., in Wisconsin; and People v. Township of Salem, in Michigan, which hold a contrary doctrine, proceeding upon the idea that because a railroad is owned by what they term a private corporation, its use is therefore private; but we may, with perfect safety to our argument, leave these cases to the rebuke of the U. S. Supreme Court, in Gelpecke v. Dubuque, 1 Wallace, 206, that they stand in unenviable solitude and notoriety.

It may, however, be objected that in this case the city does not become a stockholder in the company, nor acquire an interest in the road in exchange for her bonds; that, therefore, such bonds are what they may choose to call a pure "donation," and that the act in question, not being founded upon a proper consideration, is null and void. But assuredly, if the Legislature can authorize a city to take stock in a railroad company, and levy a tax to pay the principal and interest of the bonds issued in exchange for such stock, it may, by a like exercise of power, authorize it to advance its bonds by way of direct aid to the road, without receiving stock therefor. The existence of the taxing power being conceded, the Legislature is the sole judge of the occasion of its exercise. All the authorities admit this, including Judge Cooley and the Iowa and Wisconsin Courts. In fact, many of the decisions cited by us are cases of the absolute advance of the bonds, or other securities—no stock being received in exchange. (See Bank of Augusta v. City of Augusta, 49 Maine, 508; Stein v. City of Mobile, 24 Alabama, 612; People v. Supervisors of S. F., 27 Cal. 667; Contra Costa R. R. Company v. Moss, 23 Cal. 324; Napa Valley R. R. Co. v. Napa County, 30 Cal. 435; and especially People v. Alameda County, 26 Cal. 647; and Beals v. Amador County, 35 Cal. 630, in respect to the finality of the legislative judgment relative to the occasion for exercising the taxing power.)

Argument for Respondents.

Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, for Respondents.

The issue in this case is whether a municipal corporation can be compelled to levy a tax upon its citizens and property to raise a subsidy to a private corporation. As an original proposition, I have no doubt that the true principle is with respondents. It is true that years ago, during the internal improvement mania which existed all over the country, the early decisions of many of the States upon this power of taxation went too far; but even those decisions, I think, will be found not to have gone to the extent asked for in this case. In most, if not all of them, the discussions grew out of cases in which the corporations were stockholders, and not like the present case, where the municipal corporation is asked to pay without being interested in the enterprise, except by that incidental interest which would be expected to inure from increase of business. The most, if not all, of these States have seen the impolicy, improvidence, and unconstitutionality of their former course, and have recently, by a series of able and convincing decisions, proven the error of their earlier opinions. The Courts of New York, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Michigan, and those of other States have recently had this question under consideration; and it is gratifying to every lover of constitutional law to observe that they are all returning to the old landmarks, admitting, as they all do, the danger of abandoning, for any cause, the rule of strict construction and rigid adherence.

I admit, if the Act be within the powers granted by the Constitution, that we are not permitted to discuss its propriety or advisability; but I deny that the Legislature is the sole judge of the legality or constitutionality of its acts, and that the Act in question is constitutional and valid, as a law, because it emanates from the law making-power—the Legislature. I deny, also, that the restriction or inhibition upon legislative action must be found within the letter of the Constitution; that the negative must be averred in the instrument. On the contrary, I insist that we are at liberty to take the whole instrument, and, construing it as we would any other law, determine from it whether an Act be repugnant to it, even when we can find no absolute negative in the letter, nor any single word or sentence which contains any such negative. (See Nougues v. Douglas, 7 Cal. 65; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 518; Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 161; Ferris v. Coover, 11 Cal. 175.)

Upon examining the Constitution—and particularly Article I, sections eight, eleven, and twenty-one; Article IV, section thirty-seven; and Article XI, sections ten and thirteen—it will be found that freedom of person, of speech, of action, of property, freedom for the masses, protection to the people, is the utterance of every line, is the expression of every sentence, of the instrument; and, to make the proposition beyond contradiction, the instrument in express words declares that “this enumeration of rights shall not be construed to impair or deny others retained by the people.” While, therefore, it is admitted that the Legislature, being the supreme law-making power of the State, has discretion in legitimate taxation, it is insisted that its power extends no further, and that, in going beyond legitimate taxation, its action becomes usurpation, just as much as if it were assuming to do acts wholly without its constitutional power.

All the writers upon the subject of taxation agree in confining its objects to public uses and purposes. (See Webster, Bouvier, Burrill, Story on Const. 472; Blackwell on Tax Titles, 1.) The right and power of taxation, from its very nature, must exist in the sovereign power. The consideration going to the citizen for the taxes he pays is protection to himself, his family, and his property; and if he gets none of this consideration for the money he pays, there is no mutuality of benefit, and his substance is taken without any corresponding advantage to him in return. In the very nature of things, he can get this protection from none but the supreme, the sovereign, power; hence, it follows that the power of taxation is a sovereign power, and cannot exist in any but the sovereign. If exercised by any other than the sovereign, its delegates or agents, it is a usurpation. Now, for what purposes may taxation be imposed? Clearly, for only such purposes as are contemplated in the contract between the Government and the citizens; for only such public uses as bring about the result intended — the support and maintenance of the Government, the sovereign, whose protection is earned by the taxpayer. There is a mutuality, a dependence, the one upon the other. This creates harmony; and outside of this, there is neither harmony nor community of interest. If the power of taxation goes further than this, it ceases to be taxation, and becomes plunder. (Lumston v. Cross, 19 Wis. 284; Soens v. Racine, 10 Wis. 250; Foster v. Kenosha, 12 Wis. 620; Hosbrook v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 134; Brown's Legal Maxims, 3, and note.)

The Legislature cannot levy a tax for merely private and individual purposes, neither can they authorize a municipal corporation to do so — but only for some object of public or common interest. (Soens v. Racine, 10 Wis. 271; Broadhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624; Sharpless v. Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Pa. St. 108; Whiting v. Sheboygan R. R. Co., 25 Wis. 167; Detroit and Howell R. R. Co. v. Town of Salem, — Mich. [not yet reported]; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28.

Again, if the consideration averred in the petition, that the contemplated railroad in an enterprise of great utility to the people of the State at large; and especially to Stockton and the surrounding towns and counties, is sufficient to render this enterprise such as to entitle it to have taxes levied and given for its support, then the surrounding towns and counties and the people of the whole State should share equally in the burden of taxation. (Const., Art. XI, Sec. 15.) But this is not a sufficient consideration; it is not such public use as is the legitimate subject of taxation. So far as the public is concerned the incidental advantage to be derived from this enterprise is not a public use. The railroad company is a private corporation just as much as any other. (Angell & Ames on Cor., Sections 14, 30, 36.) The respondent is not a stockholder, and will not be benefited by the gains of the enterprise — these go into the pockets of private citizens, while the taxpayer foots the bills. I can see neither law nor justice in forcing one man to give his money to another, or to a corporation, who desires to use it for the purpose of building a railroad, any more than any other enterprise. To my mind the later and better authorities clearly establish the proposition, that a municipal corporation has no authority to donate the money of its taxpayers to a private corporation, and that a corporation for building railroads for its own private gain is a private corporation. The Legislature has no constitutional power to apply or to loan the money of such municipal corporation or of its citizens to any such use; and the Act under which the petitioner claims is unconstitutional and void.

[The briefs of counsel in this case were numerous and lengthy. On the part of the petitioner, Messrs. McConnell and Hall filed three, and S. W. Sanderson filed two, one of them containing also a certified copy of the late opinion of the Supreme Court of Iowa in the case of J. R. Stewart v. The Board of Supervisors of Polk County. On the part of the respondents, Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, filed three briefs, and Messrs. Hale & Edmonds one.]

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

An act was passed by the Legislature at its late session, and approved on the first day of April, 1870, which is entitled "An Act to empower the City of Stockton to aid in the construction of the Stockton and Visalia Railroad." (Acts 1869-70, p. 551.)

In substance it directs the municipal authorities of the City of Stockton to donate three hundred thousand dollars to a company who propose to build a certain railroad, having a permanent terminus in the city itself, at its water front. Under the provisions of the Act the bonds of the city for the entire sum are to be placed in the hands of three gentlemen named in the Act, who are thereby created a Disbursing Board, and who are to deliver the bonds to the company in designated sums, from time to time, as the work shall progress. These bonds are to bear annual interest, accruing at a fixed rate; and to pay this interest as well as to discharge the principal sum mentioned in the bonds, the Act directs the municipal authorities of the city to levy an annual tax, in the same manner in which city taxes for general municipal purposes are collected, etc. The authorities of the city have pursued the directions given them by the legislature, so far as to prepare and deliver the bonds to the Disbursing Board; but they now refuse to levy the tax to pay the accruing interest thereon.

To compel them to do this the present application for a mandamus is made by the railroad company.

The application is resisted by the city upon a single ground—"that said Act of April 1, 1870, and all the provisions thereof, are, and ever have been, repugnant to, and in violation of the Constitution of the State of California."

It is thus made apparent that the case here must turn wholly upon the question of constitutional power in the Legislature to enact the statute, and that our duty begins and ends with a consideration of the mere point of law presented.

This is so obvious that no one will controvert it. It is so plain of itself that no reasoning nor process of demonstration could make it clearer. But, self-evident as it is, a perusal of the voluminous printed arguments on file admonishes us that it is not so plain but that it may easily be forgotten. Surely we are not here to pass upon the motives of the authors of the statute. Though "corruption may invade the halls of legislation, and the interests of the people be betrayed by their chosen representatives," and though "the Executive may prove faithless to his trust," the constitutional authority of these functionaries to enact this statute would, nevertheless, be precisely as broad and deep in its measure as though the Act in question were admitted to have found its inspiration in the wisest statesmanship and the purest public virtue.

It is unavailing, therefore, that the counsel for respondents should come here to complain that "it is notorious that the facility of influencing legislative bodies is such that the passage of any measure can be secured through the usual appliances; for even if, unfortunately, this be true, it is also true that we have no authority to reform these "legislative bodies," nor to call them to account for the manner in which they may have conducted the public business intrusted to their hands. Questions, too, which regard the mere policy of the statute — inquiries as to whether it is in itself a wise law or a foolish law; whether its anticipated operation will be to promote or to retard the true prosperity of the people — are not for us to consider; for these, and other questions cognate to these, involve the field of mere political inquiry, which it does not become us to enter, and which we cannot enter, except we overleap the barriers by which the limits of our rightful authority are plainly defined.

We have deemed it proper to say thus much in limine, in order that our purposed silence in regard to these matters, concerning which it is our duty to be silent here, may not be misconstrued or misunderstood.

The case before us requires an examination at our hands into the authority of the Legislature to enact the statute in question.

The authority of the judiciary in this country to consider of the extent of the legislative power in the enactment of laws was formerly denied in toto, and it will be remembered that in the early days of the Federal Constitution some of the most distinguished public men, among whom was Mr. Jefferson, maintained the opinion that no Court had the rightful authority to declare a statute unconstitutional which had received the sanction of the popular will, acting through its chosen representatives. It is known, too, that an impeachment of a Judge of a State Court of the highest grade was, at a later period, instituted for an attempt upon his part to uphold this power, admitted to be anomalous, and that upon his trial but a single vote was wanting to his conviction of the charge of usurpation of authority in his office.

Though the power itself is now admitted, it is, nevertheless, conceded to be always one of the utmost delicacy in its exercise, and never to be exerted except when the conflict between the statute and the Constitution is palpable and incapable of reconciliation. To this effect the authorities are substantially uniform.

In Santo v. The State of Iowa, 2 Iowa R. 208, Mr. Justice WOODWARD, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of Iowa, unanimous on this point, said:

“For some time after the establishment of the State Government, it was doubted whether the judiciary possessed authority to declare and hold an Act of the Legislature unconstitutional and void, and the exercise of the power was declined by some Courts. And now, although the power is universally admitted, its exercise is considered of the most delicate and responsible nature, and is not resorted to unless the case be clear, decisive, and unavoidable.”

And said the Supreme Court of Indiana (4 Ind. 344). “Such questions (involving the constitutionality of statutes) are always regarded by the Courts as of serious importance. The judiciary look to the Acts of the Legislature with great respect, and reconcile and sustain them if possible. The General Assembly is the immediate exponent of the popular will — expressly delegated to clothe that will with the forms of law. The presumption that such a body has sanctioned enactments in violation of the Constitution is not to be lightly indulged. That the Act is imperfect or impolitic is not enough. These defects subsequent legislation can remove by amendment or repeal. To bring its validity within the control of the Courts, it must be clearly subversive of the Constitution."

See, also, Rice v. Foster, 4 Harrington, 479; Fisher v. McGier, 1 Gray, 1; Commonwealth v. William, 11 Penn. 61, where the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania say: "Of late years it has been much the fashion to impeach the action of the legislative bodies as unconstitutional, when it happened not to accord with the party's notion of propriety and abstract right. This is very frequently done in sheer oblivion of the doctrine that express prohibition or necessary implication is essential to oust the State Legislature of authority."

We think that the adjudications in this court give the correct definition of the judicial power to declare a statute unconstitutional, as now maintained by the general current of authority. It is said (12 Cal. 384) that it "should never be exercised unless there be a clear repugnancy between the inferior and the organic law."

Again (17 Cal. 30): "But the legislative department, representing the mass of political powers, is no further controlled, as to its powers, or the mode of their exercise, than by the restrictions of the Constitution. Such restriction must be shown, before the action of the Legislature, as to fact or mode, can be held invalid."

Again (17 Cal. 551): "But it is equally well settled that this power (to declare an Act of the Legislature unconstitutional) is not to be exercised in doubtful cases, but that a just deference for the legislative department enjoins upon the Courts the duty to respect its will, unless the Act declaring it be clearly inconsistent with the fundamental law, which all members of the several departments of the Government are sworn to obey."

The law-making power is, in its essence and nature, the supreme power in the State, and the Legislature, in its exercise, impersonates the aggregated sovereignty of the people themselves.

Hence it results that the Legislature is politically omnipotent, except in those particulars in which its power has been limited, qualified, or absolutely withdrawn by the provisions of the Federal or the State Constitution. Said Chief Justice Black, in speaking of this feature of our organized political system: "If the people of Pennsylvania had given all the authority which they themselves possessed to a single person, they would have created a despotism as absolute in its control over life, liberty, and property as that of the Russian Autocrat. But they gave a portion of it to the United States, specifying what they gave, and withholding the rest. The power not given to the Government of the Union was bestowed on the Government of the State, with certain limitations and exceptions expressly set down in the State Constitution. The federal Constitution confers powers expressly enumerated; that of the State contains a general grant of all powers not excepted. The construction of the former instrument is strict against those who claim under it; the interpretation of the latter is strict against those who stand upon the exceptions, and liberal in favor of the Government itself. The Federal Government can do nothing but what is authorized expressly or by clear implication; the State may do whatever is not prohibited." (Sharpless v. Mayor of Philadelphia, 21 Penn. St. R. 160.)

These general views found early expression in this Court (People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46; Thorne v. San Francisco, id. 157), and have since been steadily maintained here. (6 Cal. 89; 13 Cal. 159; 17 Cal. 547; 26 Cal. 183.)

Whenever, therefore, it is alleged that a statute which has been enacted in due form by the legislative department of the Government of this State is, indeed, in excess of its authority to enact, it is necessarily the allegation of an exception to the contrary of an admitted general rule; and, therefore, the construction is "strict against those who stand upon the exception, and liberal in favor of the Government itself."

Hence, when we are called upon to declare that there was no authority for the Legislature to enact a particular statute, it is necessary that we be pointed to the clause or clauses of one or the other, or both, of these Constitutions, supposed to have taken away the power entirely, or limited it to something else than the subject to which the Legislature has applied it. It will not do to talk about the "spirit of the Constitution" as imposing a limitation upon the legislative power. The limitation ought to be something definite in itself—as definite as a sum to be subtracted from a larger one, in order to ascertain a balance.

The "spirit of the Constitution" as an interdiction upon legislative power was repudiated by this Court, in Patterson v. Board of Supervisors of Yuba County, 13 Cal. 182, in which Mr. Justice DANIEL, of the Supreme Court of the United States, is mentioned as having said that "if Judges were to adopt the notion that a law might be declared unconstitutional because of its supposed repugnance to the spirit of the Constitution, they ought to employ a rapping medium to procure authentic revelations from that spirit." The "spirit of the Constitution," as a means to ascertain the powers of other departments, would partake too much of the personal spirit of the individual Judges chosen for the time being to interpret that instrument, and, chameleon-like, it would be apt to prove white, or gray, or red, or bluish, or bottle green, as the peculiar views of those having the spirit in their keeping might give it color. However it may be urged upon a Court as a standard by which legislative power is to be measured in a particular case, such as that now at bar for instance, we think that even those who so urge it would hesitate long before they could be brought to inscribe it upon the Constitution itself, that the powers of each of the departments of the Government should actually be limited by the "spirit of the Constitution," as from time to time declared by the Courts.

The rule which requires that an alleged limitation upon the powers of the State Government should appear either by the words which the people have employed for that purpose, or by an implication necessarily flowing from those words, and without which the words themselves cannot have their natural force and fair import, is firmly established.

It assumes, and correctly assumes, that it was the intention of the people that their representatives should exercise all political power, except such as the people themselves have singled out, and have either forbidden to be exercised at all, or permitted to be exercised only upon certain conditions, and under stated circumstances.

If, however, there be among the great powers of government a single one upon which, more than upon any other, we would anticipate that the intended limitation of the power would have found exact and careful expression upon the face of the Constitution itself, that one would be the power involved in the case at bar — the power of taxation; for it is notorious that in this country and elsewhere (everywhere that government has found an organized existence among men), it has, more than any other, perhaps more than all other powers together, proven to be the exhaustless source of political disquiet and disturbance in the body politic. Its general history has been much the same in all countries where the people have aspired to be free, and have sought to obtain guarantees for the safety and the protection of their property against the unreasonable or irregular exactions of Government.

To go back somewhat less than three hundred years in the history of the country from whose political polity many of the most important features of our own system have been derived, we find an important tax controversy pending upon the point of the power to impose taxes upon the people, and the particular inquiry was, whether that power belonged to the King, by virtue of the royal prerogative, or was only to be exercised by the people themselves, through their representatives in Parliament.

It was in 1606 that Bates' case arose, upon an information in the Exchequer, in which the question was distinctly presented. It was recognized as one of surpassing importance to the English people, and in his argument against the asserted power of the Crown in that case, Mr. Yelverton gave expression to the popular view of the day when he said: "It is not what we shall be called, or how we shall divide what we have, but whether we shall have anything or nothing."

Bates' case was determined by the Court in favor of the Crown, as were other like cases which followed — among them the celebrated case of Hampden concerning the ship money. The controversy thus waged in the Courts led at last to the long and disastrous struggle which culminated in the overthrow of the Government and the establishment of the Protectorate. That all taxes must be laid by the people, through their representatives in Parliament, has been since firmly maintained in England. At the Restoration, even, amid the general national joy at the welcome event, it was not forgotten to resolve, that to tax in any other manner than "in Parliament is against the law of the land." The House of Commons alone has authority to originate bills of supply, and the upper branch of Parliament has no power to even amend such a bill, for the House of Commons only is composed of the representatives of the people.

In this country the Revolution, as is well known, originated in the same idea, so firmly fixed on the popular mind, that taxation should be imposed on the people only through their chosen representatives. Hence, in organizing the Federal Government, the House of Representatives was given the sole power of originating bills for taxation (Const. U. S., Art. I, Sec. 7); and various constitutional provisions upon this particular subject are to be found in the State Constitutions of some thirty-three of the States, in some of which the rule, that measures of taxation must originate only in the popular branch of the Legislature, is preserved, and in the others qualified or abrogated altogether.

It would be somewhat strange, in view of this history, if it should, after all, appear that those who framed the Constitutions of the State Governments in this country, and especially that of the State of California, should have, through mere inattention, failed to limit the power of taxation in every respect which was deemed practicable. We accordingly find in the Constitution of California, in section thirteen, Article II, an important limitation, not, indeed, upon the extent of the power itself, but upon the mere mode upon which it is to be exerted. Taxation is thereby required to operate equally and uniformly, and upon the ad valorem principle. No attempt was made to limit the power itself in the hands of the State Government. The Convention at Monterey knew very well that such an attempt would be an attempt upon the safety of the government which it was their purpose to establish — not imperil.

Taxation originates in the financial necessities of government. Those necessities are in themselves illimitable by human agency. The means of the supply, to be adequate, must be illimitable too. It cannot be foreseen by the framers of the Constitution, who would limit the power of taxation, what may be the necessities of the Government, at a given time, or under the pressure of attack from without or insubordination within its borders, or what pecuniary means it may need in its possible struggle with those difficulties which it is the very purpose of organized government to meet and overcome. To assure the public safety, therefore, dictates that the State be clothed with power to command its entire material resources.

Hamilton, in elaboration of this truth, says: "Money is with propriety considered as the vital principle of the body politic—as that which sustains its life and motion, and enables it to perform its most essential functions. A complete power, therefore, to procure a regular and adequate supply of it, as far as the resources of the community will permit, may be regarded as an indispensable ingredient in every Constitution. From a deficiency in this particular, one of two evils must ensue; either the people must be subjected to continual plunder as a substitute for a more eligible mode of supplying the public wants, or the Government must sink into a fatal atrophy, and in a short course of time perish." (Federalist, No. XXIX.)

The possible financial necessity of the Government may require all the wealth within its limits. The extent of the actual necessity is for the Legislature to determine in all cases; this is political power. It is the power to exhaust the substance of the people by a levy equal in amount to their aggregate wealth. Hence it was aptly said by Chief Justice MARSHALL, more than fifty years ago, in speaking of the power of taxation, as it existed under the American Constitutions in his day, that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." (McCulloch v. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 316.)

In the same case, the same great authority adds (p. 428):

"The only security against the abuse of the power is found in the structure of the Government itself. In imposing a tax, the Legislature acts upon its constituents. This is in general a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation. The people of a State, therefore, give to their Government a right of taxing themselves and their property, and as the exigencies of Government cannot be limited, they prescribe no limits to the exercise of this right, resting confidently on the interest of the legislators, and on the influence of the constituents over their representatives to guard them against its abuse."

The Convention at Monterey understood well that they had not limited the power of taxation in the State Government, and they understood, too, the reason why they could not venture upon the experiment. This is seen by section thirty-seven, Article IV, where they provide for restricting the power of municipal corporations to impose taxes. This restriction of the power of taxation in the hands of municipal corporations could be safely imposed, because the safety of the State was not supposed to be committed to the municipalities, in general charged with duties of a mere local and police character. That the Convention would have imposed a similar or some limitation upon the taxing power of the State, had it been considered advisable that day, cannot be doubted, for they limited the public indebtedness to a fixed sum, except under peculiar and named circumstances (Article VIII); and they utterly prohibited the loaning of the public credit for private purposes under any circumstances whatever (section ten, Article XI); but they omitted, and evidently ex industria, to place any limitation upon the mere power of the State to impose taxes. The principle upon which taxation is to be imposed by the State Government is pointed out by the Constitution, but the extent to which it may be carried is left unlimited, except by legislative discretion. It is to be exerted to raise money for public use.

The "public use," though mentioned in the Constitution, is not mentioned with reference to the power of taxation, or in connection with any limitation upon that power contained in that instrument.

It is declared (section eight, Article X) that private property shall not be taken for "public use" without just compensation. No constitutional definition of the words "public use" is, however, given in that instrument.

For much the same reason as that already mentioned, concerning limitation upon the power of taxation in the hands of the State Government, the "public use," upon which the power of eminent domain was to be exerted, seems to have been left, in large measure, to the determination of those who were clothed with its exercise, in view of possible contingencies with which they might be called to deal, rather than to attempt its restriction by anticipation.

"Public use," "public purpose," and "public policy" are much the same in import. "Public policy" — the policy upon which governmental affairs are conducted for the time being — is legislative policy in the main, and "public use" and "public purpose" are largely dependent upon this policy — notoriously varying in our country, from time to time, with the accession to power of political parties, differing from each other as to the system of measures best adapted to promote the interest of the State. The resolve of a legislative body, by which a tax is imposed, or private property taken, is, therefore, necessarily a legislative determination, that a public use is to be promoted by the tax, or the taking directed; and such a determination is the determination of a merely political question by the political department of the Government.

The Legislature, in the case before us, having determined the construction of the contemplated road from Stockton to Visalia to be a matter of public concern, and as such authorized taxation to aid in the work, the question arises as to how far that determination is open to review in Courts. That question was answered by this Court in the case of Napa Valley Railroad Company v. Napa County, 30 Cal. 437: "Railroads concern the public interest as matter of legal judgment, and however that conclusion may be opposed to the fact in the case at bar makes no difference, the action of the Legislature on the question not being open to review by the judicial department of the Government."

If we could review the legislative determination upon that point at all, a question would necessarily arise as to the extent to which that review could be carried here. Could we substitute our judgment upon the point for that of the legislative department absolutely, as we sometimes substitute our judgment for that of a Court from whose judgment an appeal has been prosecuted to this Court? If it was the intention that we should do so, it would seem that the law should have pointed out some mode by which we could get before us, in an authentic form, the facts and circumstances upon which the legislative department proceeded in the particular case. In the absence of a knowledge of these facts and circumstances we would ordinarily be unable to say that an error had been committed at all. A case might, indeed, be presented in which it might appear, beyond the possibility of a question, that a tax had been imposed, or the property of a citizen had been taken for a use or purpose in no sense public; or, in the language of Chancellor WALWORTH (5 Paige, 159), "where there was no foundation for a pretense that the public was to be benefited thereby," and in such case it would be our duty to interfere and afford relief. But should we interfere in any other than such a case, we would but substitute a policy of our own for the legislative policy in the conduct of the affairs of the State, and substitute our will for that of the representatives of the people. The legislative judgment may have discovered a public use and a public benefit in the encouragement of a particular class of improvements in the State; it may be a public use in the building of a bridge, a road, or a mill, and may, in that view, aid its construction by giving the public funds towards that end. We may be ourselves unable to see why the particular work thus selected for Government aid should be preferred to another work of equal, or, perhaps, in our judgment, of even greater public importance, but which has, nevertheless, been wholly overlooked; but we cannot, upon such a view, forbid the Government aid to the work selected, any more than we could direct a similar bounty to the other work, in our opinion unreasonably omitted. In Tennessee, for instance, a statute declared, at an early day, when grist mills were probably scarce, that every grist mill which should thereafter be built, and should at any time grind for toll, should be held and deemed, "and is hereby declared, to be a public mill." It is further provided that the miller should grind according to turn; that he should grind the grain well, if water would permit; that he should take no more than one eighth of the grain for grinding; that he should keep a certain description of grain measures, and then follows a penalty for keeping false measures or violating the other provisions of the statute. Under this statute one Goodlett applied, in 1832, to condemn the lands of one Harding, for the purpose of erecting a grist mill, sawmill, and paper mill thereon. The Supreme Court of Tennessee, upon this application, said: "The grist mill is a public mill. The miller is a public servant. He is allowed a compensation for grinding, etc. * * * It will appear, from what has been said, that when an acre of land is taken from any citizen for the purpose of erecting a grist mill, though the title be vested in another citizen, yet that vestiture is for a public use, and is wholly different from the case of taking property from one man and giving it to another for his private benefit only. * * * The petitioners say they are desirous to build a grist mill, sawmill, and paper mill. For these purposes they ask to have Harding's land vested in them. The sawmill and paper mill will have no public character; the erection of these mills would be wholly for the private use of these petitioners. To take Harding's land for such use would be unconstitutional." (Harding v. Goodlett, 3 Yerger, 53.)

The Legislature of Tennessee, in pursuance of a policy of its own, had seen fit to declare that a grist mill, grinding for toll, was a mill for public use — therefore the Court held it to be such. But the Legislature had not declared that a sawmill or a paper mill, however conducted, should be considered a public mill — therefore the Court could not hold them to be other than private in character. This case arose and was decided nearly forty years ago. The Court did not, at that day, undertake to announce a policy of its own and set it up against the policy of the legislative branch of the Government. It did not argue, either that the circumstance that the miller operated the mill for his "private profit," and received one eighth of the grist for grinding, necessarily made the mill private, and not public, in point of constitutional law; nor did it stop to inquire whether, if a grist mill operated in that way was indeed to be considered a public mill, it ought not to follow that a paper mill or a sawmill, working on the same terms, would also be public. The Court seems to have been of opinion that legislative policy has something to do with determining "public use" and "public purpose," and that it was just possible that Tennessee legislative policy might determine that the erection of grist mills in that State would promote a public purpose there, which would not be promoted by the erection of sawmills or paper mills. The Court seems to have been of opinion that this was a matter for legislative determination, and it accordingly upheld the authority of the Legislature to declare grist mills, though grinding for the "private profit" of the miller, to be public mills; it has not been suggested, either, that at that time the grist mill interest controlled the Legislature of the State of Tennessee or the decisions of her Courts. The true rule to be extracted from the cases, and which is applicable to the case at bar, is that if it is possible that the work or object selected by the Legislature for aid concerns the public use we must consider that it does in fact do so. If it is possible, therefore, that the City of Stockton may have a public interest in this railroad, then the legislative action is conclusive here that the city does, in fact, have such a public interest therein.

In the Sharpless case, supra, Chief Justice BLACK (speaking of the Acts under which Philadelphia aided in the construction of certain railroads), expressed this view when he said: "But it is not our business to determine what amount of interest Philadelphia has in either of these improvements. That has been settled by her own officers and by the Legislature. For us it is enough to know that the city may have a public interest in them, and that there is not a palpable and clear absence of all possible interest perceptible by every mind at the first blush. All beyond that is a question of expediency — not of law — much less of constitutional law." In Connecticut the rule by which the Court interprets the legislative action in such a case was declared in Booth v. Town of Woodbury, 32 Conn. R. 128. The Town of Woodbury was supposed to be bound to furnish thirty-two men to serve in the Federal army, under the call of the President during the late civil war. The Selectmen of the town, under instructions of a town meeting, proceeded to raise, on account of the town, some six thousand dollars, to be applied towards hiring substitutes for such citizens of the town as might be drafted thereafter, and the Legislature of the State subsequently ratified these proceedings by which this gratuity was given by the town. The Court say: "In the first place, if it be conceded that it is not competent for the legislative power to make a gift of the common property, or of a sum of money to be raised by taxation, where no possible public benefit, direct or indirect, can be derived therefrom, such action of the legislative power must be of an extraordinary character to justify the interference of the judiciary, and this is not that case. Second, if there be the least possibility that making the gift will be promotive in any degree of the public welfare, it becomes a question of policy * * * and the determination of the Legislature is conclusive. And such is this case. Such gifts to unfortunate classes of society, as the indigent blind, the deaf and dumb, or insane, or grants to particular colleges or schools, or grants of pensions, swords, or other mementoes for past services, involving the general good indirectly and in slight degree, are frequently made and never questioned."

Upon a similar question before it, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin expresses substantially the same views. It said: "To justify the Court in arresting the proceedings and declaring the tax void, the absence of all possible public interest in the purposes for which funds are raised must be clear and palpable—so clear and palpable as to be perceptible by every mind at first blush." (Broadhead v. The City of Milwaukee, 19 Wis. R. 652.)

In Schenley v. City of Alleghany, 25 Penn. R. 130, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania say "that the exercise of the taxing power by the Legislature must become wanton and unjust—be so grossly perverted as to lose the character of a legislative function—before the judiciary will feel themselves entitled to interpose on constitutional grounds.

step the mere actual necessities of the public administration. The popular understanding of the legislative power in this respect, derived from the known habits of the Government, must be found to be in accord with the learning of the books which treat of it. In California, for instance, did any one seriously question the authority of the Legislature to appropriate the public moneys to meet the personal wants of the overland emigration of 1852? Yet, in the absence of the legislative discretion involved, who could maintain that in point of mere constitutional law the overland emigrants had any right to be fed and clothed out of the public treasury more than other people?

Again: who has come to deny the validity of the legislative appropriation by which thousands of dollars have been and are being annually paid to General Sutter for his "private profit," as the respondent's counsel would express it? It is no answer to say that the appropriation of 1852 was prompted by a commendable sentiment of humanity, and that the pension to General Sutter is but the expression of the public gratitude towards a distinguished citizen whose personal kindness and generous conduct have justly won for him the popular esteem. These motives, however worthy in themselves, cannot be made to supply the requisite constitutional authority to give away the public moneys.

If the three hundred thousand dollars claimed by this railroad company be regarded as a mere gift of that much of the public moneys, it must, nevertheless, be upheld by the same construction of legislative power which would support the pension to Sutter. There is no provision of the Constitution which will authorize the gift to Sutter and deny it to the railroad company. The power to select the object of legislative bounty belongs to the Legislature itself, as well as the power to fix the amount to be given away. It will be difficult to draw the line of constitutional distinction between the legislative gratuity to Sutter for reasons of a public nature looking to the past, and the like gratuity to the railroad company for reasons of a public nature looking to the future.

We have mentioned the pension to Sutter, and the aid to the overland emigration of 1852, because they are prominent, but at the same time not exceptional instances of the exercise of legislative authority in the general history of the State Government under its present Constitution. Many other and similar instances may be mentioned. Premiums payable out of the public moneys have been habitually offered for the encouragement of mere private industry. The production of sugar from sorghum, the manufacture of molasses, the production of flax, hemp, cotton, tobacco, hops, raw silk, and the manufacture and production of various other articles by private parties and for "private profit," were stimulated by the offer of large sums from the public treasury, by the "Act for the encouragement of agriculture and manufactures in California." (Acts 1862, p. 415.) This policy is further maintained by the Act of April, 1866 (p. 660), "for the encouragement of silk culture in California," by which premiums are offered by the State for the growing of mulberry trees and production of silk cocoons, and the constitutionality of the Act was not even questioned here in The Attorney General v. The State Board of Judges, 38 Cal. R. 291, but the statute was substantially re-enacted in 1868 (p. 699); and an examination of the legislative Acts will disclose other like instances of the habitual expenditure of the public moneys, the validity of which no one has undertaken to call in question. In view of this public history, it cannot surely be claimed in any quarter that legislative authority to expend public moneys in the State was ever understood to be confined to merely keeping the Government in motion.

It has, indeed, habitually and notoriously overstepped that limit to find uses of a public character to be fostered by the expenditure of public moneys, and having done so, it is the legislative judgment which must determine whether or not the public interests are concerned in promoting any particular aim or object to a sufficient degree to justify the expenditure. This makes up legislative policy, for it is legislative policy which selects the objects to be aided, and determines the extent to which that aid should be carried.

In the case at bar, it determined the Stockton and Visalia Railroad to be a road for public use, and that, as such, the City of Stockton might donate three hundred thousand dollars towards its construction.

As we have already said, under the rule laid down by this Court in Napa Valley Railroad Co. v. Napa County, 30 Cal. 437, this legislative determination is conclusive upon this Court. It was there held that "railroads concern the public interest as matter of legal judgment," and that when the Legislature had determined that a particular road in fact concerns the public interest, its determination in that respect is not open to be reviewed by this Court.

Upon that authority we are precluded from any examination into the principal question which the respondent has argued here.

But even if the rule were otherwise the result would be the same. Should we undertake to review the legislative determination that this road concerns the public interest we could not disturb it, unless we are prepared to say that there is absolutely no possibility that the proposed road from Stockton to Visalia could in any degree promote the public welfare, and that there is an utter absence of all possible public interest in the enterprise, and that all this is so palpable as to be perceptible to every mind at the first blush.

We are to say this of a highway traversing a considerable portion of the State, and connecting two important commercial points. It is conceded by the respondent that the road in itself is one which the State might have lawfully constructed at the public expense. It is said in Blodgett v. The Mohawk and Hudson Railroad Company, 18 Wend. R. 1, "That the Government have not only the power, but that it is emphatically their duty and interest to construct railroads where the public interest and convenience demand them, cannot admit of a doubt; for such purposes they are authorized to take private property upon rendering just compensation; and they are, in like manner, justified in exacting tolls from those who travel on them as a means to reimburse the State for their construction and reparation. * * *

If, however, the State shall not deem it wise or expedient at its own expense to construct a railroad, can there be any doubt of its power to impart this authority to others?" The case involved the exercise of the power of eminent domain in behalf of a railroad company—the power of eminent domain, which is only to be exerted in aid of a "public use;" but, in our opinion, it is not the less an authority that taxation might have been imposed for the same purpose. There can be no difference between a "public use" which will authorize the taking of a private property, in aid of a particular road, and a "public use" which will support the laying of a tax in aid of the same road. We do not say that the power of taxation and that of eminent domain are the same in all respects—they both, however, proceed in invitum—both proceed, too, upon compensation real or supposed. That of taxation upon the idea that the Government protection to the citizen is his compensation; that of eminent domain upon the money compensation provided by the Constitution.

In either case, however, the power must rest for support upon the public use to be promoted; and a quasi public use will not be sufficient in the one case more than in the other. Such a use as a quasi public use is unknown to the Constitution, and is only an invention of those who, being driven to admit that the power of eminent domain may be exercised in aid of this road, are desirous, at the same time, to deny that taxation may be resorted to for the same purpose. The question as to whether taxation may be imposed in aid of such a road as this, has arisen and been directly decided under a Constitution not differing from ours in any point involved in the decision. Nearly twenty years ago the Supreme Court of Alabama had under consideration the validity of a statute to authorize the City of Mobile to donate three hundred thousand dollars to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, who were building a road to run from the city toward the mouth of the Ohio River. The company building the road was, in the language of the counsel resisting the Alabama statute, "a private corporation composed of private individuals, who, to promote private fortunes, and to reap the advantage of private enterprise, had associated themselves together," etc. The Supreme Court, however, decided that the donation might be constitutionally made through the exercise of the taxing power. It said that the power of taxation "extends to the employment of all those measures and appliances ordinarily adopted, or which may be calculated to develop the resources of the State and add to the aggregate wealth and prosperity of the citizens; such, for example, as sundry outlets for commerce, opening of channels of intercommunication between different parts of the State," etc. (Stein v. Mayor of Mobile, 24 Alabama R. 614.)

That Court accordingly upheld the validity of a tax imposed upon the real estate in the City of Mobile for the purpose of raising three hundred thousand dollars, and donating it to a railroad company who were constructing a railroad to run from the city in the direction of the mouth of the Ohio River.

In fact, we think that it may be said that the entire current of authority supports the constitutional validity of taxation imposed for such a purpose as that here in question.

It is not denied, for instance, that the State may, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, take from the unwilling proprietor the lands necessary for the building of this road — a road to be operated by a corporation for its “private profit;” that is conceded by all the authorities. Yet such a taking can only be supported upon the theory of a “public use” to be promoted by building the contemplated road.

Can there be a “use” which is sufficient, in a constitutional point of view, to seize the property of one, and at the same time insufficient to authorize taxation upon the property of all? If so, we have not found it.

In 1851 the Court of Appeals of the State of New York held that the public use which would support the exercise of the power of eminent domain would also uphold the power of taxation, and that really the power of taxation was in itself only one mode of taking private property for public use.

Upon this point the court said: “Private property may be constitutionally taken for public use in two modes: that is to say, by taxation and by right of eminent domain. * * * The right of taxation and the right of eminent domain rest substantially upon the same foundation. * * * Taxation exacts money or services from individuals as and for their respective shares of contribution to any public burden. Private property taken for public use by right of eminent domain is taken, not as the owner’s share of contribution to a public burden, but as so much beyond his share.”

We know that a distinction has, of late, been attempted between “public use” for purposes of eminent domain, and “public use” for purposes of taxation. In order to maintain the distinction, its authors have invented a new use, which is not exactly a public use, nor yet a private use, but a quasi public use. This quasi public use is of course something essentially different from the true "public use" named in the Constitution, otherwise there would have been no necessity for the invention of a new use at all; for in this instance as in others, necessity has proven to be the mother of invention. A quasi public use is therefore intended to be something more or something less than the "public use," pure and simple, mentioned in the Constitution, for that was found to be insufficient to maintain the desired distinction.

Those who have originated the phrase "quasi public use," have, however, omitted to give it a definition. Quasi, we understand to mean "as if," "as though," "as it were," etc. A quasi public use may be said, therefore, to be a use "as if" a public use, "as it were" a public use, "as though" a public use, but of course in reality not a public use at all. In fact, the term is employed for the sole purpose of distinguishing a mere fictitious public use from a real public use, and thereupon it is argued that the unbroken line of authority which concedes that the power of eminent domain may be exerted in favor of the road as being for public use, does not establish that the power of taxation may be exercised for the same purpose, because it is said that the public use which will support the former is not actual, but merely feigned—only quasi—but that the public use which is requisite to authorize taxation must be something more.

The result is that the license by which a citizen holds his money is of a higher and better character than the license by which he holds his land—reversing the rule by which the law is supposed to regard things real rather than things personal, and a "public use" to which one may lawfully refuse to contribute his money to-day is nevertheless one to which he may be compelled to surrender his house to-morrow.

But two or three of the Courts in the United States have in fact attempted to maintain a proposition so absurd in itself. Those Courts were lately characterized by the Supreme Court of the United States as "standing out in unenviable solitude and notoriety." (1 Wallace R. 206.) Among them at that time was the Supreme Court of Iowa. Since the submission of the case at bar we have, however, seen the opinion of that Court rendered in Stewart v. The Board of Supervisors of Polk County, and not yet reported [since reported in 30 Iowa, 9], in which the distinction is exploded in the following language:

"The right to exercise the power of eminent domain in behalf of railroads and other improvements of public utility is recognized by all Courts, and denied by no one. While admitting the right it is said that the Legislature has no constitutional power to levy a tax on the property of the citizen in aid of a railroad corporation, because it is a mere private enterprise.

"It has been abundantly shown that the object for which the right of eminent domain is exercised is a public one, for public utility, for 'public use,' within the meaning of the Constitution; and that this right can be exercised in behalf of these corporations on no other grounds. If, then, the building of a railroad is a public object, so as to authorize the taking of the private real property of the citizen — the highest species of property — for a right of way, is it any less a public object for the purpose of receiving aid, through the medium of taxation, to assist in building the road upon such right of way? The right of eminent domain and the taxing power are both sovereign powers. The former is limited to public use by express words in the Constitution. The latter is not, nor is it limited at all. * * * Conceding, however, that the taxing power ought not to be exercised except in behalf of a public object, it is unquestionable that it may be exercised for public purposes — for any object that will justify the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

"If the State can, for any purpose, take the land of a

The history of the question in Iowa illustrates, too, that powers political are for the political representatives of the people, and not for the Courts, to exercise; for the authority of the Legislature in the premises, now conceded by the Supreme Court of that State, had been repeatedly asserted by the Legislature, and as often denied by the Court for several years preceding the late decision in Stewart v. Board of Supervisors of Polk County.

It is said, however, that in the case at bar the act is not "taxation" within the meaning of the Constitution, because it is "simply taking the money of one man and giving it to another," and that therefore it is not the raising of money to meet "the public consumption or expenditure," nor to provide "for the use of the State, nor for the use or benefit of the State Government." This proposition is based upon the alleged fact that the corporation which is to receive this money is a private and not a public corporation, and that the road itself, when built, is to be operated by the corporation for its own benefit and profit.

The general power of the State Government to build such a road as this one is admitted. The authority to build it upon the basis here adopted is denied; it is claimed that the power to construct the road cannot be exercised through the agency of the railroad corporation. It is not the power to construct, but the mode of its exercise, which is thus questioned. We might put this objection at rest by simply repeating the language of Judge Baldwin in delivering the unanimous opinion of this Court in a case already cited (17 Cal. 30): "But the legislative department, representing the mass of political powers, is no further controlled as to its powers, or the mode of their exercise, than by the restriction." What provision of the Constitution has declared that the Legislature, in the prosecution of an enterprise per se of an admitted public character, shall employ no private agency, or shall take care that no private person shall derive pecuniary profit thereby? or in what clause is there to be found a constitutional inhibition of the "mode" here adopted?

Too much prominence in argument here has, however, been imparted to this view to justify us in thus passing it by, conclusive as we deem the answer already given. At every step in the discussion upon the part of the city, we meet the multifarious proposition that "public use" and "private profit" cannot go hand in hand in the prosecution of this enterprise; that there is a fatal antagonism between the two; and that the moment that "private profit" lifts itself into view upon one side of the proposed work, "public use" must disappear from the other. In a case involving the same objection, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts said: "But it is said that this grant was made upon the petition and for the sole benefit of an individual, and was not needed for the accommodation of the public. It is doubtless true that the leading motive of the defendant in erecting the bridge was private profit, and so almost all other enterprises, many of which have resulted in great public improvements, have originated in motives of private gain." To our minds, however, the fallacy involved is so apparent that neither illustration nor argument can set it in a clearer light. It is exposed by a mere reference to the usual and ordinary mode of conducting the public business. Government habitually moves through the agency of employees in executing its purposes; these employees must be compensated in some way; and here we come, unavoidably in every instance, upon the spectre of "private profit," which must, upon this view, frighten the Government from the prosecution of any public enterprise whatever.

If an incorporated stage company, for instance, should put in a bid for carrying the mails at a fixed compensation, would any one doubt that it was the sole purpose of the company to obtain for itself a portion of the public moneys? Would any one attribute to it a motive of a less selfish character, or claim that a consideration of the public good had in the slightest degree actuated it in making its bid? Surely not. But, upon the other hand, if Government should accept the bid at the proposed price, would not its known purpose be to promote a public service of recognized importance? Could any one claim that its object in providing for carrying the mail was less public in its character because the prosecution of that purpose incidentally afforded "private profit" to the stage company? Surely not; yet the case we have supposed has been of constant occurrence from the earliest organization of the Government, in providing for the mail service.

We have instanced a familiar case by way of illustration. It might be indefinitely extended into all the varied circumstances in which Government is to be supplied—to public printing, army stores, etc.—in all which private profit is the avowed motive on the one side, and the "public service" the true object on the other.

In 1831, the case of Beekman v. Saratoga and Schenectady Railroad Company, 3 Paige, 73, was decided by Chancellor WALWORTH. In that case it appeared that a railroad company, in constructing their road from Saratoga Springs to Schenectady, had seized upon certain real estate in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. There, as here, no question was made but that the State of New York might have built the proposed road itself, and might have appropriated the land in question, and applied the public moneys also for that purpose. The objection of Van Vechter, for the complainant (whose pleasure grounds around his country residence had been invaded), was that "the defendants are a private corporation, and the road when made will be private property; it will not be for public use, but for the private use and emolument of the company, etc. In fact, the argument of the counsel for the complaint upon that point presented it with a force never surpassed in any case falling under our notice. The Chancellor, in deciding the case, assumed, for the purpose of the decision, that the company was in truth a private company, in the exact sense claimed by counsel. He declares, however, that it belongs to the Legislature to determine if the public interest will in any way be promoted by the taking of private property for such a purpose. He states that it is upon this principle that lands of one private individual are permitted to be overflowed and condemned in order that another may obtain a mill site; and that not only agents of the Government "but also individuals and corporate bodies have been authorized to take private property for the purpose of making public highways, turnpike roads, and canals; of erecting and constructing wharves and basins; of establishing ferries; of draining swamps and marshes," etc. In all such cases the object of the legislative grant of power is the public benefit derived from the contemplated improvement, whether such improvement is to be effected directly by the agent of the Government, or through the medium of corporate bodies, or of individual enterprise. And, according to the opinion of Chief Justice MARSHALL, in the case of Wilson v. The Blackbird Creek Marsh Company, 2 Peters R. 251, "measures calculated to produce such benefits to the public, though effected through the medium of private incorporations, are undoubtedly within the powers reserved to the States," etc. It must be observed that the Chancellor in this case, following the view of the Chief Justice of the United States — each of them distinguished for learning and ability — holds that public improvements of this nature may be effected by the State Government, "through the medium of corporate bodies or of individual enterprise." But how is this power to be availed of, if the corporation or individual selected for the purpose is to derive no "private profit" thereby? Can such service be obtained without pecuniary compensation in some way awarded? The counsel has not suggested in this connection that it would be possible to find a corporation or an individual so public-spirited as to undertake an agency in effecting the proposed public improvement without the expectation of "private profit" to accrue, nor is it believed that even in the earlier day in which the Chancellor and the Chief Justice lived private agencies of such a wholly disinterested character were to be readily found. When it is said, therefore, that the Government possesses the power to prosecute a public enterprise through an agency private in its character, the power to compensate such an agency is at the same time necessarily conceded, for otherwise the power to make the employment would be practically incapable of execution, and a power incapable of execution is no power at all.

The power to compensate the private agency thus employed is therefore clear enough, and if this be so it must be admitted that the measure of that compensation and the mode in which it is to be afforded are mere details which will vary with the prevailing habits of the public service, the condition of the public treasury, or the mere policy which would seem to recommend one plan of making compensation as preferable to another plan. Suppose, for instance, that the entire gross proceeds of the business are to be paid into the treasury of the State, and the "private agency" by which the road was built and is operated is to receive from the State a sum equal to a fixed per centum of the ascertained cost of the road, with or without allowance for deterioration by use, as the case may be, or that the net profits earned by the road are to be equally divided between the State and the "private agency," or that the gross proceeds paid into the treasury shall be returned to the agency after certain deductions are there made; or suppose that the State is to have the authority to require that sufficient means of transportation for all persons and property to be carried shall be kept in readiness on the road that so many trains of cars, of a designated character, shall regularly at stated times pass over the road; that the road shall be kept in repair at the expense of the corporation operating it, and without any expense to the State, and that as its "private profit" for rendering this service the "private agency" by which it is performed shall receive compensation from those who use the road at a rate not exceeding that which the State itself may from time to time prescribe. These, and an infinite variety of other methods which might be suggested, would be but different ways of effecting compensation for services rendered by a private agency in operating and maintaining a work of public use. Of the propriety of the mode of compensation adopted in a particular case it is for the Legislature to judge, and we know no provision of the Constitution which is violated in the mode adopted here.

The legislative and executive departments of the Government seem to have deliberately reached the conclusion that a "public use" was to be promoted by the construction and operation of a railroad such as the Stockton and Visalia road is designed to be, and, even if in so doing they have abused or mismanaged the constitutional authority over the subject, that circumstance would afford no justification to us for the assumption of unauthorized powers for the correction of such abuses.

No amount of supposed public good to follow would excuse us for the usurpation of powers not belonging to the judicial department of the Government. "There is always some plausible reason (says BRONSON, J.) for the latitudinarian constructions which are resorted to for the purpose of acquiring power—some evil to be avoided, or some good to be attained by pushing the powers of Government beyond their legitimate boundary. It is by yielding to such influences that Constitutions are gradually undermined and finally overthrown. One step taken by the Legislature or the judiciary in enlarging the powers of the Government, opens the door for another that will be sure to follow; and so the process goes on until all respect for the fundamental law is lost and the powers of the Government become just what those in authority choose to call them." (3 Coms. 568.)

The power of the State Government to foster and regulate internal improvements is unquestionable. Should we, in this instance, deny to the legislative department the possession of this power, or should we attempt to narrow its clear constitutional scope by applying to it the arbitrary measure of our own view of wise policy in the conduct of public affairs, we would, in the hope of accomplishing a temporary good, permanently mar the symmetry of the structure of the Government itself, so far at least as a decision of ours could be permitted to work such an unfortunate consequence to the State. Though late events have awakened the general public attention to an anxious consideration of the extent of the legislative power upon this subject, those events have not as yet fixed a new limit to the power itself as it has heretofore existed, nor would they justify us in stepping aside from the well beaten track which we follow to tread upon the new and strange paths into which some, though few, of our brethren of the bench have, we hope but temporarily, wandered.

No proposition in the case can be affirmed with greater confidence than that, under Constitutions substantially like ours, railroads, though operated by private companies, are by mere legal conclusion, for "public use;" that the power of eminent domain, confessedly exercisable only in behalf of "public use," may therefore be exerted in behalf of railroads under legislative permission; that as fostering the "public use," aid may be extended to the construction of such roads by means of the power of eminent domain, or of subscription to capital stock, and by donations made by cities and other political subdivisions of the State, under the authority of the Legislature first given (or subsequently obtained, as was held in 1848 by the Supreme Court of Connecticut in City of Bridgeport v. Housatonic Railroad, 15 Conn. R. 475), and such is the purport of the judicial decisions of the highest Courts of Virginia, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, Illinois, Kentucky, New York, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Mississippi, Missouri, South Carolina and other States. These decisions cover a period of little less than half a century of time; and they embody the views of constitutional law with reference to the question before us which were entertained by some of the most distinguished jurists who have shed luster upon the American bench. They are cited in the briefs, and will be found to be not the mere expression of conclusions reached upon the points involved, but, in many instances, elucidated by a learning and research absolutely exhaustive of the general principle of the law of taxation as applied to the system of Government under which we live.

Upon authority, and upon principle as well, we think that the Act in question cannot be said by us to be, in any sense, unwarranted by the Constitution, or beyond the authority of the Legislature to enact.

It is ordered that the writ of mandamus issue as prayed for.

CROCKETT, J., concurring:

I concur with Mr. Justice WALLACE in the result at which he has arrived, and for the most part in his reasoning; but without attempting an elaborate investigation of the questions discussed by him, I propose, nevertheless, to state, very briefly, the points which, in my opinion, are decisive of the action.

Opinion of Crockett, J., concurring.

First— It is established by an unbroken current of decisions, by Courts of the highest authority in this country, that under the right of eminent domain lands held in private ownership may be taken for the use of private railroad corporations, on making compensation therefor; and that this is a public use, in the sense of that clause of the Constitution which permits private property to be taken by virtue of the right of eminent domain. This proposition is now too firmly established by a long and uniform series of decisions, to be overthrown or shaken, at this late day, except by an amendment of the Constitution; and if the taking of such lands for the use of a private railroad corporation is a public use, which justifies the exercise of the right of eminent domain on behalf of such corporations, I can perceive no reason whatever why taxation imposed to aid in the construction of the road is not for a public purpose. In the former case, though the land taken is devoted to the use of a private corporation, which owns and controls the road, and exclusively enjoys its emoluments, the use is, nevertheless, held to be public, in the sense of the Constitution, because one of the most important functions of government is to provide highways for the people, by which commerce is promoted and the general prosperity increased.

In the performance of this duty it is not doubted by any one that the State may itself construct these highways, and defray the cost of them out of the public treasury or by the imposition of a special tax for that purpose. No one questions that such a tax would be for a public purpose. But, instead of itself performing the work by its agents, employed and paid for that purpose, the State may avail itself of the aid, energy, and skill of private corporations, and construct highways which, in the opinion of the Legislature, will promote commerce, develop the resources of the country, and increase the general prosperity. It is on this theory only that the exercise of the right of eminent domain can be invoked or justified on behalf of private railroad corporations. In such cases the land is deemed to be taken for a public use only because it is the duty of the State to provide such highways for the people; and it is the peculiar province of the Legislature to determine when and where such highways are necessary.

From its decision on this point there can be no appeal to the Courts, and the only remedy for an abuse of its powers in this respect, must be found at the ballot box or in an amendment of the organic law. Assuming, therefore, that it is solely on this theory that the exercise of the right of eminent domain can be invoked on behalf of private railroad corporations (a proposition which I deem to be thoroughly well established both on reason and authority), I think it follows as a logical sequence that the same principle which enjoins upon the Legislature the duty of providing convenient highways for the people, and in furtherance of that end justifies the exercise of the right of eminent domain in behalf of private railway corporations, must, of necessity, authorize the imposition of taxes to aid in the construction of the road. If the use of the land taken is public, the purpose of the tax is also public, and for precisely the same reason, inasmuch as they both spring from and are founded on the duty of the State to provide highways for the public convenience, and are both intended solely to promote that object.

Both being designed to accomplish the same result, to wit, to promote the construction of a highway, which the Legislature, in the performance of its duty, has determined to be a work of public utility, and in furtherance of the public prosperity, if the use for which the land is taken is to be deemed a public use, I think it is impossible to resist the conclusion that the purpose for which the tax is levied is a public purpose. In respect to the question whether the use in the one case or the purpose in the other is public or private, they stand on precisely the same footing, inasmuch as they both spring from the same public duty, and are both intended to promote the same public work of general utility. Nor does the fact that the road is to be owned and controlled by a private corporation, for its own emolument, any the more prove, or tend to prove, that the purpose of the tax is private, than the same fact would prove, or tend to prove, that the land was taken for a private and not for a public use, for the obvious reason that inasmuch as the ownership and control of the road is not one of the elements which enter into the question whether the use is public or private, it can have no effect, for the same reason, in determining whether the purpose of the tax is public or private. The object of the Legislature in permitting the land to be taken is not to benefit the corporation, but to promote the construction of a highway, which it deems to be a work of public utility; and, in like manner, the purpose of the tax is not to enrich the corporation, but to secure the construction of the road. If the corporation is incidentally, or even directly, benefited by the use of the land and money, the Legislature has, nevertheless, performed a public duty in thus providing a highway designed to promote commerce, and increase the general prosperity. On no other theory can the exercise of the right of eminent domain, in behalf of private railway corporations, be justified or defended, and a tax levied to promote the work stands on precisely the same footing.

Second — If any question of constitutional construction can be said to be settled by the weight of authority, it is, that under State Constitutions almost identical, in this respect, with our own, the Legislature has the constitutional power to authorize municipal corporations to subscribe for stock in private railroad corporations, organized to construct a road passing through, or terminating within, the territorial limits of the municipality; and to levy a tax to pay for such subscriptions. The decisions on this point run through a period of nearly forty years, and are not only very numerous, but almost uniform. I shall not attempt to review or collate these authorities; and it is sufficient, on this point, to say that the power of the Legislature, under Constitutions similar to ours, in this respect, to authorize such subscriptions and tax, is now too firmly established in American jurisprudence to be either questioned or denied.

In very few of the States has this power been more broadly asserted, or more persistently maintained, than by the Courts of this State; and if the rule of stare decisis is to have any weight on such a subject, the question should be considered as no longer open to debate in this Court. With an unbroken line of decisions on this point, running through so long a period, and emanating from Courts of the highest authority in this country, it is now too late to inquire whether the question has been settled properly or otherwise. The repose and good order of society demand that when a question of this character has been firmly settled, by a long series of judicial decisions, it should not be opened to further discussion in the Courts. In such cases, if the interpretation of a clause of the Constitution by the judiciary, which has been long acquiesced in, and repeatedly reaffirmed, shall be found to operate injuriously, it would be better to obviate the difficulty by an amendment of the organic law rather than to encounter the evils, which invariably flow from sudden and frequent changes in the construction by the Courts of constitutional provisions. Assuming it, therefore, to be definitely settled, so far as judicial interpretation can settle such a question, that the Legislature has the constitutional power to authorize municipal corporations to subscribe for the stock of private railroad companies, and to levy a tax for the payment of such subscriptions, it only remains to be determined whether there is any difference in principle between a tax levied to pay for a subscription to such stock and a tax raised for the purpose of donating a sum of money to aid in the construction of the road. In the case of the subscription, the validity of the tax can be maintained, I think, on no other solid ground than that already indicated, to wit: that it is the duty, and within the power, of the Legislature, to provide highways for trade and travel; and, being the sole judge of the times and places at which such highways are needed, it may aid their construction, by means of subscription, by those municipal corporations through (and possibly near) whose territorial limits the road will pass. I am aware that in such cases the validity of the tax has frequently been upheld, partly on other grounds; and some of the decisions in support of the taxing power in that class of cases proceed on the theory that the tax is for a public purpose, because, by means of the subscription, the municipal corporation, and consequently all the people within its limits, acquire a proprietary interest in the road and its earnings, and are entitled to a voice in its management. But if the validity of the tax is to rest on this theory only I think it could not be maintained. If the fact that the municipality is to have a proprietary interest in the enterprise, and to participate in its management, is to be the sole test by which to determine whether the tax is for a public or private purpose, without reference to the nature of the enterprise, it needs no argument to prove that municipal corporations and their members—the people who compose them—are wholly at the mercy of the Legislature, and hold their estate only by its sufferance. If the Legislature should determine it to be necessary that a town or city should have a beet-sugar manufactory, a wholesale clothing store, a dozen iron foundries, and several pianoforte manufactories, and should direct the corporation to subscribe for stock in private companies, organized to accomplish these enterprises, and to levy a tax on all the people of the municipality to pay for the stock, it is obvious that the people might thus be compelled, against their will, to embark their estates in purely commercial enterprises, on the plea that in the opinion of the Legislature the public would derive some incidental benefits therefrom. In such a case, if the question whether the tax is for a public or a private purpose is to be determined solely by the fact that the municipal corporation is to have a proprietary interest in the contemplated enterprise, and to participate in its management, irrespective of the public or private nature of the enterprise itself, it is obvious that under so broad a construction of the Constitution all restraint would be practically removed from the power of the Legislature over the property and estates of the people. It might compel the inhabitants of towns, cities or counties, without their consent, to invest their capital in commercial enterprises of perhaps more than doubtful expediency, and with a moral certainty that the investment would prove disastrous. I think the framers of the Constitution could not have intended to confer upon the Legislature, under the taxing power, a discretion so wholly devoid of restraint, and so capable of gross abuse. The extent of its power over municipal corporations, in respect to taxation, is not to be measured by the fact that the corporation is or is not to have a proprietary interest in the enterprise to be promoted by the tax, but depends on wholly different considerations, having no relation to that question.

If the work to be accomplished be confessedly of a public nature, as contradistinguished from a private enterprise, there can be no doubt of the constitutional power of the Legislature to promote its construction by contributions from the public treasury; or if the work be local, then by authorizing the particular municipality in which the proposed improvement is located, to aid it by subscriptions of stock, to be paid for by taxation; and, as already stated, this proposition is now too firmly established to admit of debate. But it proceeds on the theory that the subscription is intended, not simply as a profitable investment of the funds of the municipality, but solely for the purpose of promoting the construction of a highway for trade and travel. Though the subscription may directly benefit the railway corporation, and though the investment may possibly prove profitable, these are not the primary objects of the tax, but only incidental to the main purpose, which is to secure the construction of the road. If it were known in advance that the stock would be utterly valueless in the market, and that the road would never pay a dollar in dividends, this would in no degree impair the validity of the tax, the main object of which was to secure the construction of the road as a convenience for trade and travel, to enhance the value of contiguous property, and to increase the general prosperity. This being the primary object of the tax, the benefit to the railway company, and the investment of the funds of the municipality in the stock, are only incidents which in no wise affect the purpose of the tax, or prove it to be for a public or private purpose. The sole purpose of the tax being to secure the construction of the road, which is undeniably a public purpose, it is none the more so because the money raised by the tax is invested in stocks of the company, nor any the less so because the railway corporation derives a benefit from the investment. Neither of these considerations touches the question of the primary purpose for which the tax was raised, to wit: to promote the construction of the road. If these views be correct, it results as a logical sequence that if money be raised by taxation to be donated to the railroad company, for the sole purpose of securing the construction of the road, the purpose of the tax would be none the less public than if the same result was accomplished by an investment of the money in the stock of the company. My conclusion, thereafter, is that the Act of the Legislature in question does not violate the Constitution.

It cannot be denied that it is extremely difficult to define, with exact precision, the line which limits the constitutional power of the Legislature in authorizing the imposition of taxes by municipal corporations, to promote the construction of local improvements by private persons or corporations; and it is obviously a power which is capable of great abuse. That it has been frequently and grossly abused in some of the States of the Union is attested by the enormous debts which have thus been created, and the popular discontent which has ensued. In several of the States the evils resulting from legislation of this character had become so intolerable as to lead to amendments of their Constitutions, limiting or clearly defining the powers of the Legislature in this respect; and this is, manifestly, the only effective remedy. In a popular Government, like ours, where the tenures of office are short, and changes are constantly occurring in those who make and administer the laws, the only security against such abuses will be found in an amendment of the organic law. Under its existing provisions the courts are, in a great measure, powerless to remedy the evil.

SPRAGUE, J., concurring:

I concur in the order solely upon the ground that I cannot now regard the questions involved in this case as open questions in this State under our Constitution as it is. This Court having, by a uniform line of decisions, commencing with Patterson v. Marysville, 13 Cal. 175, sustained and sanctioned laws substantially obnoxious to the same constitutional objections as the statute involved in this case, the questions should be considered settled. Could I regard the questions involved as original in this State, I should not hesitate in denying the order asked by the petitioner, notwithstanding the long array of authorities from other States to the contrary.

TEMPLE, J., concurring:

I concur in the order made in this case solely upon the ground that I regard the question as settled by the previous decisions of this Court, as well as by the almost unbroken current of authorities in other States. I differ from much of the reasoning of my associates, and if the question were new, should be inclined to agree with the respondent upon the main question discussed. To overturn the almost unbroken line of decisions now, however, would not establish a rule of decision, but would make an exception merely, in the current of authorities. It would shake the confidence of every one in the stability of judicial decisions, and would add nothing to the force of limitations upon legislative power. The people can readily circumscribe this power without doing violence to established precedents or destroying the confidence of the community in that branch of the Government which should be least influenced by popular pressure.

POWER OF ATTORNEY FOR SALE OF LAND.—A power of attorney, giving to the attorney in fact full authority to represent the person of the principal in all that concerns his interest in the State of California, and to annul any other power previously granted, and letters afterwards written by the principal to the attorney, speaking generally of the propriety of the sale of land in California belonging to the principal, and of the price and terms, and telling the attorney he can give a provisional writing of sale, and to make a sale and it will be approved, do not confer authority upon the attorney to bind the principal by a contract of sale.

JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURT.—The question whether the Probate Court has jurisdiction to specifically enforce the performance of a contract for the sale of real estate, not decided.

APPEAL from the Probate Court, Los Angeles County.

Eulogio de Celis, who resided in Bilbao, in the Kingdom of Spain, owned an undivided one half of a tract of land in Los Angeles County, known as the ex-Mission of San Fernando. On the 4th day of November, 1864, he executed and sent to his son, Eulogio F. de Celis, who was living in said county, a power of attorney, written in alternate lines of Spanish and English, of which the following is a copy:

Sepan todos como yo Eulogio de Celis, residente en este villa

Know all men that I, Eulogio de Celis, of this Town of Bilbao, Espana, otorgo poder general a mi hijo Eulogio of Bilbao, Spain, grant general power to my son, Eulogio Fidencio de Celis, natural de Los Angeles, California, para que Fidencio de Celis, native of Los Angeles, California, to represente mi persona en todo lo concerniente a mis intereses, represent my person in all that concerning my interest, presentes y futuros, en el referido pais de California, como tambien present and future, in the said State of California, as well bien los de todo sus hermanos legitimos, coherederos, partícipes, as those of all his legitimate brothers, coheirs, copartners, estando ademas autorizado para anular cualquiera otra poder he being also authorized to annul any other power dado por me a favor decualquiera otra persona en California y granted by me to any other person in California and terretoriode America; dado el presente sobre todos los anteriores territory of America; the present being given upon all hasta esta f^o ha; reclamando cuentas, propiedades, intereses, previous powers to this date, claiming accounts, properties, exigiendo responsabilidades, pagos a los deudores y administraattorney. (General Laws, Sec. 669; Story on Agency, Sec. 76; Paley on Agency, by Lloyd, n. 179 and n. 198.)

Pringle & Pringle, for Respondents.

The power of attorney, if not sufficient to authorize a sale of lands, was yet the constitution of an agency to which the subsequent letters supplied the necessary power. Those letters were exhibited to the petitioners and relied on by them in making their contract. They were sufficient to empower the agent to make a contract of sale. The powers given were ample for that purpose (McNeil v. Shirley, 33 Cal. 202.) The father gives to his son every power except that of making the deed. He withholds that only to insure his compliance with the instructions given. The acts of the son, within those instructions, are certainly binding upon the father. "As regards the bill of sale, you can give a provisional obligation while the deed comes, that we may return it, signed by himself and your mother." "Sell property, and the sale will be approved."

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The power of attorney and the letters of the principal were not sufficient authority to the attorney in fact to bind the principal by a contract of sale of the lands in controversy. The question whether the Probate Court has jurisdiction of a proceeding to specifically enforce the performance of a contract of sale of real estate is reserved.

EX PARTE ELIZABETH JONES, AND ELLEN ELLWOOD.

RELEASE ON BAIL NOT IMPRISONMENT.—Within the meaning of the Criminal Practice Act, a prisoner released on bail is not imprisoned during such release.

ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT IN CRIMINAL CASE.—When a certified copy of a judgment in an appellate Court is remitted to the Court from which the appeal is taken, the appellate Court loses all jurisdiction of the case; and all orders necessary to carry the judgment into effect must be made by the lower Court. This provision of the statute is not confined to judgments in the Supreme Court, but is applicable to proceedings in the County Court.

COMMITMENT AFTER APPEAL.—When a party is convicted of a criminal offense and appeals to the County Court, and, pending the appeal, is released on bail, and the judgment is affirmed, a second commitment need only recite the judgment of conviction, and state that defendant appealed and the judgment was affirmed. It need not recite the judgment of the County Court, or that a remittitur had been issued.

PETITION to be discharged on habeas corpus.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

George W. Tyler, for the Petitioners.

Attorney General Hamilton, for the People.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The petitioners were convicted in the Police Court of San Francisco on the 7th day of October, 1870, of the crime of petit larceny, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the County Jail for the period of four months. From this judgment an appeal was taken to the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco, and the appeal having been perfected, the petitioners were admitted to bail, which having been given, they were discharged from custody on the 26th day of October, 1870.

Opinion of the Court—Temple, J.

The petitioners are now held upon a commitment issued by the Police Court, which, after reciting the judgment in the same words as in the first commitment, proceeds as follows: "Said defendants having appealed from said judgments to the honorable County Court of said city and county, and said judgments having been affirmed by said County Court," etc.

It is claimed that the commitment should recite the judgment, and that the statement in regard to the appeal is no part of the judgment and should be stricken out. This would leave nothing but the original judgment of October, 1870, which being appealed from, does not authorize the imprisonment of the petitioners; or, if it does, that more than four months have expired since its date, and petitioners are therefore entitled to their discharge. That the fact that the petitioners were released on bail is an immaterial circumstance, for the reason that they were still, in contemplation of law, in custody—the effect of giving bail being merely to constitute their bail their jailors, in place of the Sheriff.

For some purposes it may be true that a person released on bail is still in the custody of the law. The same degree of certainty is supposed to be secured, that he will be forthcoming to receive the punishment pronounced upon him, or that he will render himself in satisfaction of the judgment. This is appropriate language in reference to a civil proceeding, where the bail undertake to pay the debt, or that the defendant will render himself in satisfaction of the judgment.

The very phrase, however, "released on bail," implies that a person so released is not imprisoned after such release; and such is manifestly the meaning of the provisions of the Criminal Practice Act.

Section five hundred and four provides that when judgment of an appellate Court is given it shall be entered in the minutes and a certified copy remitted to the Court from which the appeal was taken. Section five hundred and six enacts, that upon remitting this certificate the appellate Court shall lose all jurisdiction of the case, and all orders necessary to carry the judgment into effect shall be made by the Court to which the case is remitted. This provision does not seem to be confined to judgments in this Court; on the contrary, the preceding section, which provides that the papers returned to the appellate Court shall not be returned to the Court below, seems particularly applicable to proceedings in the County Court.

The judgment of the appellate Court is required to be certified to the lower Court, in order that the original judgment may be carried into effect by the lower Court, as directed by the appellate tribunal. If the certificate had been remitted in this case—affirming the judgment—the order made by the Police Court would be a proper order to be made to carry the original judgment into effect. It asserts the facts necessary to authorize the Court to make it; and it is not shown, or even asserted, that it is incorrect in that particular. I think we are bound to presume in favor of the regularity of the proceedings to that extent.

It is ordered that the writ be discharged and the prisoners remanded to the custody of the Sheriff, to be held in pursuance of the commitment.

DISCHARGE OF A JURY IN A CRIMINAL CASE.—The discharge of the jury, impaneled in a criminal case, without the consent of the defendant, because, after mature deliberation, they are unable to agree on a verdict, is not an acquittal of the defendant, and does not entitle him to immunity from further prosecution for the same offense.

Opinion of the Court—Sprague, J.

REVIEW OF CRIMINAL CASE IN APPELLATE COURT.—The action of the Court in discharging a jury in a criminal case, because of its inability to agree on a verdict, is subject to review by the appellate Court.

HABEAS CORPUS.—A prisoner, confined on a criminal charge, is not entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus, because a jury impaneled to try him was discharged by the Court, without his consent, by reason of its inability to agree on a verdict.

WHAT CANNOT BE TRIED ON HABEAS CORPUS.—Neither a Court nor Judge will, on habeas corpus, investigate or decide the question whether a jury impaneled to try the prisoner was properly or legally discharged by the Court, because of its inability to agree on a verdict.

ADMISSION TO BAIL.—Case stated why a prisoner charged with a capital offense was admitted to bail.

THE facts are stated in the opinion.

Coffroth & Spaulding, for Petitioner.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

Original writ of habeas corpus issued out of Supreme Court, and heard at chambers before Justices SPRAGUE, WALLACE, and TEMPLE.

The facts, as presented by the petition of the applicant and the return to the writ of the officer having him in custody, are substantially as follows: At the July, term, 1870, of the County Court for Sacramento County, the applicant was indicted, by a Grand Jury impaneled by said Court, for the alleged crime of murder. Upon the presentation of the indictment, a bench warrant was issued by the said County Court, upon which applicant was arrested, and by the Sheriff of Sacramento County held in custody to answer the indictment in the District Court of said County; and afterwards, on the seventh day of February, at the February term, 1871, of the District Court for Sacramento County, said indictment was called for hearing, and petitioner, under the same, was placed upon his trial before a legally organized trial jury, duly charged with his case. On the tenth day of February, the evidence on behalf of the State and the petitioner having been fully presented to the Court and jury, and arguments of counsel on both sides closed, the cause was submitted to the jury at the hour of four o'clock P. M. of said day, and they retired to deliberate upon their verdict, in charge of an officer, and continued their deliberations until eleven o'clock A. M. of the twelfth of February, when the jury returned into court in charge of the officer—the petitioner, with his counsel, being present—stated their inability to agree, and asked to be discharged from further consideration of the case, to which the petitioner and his counsel objected, and insisted that the jury should again retire for further deliberation; and thereupon the Court caused an order to be entered in its minutes reciting the facts substantially as above; and further, that “the Court, being fully satisfied that there is no possibility of said jury agreeing upon a verdict,” discharged the jury and remanded the prisoner to the custody of the Sheriff, who now holds him in custody for retrial.

Upon this state of facts it is claimed for petitioner that he is illegally restrained of his liberty; that the discharge of the jury having his case in charge, against his objections, upon the sole ground of their inability to agree upon a verdict, is equivalent to an acquittal, and that he cannot legally be held to further answer this or any other indictment for the same offense. It is conceded on the part of counsel for petitioner (and such is the almost uniform current of authorities in England and the United States) that the discharge of the jury in a criminal case without verdict, from a legal necessity resulting from physical causes beyond the control of the Court, does not bar a retrial of the defendant upon the same indictment at the same or a subsequent term of the Court. But it is contended that the discharge of a jury without verdict, against the objections of defendant, any considerable time in advance of the close of the term of Court, upon the sole ground that the jury, after mature deliberation, report their inability to agree upon a verdict, is a discharge without legal cause, and entitles petitioner to a release from custody and perpetual immunity from further prosecution for the same offense, by virtue of section eight, Article I, of our State Constitution.

The question thus presented is one of paramount importance in the practical administration of criminal law. It has been the uniform practice in this State, since the organization of our judicial system, in all our Courts of criminal jurisdiction, to recognize as valid the authority conferred upon the trial Court by the four hundred and thirty-ninth, four hundred and fortieth, and four hundred and forty-first sections of the Act of April 20th, 1850, "to regulate proceedings in criminal cases," which sections were verbatim incorporated as sections four hundred and nine, four hundred and ten, and four hundred and eleven of the Act of May 1st, 1851, "to regulate proceedings in criminal cases," and are still in force. (Stats. 1851, p. 256.)

These sections are as follows: Section four hundred and nine — "If, after the retirement of the jury, one of them be taken so sick as to prevent the continuance, or any other accident or cause occur to prevent their being kept for deliberation, the jury may be discharged." Section four hundred and ten — "Except as provided in the last section the jury shall not be discharged after the cause is submitted to them, until they have agreed upon their verdict, and rendered it in open Court, unless by consent of both parties, entered upon the minutes, or unless at the expiration of such time as the Court shall deem proper, it satisfactorily appear that there is no reasonable probability that the jury can agree." Section four hundred and eleven — "In all cases where a jury are discharged, or prevented from giving a verdict, by reason of any accident or other cause, except when the defendant is discharged from the indictment during the progress of the trial, or after the cause is submitted to them, the cause may be again tried at the same or another term."

From these sections it is clearly manifest that the Legislature has conferred upon the trial Court the power to discharge a jury impaneled, sworn, and charged with the cause in a criminal prosecution, whenever it shall satisfactorily appear to the Court that such jury have deliberated upon a verdict a reasonable and proper length of time, without being able to agree, and the Court is satisfied that there is no reasonable probability that they can agree upon a verdict in the case, and has not recognized such discharge as a bar to further prosecution for the same offense.

This presents the grave question whether this statute and the uniform practice of our Courts for more than twenty years are in contravention of that provision of our State Constitution which protects a person from twice being put in jeopardy for the same offense.

A provision similar to this is contained in the organic law of nearly all the States of the Union, and in the Federal Constitution; and the question now under consideration has engaged the attention of the highest judicial tribunals of very many States, and of the Supreme Court of the United States, where the principles involved have been so thoroughly examined and discussed as to render it unnecessary for me to enter upon any reëxamination of the same, further than to refer to some of the more prominent cases, where the question has been decided, and state my conclusions therefrom.

Assuming, then, the position as stated in People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 467, that "a person once placed upon his trial before a competent Court and jury charged with his case, upon a valid indictment, is in jeopardy in the sense of our Constitution, unless such jury be discharged without rendering a verdict from a legal necessity, or for cause beyond the control of the Court," or with the consent of defendant, the point of inquiry is whether the inability of the jury to agree upon a verdict after deliberating thereon for such length of time as when considered with other circumstances surrounding the case within the knowledge of the Court, shall satisfy the Court "that there is no reasonable probability that the jury can agree," constitutes such "legal necessity" as that a discharge of the jury, by reason of its existence, will pre-termit the jeopardy as effectually as would a discharge from "legal necessity"—evidenced by physical facts alone, such as death of a juror, the serious illness or insanity of defendant, the Court, or some member of the jury.

Upon this point the authorities furnished by adjudicated cases in our sister States largely preponderate in the affirmative, among the most prominent of which are: Commonwealth v. Purchase, 2 Pick. 520; People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. N. Y. 187; Hoffman v. The State, 20 Maryland R. 425; State v. Upkeke, 4 Harr. Del. 581; State v. McKee, 1 Bailey, S. C. 655; Wellford v. State, 23 Geo. R. 1; State v. Barnett, 35 Ala. R. 406, substantially overruling the case of Ned v. State, 7 Porter, 210, and other cases previously decided in the same State and holding the opposite view; Price v. State, 36 Miss. R. 533; Dobbins v. State, 14 Ohio St. R. 493; State v. Walker, 26 Ind. R. 346; and State v. Nelson, 26 Ind. R. 366, overruling the case of State v. Miller, 8 Ind. R. 326, and other cases in the same Court holding contrary doctrine upon this point.

Opposed to the above authorities upon the point in hand, I have been able to find but four States, viz: Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee; and the Courts of Pennsylvania and Virginia hold the affirmative in all criminal prosecutions for offenses less than capital felonies. (See Commonwealth v. Cook, 6 Serg. & R., Pa. 577; Commonwealth v. Clin, 3 Rawle, Pa. 498; McCreery v. State, 29 Pa. R. 383; Williams v. Commonwealth, 2 Gratt. Va. 567; State v.

Ephraim, 2 Dev. & Bat. N. C. 162; Mahala v. State, 10 Yerger, Tenn. 235.)

The necessity for a discharge of a jury, by reason of their inability to agree upon a verdict, may be as absolute and uncontrollable by the Court as a necessity arising from any physical cause, but the objections to a discharge of a jury for this cause are based upon the impossibility of determining the fact of the inability to agree upon further deliberation, and the liability to abuse of the power exercised by the trial Court to adjudge the existence of a fact upon evidence confessedly falling short of demonstrating its existence. It will, however, be observed that some of the causes of discharge, conceded to be sufficient to create an absolute legal necessity, are based upon physical facts, the existence of which the Court is authorized to find and act upon without requiring such evidence of their existence as to preclude the possibility of doubt. In case of the alleged inability of a juror to further discharge his duties as such, by reason of serious illness, the evidence of the existence of such fact most generally relied upon consists of the declarations of the invalid juror, the simple statements of his associates, and his appearance before the Court, without even the aid of such testimony as is required to judicially establish a controverted proposition. The Court, upon these statements of individual jurors, the personal appearance and conduct of the invalid in presence of the Court, is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of his physical or mental inability to further discharge the duties of a juror, so states and causes to be entered of record his convictions, and discharges the juror. Yet the fact of such sickness or mental inability as to disqualify the invalid juror from a further discharge of his duties as juror is not established or demonstrated beyond possibility of doubt, nor is any controverted ultimate fact in a judicial investigation, even the fact of the guilt of the accused in a criminal case, required to be established beyond the possibility of doubt. Such facts are only required to be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Why, then, should not the fact of the inability of a jury to agree upon a verdict, if compelled to protract their deliberations to the close of the term of Court, be considered as legally and sufficiently established on the presentation of evidence sufficient to satisfy the Court beyond a reasonable doubt? After a jury composed of honest, intelligent, and impartial men, as all jurors are presumed to be, have deliberated a reasonable length of time, and come into Court with a statement that they have not agreed upon a verdict, this statement is certainly conclusive of the fact that they have not agreed; and if such report is accompanied with a unanimous expression of the jurors that they cannot agree, and that further deliberation would not enable them to agree, I am not able to discover why such report and expression, in connection with the fact that the jury had already, in the judgment of the Court, deliberated a proper and reasonable length of time to enable them to arrive at an agreement, or enable them to arrive at an intelligent conclusion as to a rational probability of agreement upon further deliberation, together with surrounding circumstances of the case within the knowledge of the Court — such as the amount and character of the evidence presented for their consideration, the number of preliminary issues involved by the evidence as presented, the habits of thought and temperament of the individual members of the jury — should not enable the Court to arrive at a conclusion, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the jury would not agree upon further and continued deliberation. When such facts are shown to exist, a legal necessity, in my judgment, has arisen for the discharge of the jury.

The power of the Court to discharge a jury without the consent of the prisoner is not an absolute, uncontrolled discretionary power. It must be exercised in accordance with established legal rules and a sound legal discretion in the application of such rules to the facts and circumstances of each particular case, and in this State is subject to review by an appellate Court.

The action of the Court in the discharge of the jury in the present case, and holding the petitioner for retrial, is sanctioned by our statute, by the uniform practice of all our Courts, and by a large preponderance of judicial authority from our sister States, and is, in my judgment, in accordance with enlightened principles of law and justice, not in contravention of any right secured by our Constitution, and should be sustained.

I have thus examined the questions presented by counsel on the argument, and stated the result of such examination, without reference to an important preliminary question which, upon the petition and return to the writ, presents itself in bar of any review of the proceedings of the Court in which the indictment against the prisoner is still pending. The facts presented by the petition and return show that the petitioner is in custody awaiting his trial under an indictment for murder still pending against him in the District Court. The jurisdiction of the Court to try and determine the case as presented by the indictment is not questioned, nor is the validity of the original process, by virtue of which the petitioner was arrested and held to answer, assailed. The case is still undisposed of; no final judgment has been entered therein, and no order of the Court has been made releasing the prisoner from custody. It is simply claimed that the order of the Court discharging the jury without the prisoner's consent, and the further order remanding the prisoner to the custody of the Sheriff, to await further proceedings against him on the indictment, are erroneous. It does not follow that the defendant is entitled to be discharged from custody on habeas corpus, even though his detention in custody is admitted to be the result of error of the Court by which he is held to answer. Although the writ may be demanded as of right by any one who deems himself illegally detained in custody, non constat, that the Court or Judge before whom the return to such writ is made can in all cases investigate the merits of such detention. This, in my judgment, presents a clear case in which no Court or Judge, upon habeas corpus, can properly or legally investigate the merits and wrest the prisoner from the hands of the Court in which his case is pending. (Ex parte McCullough, 35 Cal. 100, and authorities there cited; Wright v. State, 5 Ind. 290, 527, and cases cited.) If the petitioner is aggrieved by the action of the Court in which his case is pending, he has his remedy by motion or plea therein, and by appeal to the proper tribunal, where, if the proper steps are taken and a record of the proceedings of the trial Court are preserved and presented, a review of the action of such Court, of which he now complains, can be properly had, and his rights vindicated.

The application for the unconditional release of petitioner must, therefore, be denied.

His further application for an order admitting him to bail, I think, upon a careful examination of the evidence presented on the former trial, and in consideration of the inability of the jury to agree upon a verdict, and their discharge without his consent, thereby protracting his confinement, in addition to his long imprisonment before he was placed upon trial, should be granted.

It is therefore ordered that the petitioner be admitted to bail and released from custody, upon his filing an undertaking, with sureties as required by law, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, approved by the Judge of the Sixth Judicial District Court.

Points decided.

A. W. THOMPSON v. ANGUS MCKAY AND GEORGE PEARCE.

CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS.—In construing a doubtful contract, the Court will ascertain the relation of the contracting parties to each other, and to the subject-matter of the contract, and if possible, so construe the instrument, however inartificially drawn, as to give effect to the intention of the parties, if it can be done without disregarding the language of the instrument.

CONSTRUCTION OF A DOUBTFUL CONTRACT.—G. owned a lot twenty feet front, and made a verbal agreement with M. that the latter should buy an adjoining strip five feet wide, and the two should erect a two-story brick building on the twenty-five feet, and G. should own the first story and M. the second. The building was erected, and G., by his tenant, entered into possession of the first story, and M., by his tenant, into possession of the second. Afterwards, G. executed to M. a writing, in which he gave up to M. "all right and title" to "the second story of the store, part of five feet for an entrance for the use of a passage up stairs, and as they are now in use and occupied," etc. Held, that the instrument was not void for uncertainty, and that it conveyed to M. all the title of G., legal or equitable.

JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT AN ESTOPPEL.—When ejectment is brought to recover two parcels of realty, and the defendant denies the plaintiff's title, and on the trial the plaintiff puts in evidence in support of his title to both parcels, and the plaintiff recovers one parcel only, the plaintiff is estopped by the judgment from again litigating the title to the parcel he failed to recover, even if the judgment is silent as to the latter parcel.

SALE BY TRUSTEE.—A conveyance to one in trust, to rent or sell the property and apply the proceeds towards the payment of a debt of the grantor, conveys the fee, and the trustee has power to convey the legal title.

OBJECTION TO TESTIMONY.—If the plaintiff offers competent testimony to prove certain facts, and it is rejected by the Court on the objection of the defendant, the defendant will not afterwards be permitted to allege that the plaintiff failed to prove the facts embraced in the offer.

PURCHASER AT TRUSTEE SALE.—When property is conveyed to a trustee to rent and sell, and apply the proceeds to the payment of a debt of the grantor, a bona fide purchaser at the trust sale acquires a good title, even if the trustee, before the sale, had received sufficient money from the rents to pay the trust debt.

TITLE ACQUIRED PENDENTE LITE.—A defendant in ejectment cannot, on the trial, avail himself of a title acquired pendente lite, unless it is set up by supplemental answer.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

This was an action of ejectment. The complaint contained two counts, one for the rooms of the second and third stories of the northerly section of the brick building mentioned in the opinion, fronting twenty feet on the street, and the other for the land on which said section of the brick building was erected.

The action was commenced January 10th, 1867.

On the 5th day of August, 1856, Alexander McKay conveyed to Angus McKay all his interest in the land and building mentioned in the opinion. In September, 1862, Angus McKay commenced an action of ejectment against the Petaluma Lodge and others to recover the two upper stories of the building and the strip of land five feet wide bought by Alexander McKay, and the stairway five feet in width. The defendants answered that Gowen owned the property, and that they had leased of him, and denied the plaintiff's title. The Court found that the plaintiff owned the strip of land five feet wide, and gave him judgment for that only. The judgment was silent as to the other premises described in the complaint. The plaintiff, in August, 1866, by means of a writ of restitution issued on his judgment, obtained possession of all the premises described in his complaint.

On the 25th day of February, 1862, Gowen executed and delivered to William Hill a trust deed of the five feet, and also the twenty feet, being the ground on which the building was erected. This deed, after the granting clause, which was a remise, release, and quitclaim reads as follows: "To rent or sell the before described property altogether or in such separate lots or parcels, and at such time or times, and at either public or private sale or sales, as he in his own judgment may deem most expedient, and to apply the proceeds thereof (after deducting therefrom a reasonable charge for his services, as well as the necessary expenses incurred in renting or making sale of said property) towards the payment of a certain note of hand, made and executed by the said party of the first part, in favor of the said William Hill, party of the second part, or order, for the sum of seven hundred dollars, being dated at San Francisco, April 10th, 1861, and on which note there remains due and unpaid at this present date, the sum of seven hundred and fifty-one dollars and forty-eight cents, or thereabouts, 'as reference being thereunto had will more fully appear, and after said note is fully paid, as well as the expenses above referred to, the surplus, if any there be, is to be paid on demand to the said party of the second part, his heirs or assigns."

In August, 1856, the building erected by Alexander McKay and Gowen fell down, partially by reason of excavations made at the foundation. It was rebuilt in the Spring of 1857, with a third story, and Gowen then took possession of the whole building. This possession he and his grantees retained until ousted from the passage way, the five feet, and the upper stories, in 1866. Gowen died intestate March 14th, 1863, leaving a daughter, his sole heir; and on the 19th of August, 1867, the heir conveyed to Angus McKay one undivided one half of the same premises conveyed in trust to Hill. On the 25th day of April, 1865, Hill, the trustee, conveyed to Harrison Meacham the two upper stories of the building, and the right of way over the stairway to the rooms in the second and third stories; and on the 27th of October, 1866, Meacham conveyed the same premises to J. B. Southard, W. H. Patterson, and the plaintiff Thompson. The plaintiff claimed title under this deed, made by Hill. The answer set up that the trust debt had been paid to Hill before he made the sale, and that the plaintiff, and those through whom he claimed title, knew of this before they purchased. The plaintiff recovered judgment for the possession of the rooms of the second and third stories of the twenty feet of the building, being its northerly section. The defendants appealed.

Argument for Appellants.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George Pearce, for Appellants.

Appellant McKay had good title to the premises under the instrument executed by Gowen. (Mulford v. LeFrank, 26 Cal. 88; 4 Kent Com. 508; 1 Bouv. Inst. 343.) The respondent contends that appellants are estopped by the judgment of McKay v. Petaluma Lodge. We say this is error, mainly on two grounds:

1. The doctrine of Caperton v. Smith, 26 Cal. 479, had not been promulgated at the time McKay v. Petaluma Lodge was tried in the Court below; and McKay had a right to accept the judgment as it was, inasmuch as it gave him complete control of and dominion over the premises, and as the answer in that case did not ask that Gowen might be adjudged the owner, nor did the Court so determine. The doctrine of Caperton v. Smith has not been carried to the extent that a judgment in ejectment will divest a title to land, when there was no judgment to that effect in favor of an adversary. In McKay v. Petaluma Lodge there was no judgment in favor of Gowen, or those holding under him, for anything, nor was any asked by the defendants. The Court gave McKay judgment, but not for as much as was demanded in the complaint.

2. The respondent contended in the Court below that they had a trust deed. We contend they had only a mortgage. (Kidd v. Teeple, 22 Cal. 255; 2 Wash. on Real Property, 81; Marion v. Titsworth, 10 Wis. 320.) And that it gave no right of possession. (Prac. Act, Sec. 260; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365; Fogarty v. Sawyer, 17 Cal. 589; Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 255.) And we contend that it was a mortgage of the accruing rents only. If the mortgage debt was paid before the conveyance to Meacham, April 25th, 1865, then the power to sell was extinguished. (1 Wash. on Real Property, 530; Marginal, 502, 503; Chartar v. Stevens, 3 Denio, 33; Ormsby v. Tarascon, 3 Litt. 404; Ivy v. Gilbert, 2 P. Wm. 13; Mills v. Banks, 3 P. Wm. 1; Roarty v. Mitchell, 7 Gray, 243; 5 Hill, 272.)

W. H. Patterson, for Respondent.

Appellants claim that, inasmuch as there was upon the former trial no finding or decree directly alleging that Gowen had the better title, the rule in Caperton v. Smith did not apply. The answer to this proposition is, that in ejectment, as in other actions, the judgment, where plaintiff fails, is simply for defendant, or that plaintiff have and recover nothing by his action; but as to the whole matter put in issue the judgment is a bar. (Caperton v. Smith, 26 Cal. 479; Clark v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 434; Flaundreau v. Downey, 23 Cal. 354; Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176; Jones v. City of Petaluma, 36 Cal. 230.) Defendant, if plaintiff succeeds, is estopped from questioning the title of plaintiff as it was when litigated; and the same rule must apply from plaintiff to defendant, especially when, as here, both parties deraign title from the same source. Where two parcels of land are sued for, and a recovery had for one, but not for the other, it is manifest that the failure to recover for the second lot, where, as here, the title thereto was at issue and tried, would have the same effect as though the action therefor had not been attached to an action for the other lot held under a different title.

Appellants claim that Gowen was the owner of the premises, and conveyed the same to Hill, in trust, however, for securing to him a means of collecting the amount of certain indebtedness; that the object of the trust had been accomplished before the deed (Hill to Meacham) under which plaintiff holds was made; that Gowen, had he been living, would have had, and that, as he is dead, his heirs have, therefore, such an equitable estate as would control the legal title; and that, by deed from Gowen's heirs, the defendants have acquired this equitable estate.

First—This equitable title, if at all, was acquired pendente lite, and is not pleaded. (Reilly v. Lancaster, April Term, Case No. 2,015; McMinn v. O'Conner, 27 Cal. 238; Moss v. Shear, 30 Cal. 472.)

Second—The deed (Gowen to Hill) conveys the legal title in trust for the express purpose that the trustee should sell the property, at such time and manner as he may deem expedient.

We offered to show that Hill used the rents in paying off incumbrances; we offered to show how much was paid, etc.; but defendants objected, the Court sustained their objection, and they cannot now complain of our not doing so. These liens and incumbrances, as they controlled the possession and had to be provided for, were necessarily to be paid off before the object of the trust deed could be reached. In determining the relation of the parties, the Court would have allowed to Hill these advances, with interest, before entering upon a computation of the amount applicable as payment upon his note. (Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 337-353.) The power to Hill was of such a character, coupled with such an interest, as to be irrevocable, and not affected by the death of the donor. (Barr v. Shroeder, 32 Cal. 610; Travers v. Gray, 15 Cal. 12.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The first point of inquiry is, whether the instrument from Gowen to Alexander McKay, of April 26th, 1856, was operative as a deed to convey the legal title of Gowen to the demanded premises; for if it had that effect it is evident the defendants are estopped by the judgment in the case of McKay v. Petaluma Lodge and others, from again litigating the same title in this action. It is not pretended that the defendants have acquired any new title or right to the possession derived from or under Gowen since the commencement of that action, except the conveyance from his daughter, made after his death, during the pendency of the present action, and which will be hereafter noticed. But if McKay acquired the legal title of Gowen by means of the instrument of April 26th, 1856, that title was distinctly put in issue and tried in the action against Petaluma Lodge and others, and was decided against McKay. The judgment, it is true, does not, on its face, expressly and in terms, adjudicate the title in respect to the premises now in controversy. But the title to the premises was distinctly in issue, and McKay put in evidence oral and documentary proofs in support of his alleged title under Gowen. The judgment awarded to him the adjoining strip of land, five feet in width (which was also in contest in the action), but is wholly silent as to the premises now in controversy. The omission of the Court to award to him any relief in respect to these premises is, in its legal effect, an adjudication that he was not entitled to relief in that action. (Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 176; Jones v. Petaluma, 36 Cal. 230.) His title under Gowen was put in evidence, and the Court must have decided it to be insufficient to entitle him to a judgment for the possession, as against Gowen's tenants. If the Court had decided otherwise, it would have awarded to him the proper relief. But the plaintiff in ejectment must recover, if at all, on the legal title or right to the possession, and not on a mere equity; and a fruitless attempt to maintain ejectment on an equitable title would not debar him from asserting his equity in another and appropriate action in the proper forum. But if McKay, by means of the instrument referred to, had acquired Gowen's legal title before the commencement of that action, and put it in issue by the pleadings, and adduced evidence in support of it, he is obviously concluded by the judgment, and can not again litigate the same title in the present action. It therefore becomes material to determine the character and legal effect of that instrument. The rule is well established that, in construing doubtful instruments, they must be interpreted in the light of the surrounding circumstances. After ascertaining the relation of the contracting parties to each other, and the subject matter of the contract, the Court will, if possible, so construe the instrument, however, inartificially drawn, as to give effect to the intention of the parties, provided it can be done without disregarding the language of the instrument, when all its parts are considered. The proofs make it clear that in 1855 Gowen claimed to be the owner of a lot having a frontage of twenty feet, on which he desired to erect a building one story high, applied to Alexander McKay for that purpose; that McKay ascertained that the Masons in that vicinity desired to procure a large hall for their use, but a room over Gowen's lot would be too small for the purpose; and thereupon it was verbally agreed between Gowen and McKay that the latter should obtain the title to an additional strip of land five feet wide, and that there should be erected a house two stories high, covering the front of Gowen's lot, together with the strip of five feet, Gowen to furnish the material for the building, and McKay to do the work; and when completed Gowen was to own the first story and McKay the second; that the building was accordingly erected, and the outer wall occupied a portion of the five feet, and the stairway the remainder of it, together with a small strip from Gowen's lot; that when the building was complete Gowen leased the first story to a tenant, who entered into possession, and McKay leased the second story, by a written lease, for a term of three years, to the Masons, who entered and occupied under the lease. Whilst affairs were in this condition, in April, 1856, and when on the eve of a visit to the Eastern States, Gowen made and delivered to McKay an instrument in these words:

“Article of agreement made and entered this 26th day of April, A. D. 1856, between Heber Gowen of the first party and Alexander McKay of the second party, witnessed that said party of the first party, for and in consideration of the premises, and hereby covenants and agrees to give up all right and title of the party of the second party since all his assigns forever hereafter, all the following described property hereafter mentioned on Main street, Petaluma, California: The second story of the store part of five feet for an entrance for the use of a passage up stairs, and as they are now in use and occupied for the Odd Fellows and Masons.

“Hereunto the above agreement set my hand and seal this 26th day of April, in the year 1856.

[SEAL.]

“HEBER GOWEN.”

Notwithstanding the very awkward, inaccurate, and obscure language of this instrument, I think it is capable of interpretation, when considered in the light of the surrounding facts. McKay owned the strip five feet wide; but the outer wall occupied about two feet of this space, and the stairway covered not only the remainder, but also a small portion of Gowen's lot. McKay, by his tenants, the Masons, was in the possession of the second story, in accordance with the parol agreement, and Gowen obviously intended by this instrument, made on the eve of his departure on a long journey, to define McKay's rights in the property. Hence he covenants and agrees to “give up” to him “all right and title” (to) “all the following described property hereinafter mentioned, on Main street, Petaluma, California: The second story of the store and part of five feet of ground for an entrance for use of a passage up stairs, and as they are now in use and occupied for the Odd Fellows and Masons.” By interpolating the word “and” between the words “store” and "part" in the last sentence, and correcting the punctuation, the meaning becomes obvious. The property intended to be conveyed was the second story, occupied by the Odd Fellows and Masons, above the store, together with a right of way over so much of Gowen's lot as was occupied by the stairway.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the instrument was not void for uncertainty, and that it was operative to convey, and did convey, to McKay all the title of Gowen, legal or equitable, in and to the second story and the stairway. From this view of the legal effect of the instrument, it results that McKay had the legal title of Gowen at the commencement of the action against Petaluma Lodge and others, and is, therefore, estopped by the judgment in that action from again litigating the title in the present action.

But the defendants claim that the deed from Gowen to Hill under which the plaintiff derails title, was a conveyance in trust, with a power of sale, for the purpose of satisfying the trust debt, but for no other purpose; and that the proofs show the trust debt was paid before the conveyance from Hill to Meachem, and this conveyance is void for want of authority in Hill to make it. That the deed from Gowen to Hill conveys the fee, and that Hill had the power, in execution of the trust, to transmit the legal title to a purchaser is too plain for debate.

As this record presents the facts, there is nothing to show that the conveyance to Meachem was not made in execution of the trust, and for payment of the trust debt. It appears on the face of the deed to Hill that the property was already incumbered, and the plaintiff offered to prove that he had been compelled to disburse large sums to remove prior incumbrances, and to preserve the trust fund for the security and satisfaction of the trust. On the objection of the defendants this proof was excluded by the Court, and it is not for them to complain that the plaintiff has failed to show how he applied the rents and proceeds of sales. If they were applied for the extinguishment of prior incumbrances, and to preserve the trust fund, I think the trustee did not thereby exceed his powers; but it is unnecessary to express any decided opinion on that point. Under such a trust as this, it was not incumbent on the purchaser to institute an examination into the accounts of the trustee, on pain of losing the property, if it should ultimately appear, on a final settlement of the trust, that the trust debt had in fact been satisfied out of the rents before the sale. If the purchaser incurred this peril, there would be but a few sales under such deeds. The rule that a purchaser at a trust sale is bound, in certain cases, to see to the application of the proceeds of the sale, does not apply to a case like this; and if it did, it would concern only the cestui que trust and the purchaser.

The only remaining point is as to the effect of the conveyance from the heir at law of Gowen to the defendants pendente lite. It is sufficient, on this point, to say that it has been frequently decided by this Court that a defendant cannot avail himself of a title acquired during the pendency of the action, unless it is set up in a supplemental answer. If acquired after the original answer was filed, he should set it up in an amended answer, on leave of the Court. Otherwise it will not avail the defendant on the trial.

Judgment affirmed.

ROSA LYNCH v. WILLIAM KELLY.

JUDGMENT OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.—If, on a jury trial before a Justice of the Peace, the jury find a verdict for a sum certain for the plaintiff, and the Justice thereupon enters the verdict in his docket, but fails to enter up a judgment, it is an irregularity; but not such an one as renders a sale made upon an execution, which recites a judgment issued thereon, void.

JUSTICE'S JUDGMENT ON VERDICT OF JURY.—The formal entry of a judgment by a Justice of the Peace, upon the verdict of a jury, is a mere clerical duty, which he may be compelled to perform; and if he fails to do so a motion to set aside an execution should be sustained; but an execution issued by the Justice, which recites a judgment, is not void by reason of his failure to enter the judgment.

FORMER JUDGMENT IN BAR.—A plea of former judgment as a bar is sustained by proof of a former trial before a Justice, and the verdict of a jury entered on his docket, without any formal entry of judgment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

Ejectment to recover the land sold under the execution, and described in the Sheriff's deed, mentioned in the opinion. The Court below rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Collins & Silent and F. E. Spencer, for Appellant.

Bodley & Rankin, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

Upon the trial had before him, the Justice of the Peace entered in his docket the verdict of the jury, as rendered, in the following words: "We, the undersigned, jurors in the case of Rosa Lynch v. William Kelly, find for the plaintiff one hundred and seventy-nine dollars in gold coin;" and subsequently, upon the application of the plaintiff, issued an execution which recited that a judgment had been rendered by him for that much money, and costs of suit.

Under a Sheriff's sale upon the execution, the plaintiff purchased the premises and received a Sheriff's deed therefor.

It is now claimed that the sale was void, and that the title did not pass thereby, because, as it is said, no judgment was ever entered in form upon this verdict.

The Justice, upon receiving the verdict, was required by statute to "immediately render judgment accordingly." (Section five hundred and ninety-four.) The formal entry of the judgment was, therefore, a mere clerical duty imposed upon him by the statute, and the performance of which he had no discretion to decline. He might have been compelled to make the proper entry in his docket by judicial proceedings instituted against him for that purpose by the plaintiff, and it may be conceded that to issue an execution before judgment entered in form upon the verdict would be bad practice, and that a timely motion by the defendant to set it aside for that reason should be supported. That would be so, however, not because such an execution would be void, but because it would be irregular, merely. And a failure to make the objection would, of course, amount to a waiver of the irregularity. As was said by the Supreme Court of the State of New York in Felton v. Mulliner, 2 Johns. 181: "We are to overlook matters of form, and to regard proceedings before Justices of the Peace according to the merits." Accordingly, in that case a plea of former judgment in favor of the defendant was held to be supported by proof of a verdict in his favor, upon which the Justice of the Peace ought to have rendered judgment, but had omitted to do so. In the case of Gaines v. Betts, 2 Douglas, 99, it appeared from the docket of the Justice of the Peace that the case was submitted to the jury on proofs, and that "the jury returned with a verdict for the plaintiff of eighteen dollars damages, and costs of suit taxed at five dollars." There was no further entry upon the docket, and no formal entry of judgment on the verdict. Of this record the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan said: "The verdict is itself the judgment of the law in the case, and the Justice is simply required so to make the entry on his docket. If he neglects to do so, still the verdict must be considered the final determination of the cause." (See also, Overall v. Pero, 7 Mich. 316.)

Statement of Facts.

The circumstance that by the statute of this State a Justice of the Peace is authorized to grant new trials in cases before him does not, in my opinion, affect the question.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
WILLIAM HUGHES.

IMMATERIAL VARIANCE.—If the variance between an allegation in an indictment and the proof be immaterial, it should be disregarded.

ACQUITTAL FOR VARIANCE WHEN A BAR TO SUBSEQUENT PROSECUTION.—If a party be acquitted on the ground of an immaterial variance, he cannot be again prosecuted for the same offense. The error of the Court or jury, in regarding as material a variance between the allegations and proof, will not render the acquittal less available and conclusive as a bar to a subsequent prosecution. But if the variance be material, the acquittal will not bar a subsequent prosecution.

ALLEGATION OF OWNERSHIP IN INDICTMENT FOR LARCENY.—An allegation of the ownership of the stolen property is essential in an indictment for larceny, unless the offense is otherwise sufficiently described.

APPEAL from the Municipal Criminal Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The defendant having been indicted for grand larceny pleaded not guilty and previous acquittal. A verdict of guilty was returned by the jury. From the judgment of imprisonment and from an order overruling a motion for a new trial the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

George W. Tyler, for the Appellant, argued that the defendant had been once put in jeopardy by the trial, in which he was acquitted for a variance in the name of the owner of the watch alleged to have been stolen, and could not again be tried for the same offense. He cited People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 467.

M. M. Byrne, for the Respondent, argued that the record of the former acquittal was excluded as evidence by section three hundred and five of the Criminal Practice Act.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The defendant was indicted for stealing "one gold watch of the value of two hundred dollars, * * * of the goods, chattels, and property of Stephen F. Merritt." On the trial, in support of his plea of former acquittal, he offered in evidence an indictment charging him with the larceny of "one gold watch of the value of two hundred dollars, * * * of the goods, chattels, and property of Samuel F. Merritt;" and offered to prove by the records of the County Court and oral testimony, that he was charged by that indictment with stealing the identical watch mentioned in the pending indictment; that he was placed on trial upon such indictment; that Stephen F. Merritt, who, in this case, is alleged to be the owner of the watch, testified that his true name was Stephen F. Merritt; that because of the variance between the allegation and the proof, as to the ownership of the watch, the Court instructed the jury to acquit the defendant on the ground of such variance; and that a verdict was rendered by the jury as directed by the Court, and the cause was ordered to be resubmitted to the next Grand Jury. The Court excluded the evidence.

It is provided by section three hundred and five, Criminal Practice Act, that "If the defendant were formerly acquitted on the ground of a variance between the indictment and the proof, or upon an objection to the form or substance of the indictment, it shall not be deemed an acquittal of the same offense." If the variance be immaterial it should be disregarded; and if the defendant be in fact acquitted, on the ground of an immaterial variance, he cannot be again prosecuted for the same offense. The question under the plea of former acquittal is: would the evidence which is necessary to support the second indictment, have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction on the first? The error of the Court or jury, in regarding as material a variance between the allegations and proof, will not render the acquittal less available and conclusive as a bar to a subsequent prosecution.

The question, therefore, on which the case turns is, whether the allegation of the ownership of the watch is material — whether the averment that Samuel F. Merritt is the owner of the watch is descriptive of the offense, and must be proven as laid. There can be no doubt that at common law such an averment was both material and essential. The citation of authorities is unnecessary, for that is the doctrine of all the text books and the cases therein cited. But the statute of this State provides (Cr. Prac. Act, Sec. 243) that "when the offense involves the commission, or an attempt to commit a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, shall not be deemed material." It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to define the meaning of the terms "private injury" and "person injured;" for the offense is not described in the indictment in this case with sufficient certainty, without the averment as to the ownership of the watch, to identify the criminal act, as required by that section. Omitting that averment, the description of the property is: "one gold watch of the value of two hundred dollars." That description is manifestly insufficient to distinguish the watch from any other gold watch of that value.

In People v. Ah Sing, 19 Cal. 598, which was an indictment for larceny, the coin which was stolen, was stated to be the property of Hanach Eisner & Co.; and it was held that the ownership of the coin was sufficiently alleged. That was the only point discussed, but its decision would have been quite useless, had the allegation of the ownership of the coin been considered immaterial. It was held in People v. Myers, 20 Cal. 79, that the allegation of the ownership of the building which was burned, was a part of the description of the offense of arson, with which the defendant was charged. (See also, People v. Vice, 21 Cal. 344.) It would seem that the ownership of the stolen property is equally essential in an indictment for larceny. The Court, therefore, did not err in excluding the evidence offered by the defendant.

There being no evidence before the jury, tending to show a formal acquittal on an indictment for the same offense, the Court properly refused to submit that issue to the jury.

It is evident that the question, as to whether the Court committed any error on the trial of the first indictment, cannot arise in this case, for the judgment, if not void, cannot be collaterally attacked.

Judgment affirmed.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
MARGARET A. MOORE.

NEW TRIAL — MISCONDUCT OF JURY.—The retirement of a jury for a necessary purpose for a few moments, with the permission of the Sheriff, out of his sight, there being no evidence that during such retirement they communicated with any one, or with each other, but positive proof to the contrary, is not sufficient ground upon which to grant a new trial.

APPEAL from the County Court of San Mateo County.

The defendant was tried for grand larceny and convicted. A motion for new trial, on the ground of misconduct of the jury, was granted. The appeal is taken from the order granting a new trial.

Attorney General, Jo Hamilton. for Appellant.

H. Kincaid, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The motion of the defendant for a new trial was improperly granted. There is nothing in the record tending in the slightest degree to show any misconduct in the jury, or on the part of the officer having them in charge. There is not only no evidence that the several jurors who retired for a few moments, with the permission of the Sheriff, out of his sight, to obey a call of nature, communicated with any one, or with each other, during their temporary absence, but there is positive proof to the contrary.

Order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings, with an order to the Court below to enter judgment on the verdict.

NANCY R. HUSSEY v. GEORGE CASTLE.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND TO WIFE.—There is no legal presumption that a conveyance of land, made by the husband to the wife, is fraudulent as against a judgment creditor of the husband, whose judgment was recovered after the conveyance.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY.—There is no legal presumption that land, the separate property of the husband, conveyed by him to the wife in consideration of money, the separate property of the wife, becomes, after such conveyance, the community property of the husband and wife.

ANTE-NUPTIAL CONTRACT.—An ante-nuptial verbal contract, which is executed by the parties after marriage, cannot be assailed by the parties thereto, or by third parties, on the ground that it was not in writing.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The complaint averred that the plaintiff was the wife of J. C. Hussey, with whom she intermarried in the State of Iowa, on the 9th day of December, 1869, while temporarily absent from California, which was their domicile; and that pursuant to an ante-nuptial contract between the parties, and in consideration of marriage, and of five thousand dollars in coin, due by said J. C. Hussey to the plaintiff before their marriage (two thousand of which was secured by mortgage on the land), the said J. C. Hussey conveyed to her, after the marriage, a tract of land consisting of one hundred and eighty acres, and that the same, by the conveyance, became her separate property; that said conveyance was recorded on the 16th day of February, 1870, and on the 27th day of May, 1870, one George Loney, in an action of tort, recovered a judgment against J. C. Hussey for eight hundred and eighty-five and forty-five one hundredths dollars, upon which an execution was issued; and that the defendant, who was Sheriff of San Joaquin County, had, by virtue of the execution, advertised the land for sale. There was a prayer that the sale be perpetually enjoined. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and the Court below sustained the demurrer; and the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was rendered for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

Terry & Carr, for Appellant.

The marriage vested the husband with no legal or beneficial interest in the wife's separate estate, nor did it affect her right of action for the recovery of the debt, but she could proceed by suit in the same manner as if the marriage had not taken place. (Lewis & Chard v. Johnson, 24 Cal. 98; Wilson v. Wilson, 36 Cal. 447; Power v. Lester, 23 N. Y. 527.) The conveyance from J. C. Hussey to plaintiff was not a voluntary conveyance, but was founded upon a valuable consideration, and is valid as against the creditors of J. C. Hussey. (Babcock v. Eckler, 24 N. Y. 623.) The marriage of plaintiff with J. C. Hussey was a valuable consideration, sufficient to support the conveyance; and the ante-nuptial promise, though within the statute of frauds, is sufficient to support an executed contract. (Dundas v. Dutens, 1 Vesey, 196; Simmons v. Simmons, 6 Hare, 352; Beverly v. Beverly, 2 Vernon, 131; Hudson v. Cheynee, 2 Vernon, 150; DeBeil v. Thompson, 3 Beavan, 469; Montacute v. Maxwell, 1 Strange, 236; Hamersley v. DeBeil, 17 Eng. L. & E. 212.)

S. P. Scaniker, and J. H. Budd, for Respondent.

The plaintiff could make no contract with her husband subsequent to marriage, except in special cases, as under the sole trader's Act. (Snyder v. Webb, 3 Cal. 83; Rowe v. Kohle, 4 Cal. 285; Luning v. Brady, 10 Cal. 265; Shaver v. Bear River and Auburn Water and Mining Company, 10 Cal. 396; Jackson v. Parks, 10 Cush. 550.) In this State marriage contracts are invalid unless in writing, and executed and acknowledged in like manner as a conveyance of land is required to be executed and acknowledged. (Session laws 1850, p. 254, Hittell, Art. 3,578.) And such contracts do not affect property, except as between the parties thereto, until filed for record in the county where such property is situate. (Laws of 1850, p. 254; Hittell, Art. 3,581; Taylor v. Hericot, 4 Desau. 227; Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Desau. 401.) Such conveyance will not be upheld as against the creditors of the husband of plaintiff. (Roach v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. Rep. 481; Borst v. Corey, 18 Barb. 136; Andrews v. Jones, 10 Ala. 400; Blow v. Maynard, 2 Leigh, Va. 89; Smith v. Greer, Humph. 118; Jackson v. Myers, 18 Johns. 426; Hittell, 3,164.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The demurrer to the complaint should have been overruled.

There is no legal presumption that the conveyance of the premises described in the complaint, by J. C. Hussey, the husband of the plaintiff, to her, of February 15th, 1870, was fraudulent as against the party now seeking to sell the same in satisfaction of a judgment against the husband of plaintiff, obtained more than three months after such conveyance, even though the husband had made the same as a voluntary conveyance to, or settlement upon, his wife, the plaintiff; and clearly, under the circumstances attending the conveyance, and the substantial money considerations therefor, alleged in the complaint, no presumption of fraud, as against subsequent judgment creditors of the husband, arises; nor does the presumption arise, from a conveyance of the separate property of the husband to the wife, in consideration of money passing from the wife, which was her separate property, that the property thus conveyed becomes the common property of the husband and wife.

Statement of Facts.

The money alleged to have been the consideration for the conveyance relieves the same from the imputation of being a voluntary conveyance, independent of the ante-nuptial verbal contract. And further, as the ante-nuptial contract is alleged to have been completely executed, the same is not assailable by the parties thereto, or by third parties, on the ground that it was not in writing, as prescribed by statute.

Judgment and order dissolving the injunction reversed, with directions to the Court below to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

Neither Mr. Justice WALLACE nor Mr. Justice CROCKETT expressed an opinion.

N. W. RANDALL v. GEORGE FALKNER.

SUMMONS IN FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.—The only purpose of a summons is to bring the defendant into Court, and if he appears and answers, he waives any defect in the summons:

DEFENSE IN UNLAWFUL DETAINER.—The facts, that the land in dispute is a part of the public domain, that it has been withdrawn from entry and sale, and that the defendant, by the advice of his attorney and the United States land officers, entered upon it for the purpose of securing a prior right to a homestead, and with a bona fide intention to acquire such right as soon as the land might be open to entry, do not justify an entry upon the actual occupancy of another, and are no defense in an action of unlawful detainer.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER.—If a person enters unlawfully upon land in the possession of another, during his absence, and upon demand being made refuses to restore the possession, he may be proceeded against in an action of unlawful detainer.

TAXATION OF COSTS.—A party to an action is entitled to tax, as costs, the fees of witnesses subpoenaed by him in good faith, although they were not sworn on the trial.

APPEAL from the County Court of Stanislaus County.

Action commenced in the County Court. The complaint alleged that the defendant entered on the land in the nighttime, during the temporary absence of the plaintiff, and that more than five days before the commencement of the action the plaintiff demanded of the defendant that he surrender the land to the plaintiff.

Statement of Facts.

The summons stated that the action was brought for the possession and restitution of the land, describing it.

The defendant moved to dismiss the action, because the Court had no jurisdiction over the subject matter, as it appeared upon the face of the summons that it was simply an action to recover possession of land, and that the District Court only could exercise jurisdiction.

The defendant requested the Court to give the following instructions, which were refused:

"If the jury should find from the evidence that defendant peaceably entered upon the land in controversy, believing he had a right to do so, and that he had good reasons to believe he had such right, then they must find for defendant."

"The question of title cannot be litigated in this action; and if the jury find from the evidence that defendant, at the time of his peaceful entry upon the land, had a bona fide claim, which in time might ripen into a legal title, then they cannot consider whether plaintiff had any better right, but they must find for the defendant."

"If the jury should find from the evidence that the defendant entered upon the land in controversy at the time stated in the complaint, without using force, violence, menaces, or fraud, under a bona fide claim and color of right, then the jury cannot inquire whether the defendant's title to the land is better than the plaintiff's, because the title to the land cannot be litigated in this action; but in such case the jury must find for the defendant."

The defendant inserted in his bill of costs the fees of three witnesses, who had been subpoenaed by him, and had attended the trial, but had not been sworn.

Argument for Respondent.

The plaintiff moved the Court to strike out these costs, because they were not disbursements necessarily incurred in the action. No affidavits were read in support of the motion. The Court denied the motion.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. H. Budd, and Schell & Hewell, for Appellant.

Section six of the Act concerning forcible entry and detainer, of April 2d, 1866, provides that among other things the summons shall state the nature of the action. The cause of action stated in the summons is not one of the actions defined by the statute, but simply an action in ejectment, over which the District Court alone could exercise jurisdiction. The court erred in striking out, on motion of plaintiff, the new matter set up as a defense — first in the answer and afterwards in the amended answer. The action was for an unlawful entry under the third section of the statute. The facts set up in the answer showed conclusively the right of defendant to enter at the time he did. Proof of these facts would have entitled him to a judgment, and in order to enable him to prove these facts, he was required to plead them. (Stats. 1865-6, p. 769, Sec. 7; Moore v. Del Valle, 28 Cal. 172; Burke v. Carruthers, 31 Cal. 468.)

S. P. Scaniker, and Schell & Scrivner, for Respondent.

If the summons was insufficient, the appearance of the defendant and filing his answer therein was a waiver of any and all irregularities that might appear upon the face of the summons. And the motion made after such appearance was too late, and properly overruled by the Court. (6 How. Prac. 441; Smith v. Carter, 7 Cal. 587; Hays v. Shattuck, 21 Cal. 51; Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 339.) The unlawful entry, having been alleged in the complaint and already specifically traversed by the answer, was then at issue, and any facts or circumstances tending to illustrate the character of the entry are mere surplusage, and will be stricken out on motion. Nor did the circumstances set up tend to raise any issue between the parties. (Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 411.) The matter stricken from defendant's answer constituted no defense to the action, if taken as true. Section nine of said Act specifically defines what may be set up by defendant. It does not in terms provide for but one defense, to wit: the quiet and peaceable possession of the defendant, or those through whom he claims, for the space of one whole year next preceding the commencement of the action.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action for forcible detainer, under the third section of the forcible entry and detainer Act of April 2d, 1866. (Stats. 1865-6, p. 769.) Judgment was entered for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals, assigning as error certain rulings of the Court during the progress of the trial, as shown by bills of exception brought up in the record.

After filing his answer the defendant moved to quash the summons as insufficient; but the motion was properly denied. The only purpose of the summons is to bring the defendant into Court; and when he appears and answers he waives any defect in the summons. Whether the summons be good or bad, its end has been accomplished when the defendant appears and answers. Nor did the Court err in striking out a portion of the defendant's answer and excluding the proof of the averments so stricken out. These allegations were, in substance, that the land in contest is a portion of the public domain of the United States; but is at present withdrawn from entry and sale; that in 1867 the defendant erected a cabin on it with the intention to acquire a right to it as a homestead, under the laws of the United States, so soon as the land should be subject to entry for that purpose; that in the following year one Ewing, against the will of the defendant, and without right, removed the cabin, and afterwards sold whatever right he had to the land to plaintiff, who in November, 1869, hauled to the land lumber for the purpose of erecting a house upon it, and plowed the greater portion of the land and put it in grain; that, thereupon, the defendant consulted an attorney as to his rights, and the attorney, together with the land officers of the United States for that district, advised him to enter upon the land and erect a cabin, with a view to acquire a prior right to a homestead claim as soon as the land should become subject to entry for that purpose; that he was qualified to acquire a homestead right; and acting under the advice aforesaid, and with a bona fide intention to acquire such right, he entered in February, 1870, peaceably and quietly upon the land, and has ever since remained in possession. These facts, if proved, would not have justified the entry of the defendant upon land in the actual occupancy of the plaintiff. It is not pretended that the land was then subject to entry under the homestead Act; and though it was public land, non constat, that it ever will be subject to entry as a homestead. The mere hope or expectation, however well founded, that at some future time the land might become subject to entry for that purpose, could afford no justification for an invasion of the actual possession of the plaintiff. However honestly the defendant may have believed that he had a right to enter, his entry was unlawful; and having been made in the absence of the plaintiff, and the defendant having refused to surrender the possession, after a proper demand, the case comes fully within the third section of the Act. Upon these facts proved, the Court committed no error in the giving or refusal of instructions, nor in denying the defendant's motion to retax the costs. For aught that appears the plaintiff may have had every reason to believe that the witnesses who were summoned, but not sworn, would be essentially necessary to rebut the defendant's proofs; and their testimony may have become unnecessary by reason of a modification of the pleadings, and the exclusion by the Court of the testimony offered by the defendant. There is certainly nothing to show that the plaintiff acted in bad faith in summoning them, and that their testimony may not have been necessary, except for the rulings of the Court on the pleadings and evidence.

I think the appellant has failed to show any error in the record, and that the judgment ought to be affirmed.

ARTHUR QUINN AND JOHN CARROLL v. SETH H. WETHERBEE, JOHN REYNOLDS, S. F. REYNOLDS, AND HENRY COWELL.

RELIEF IN EQUITY AGAINST JUDGMENTS AT LAW.— Courts of equity will not grant relief against judgments recovered at law, unless the party asking for relief was unable to avail himself of his defense in the action at law, or was prevented from doing so by fraud, accident, or mistake, without negligence on his part.

HERR.— When an attorney for defendant, on the trial of a cause, objects to the introduction of certain testimony, and the court erroneously overrules the objection, and an exception is taken to the ruling, and by reason of said erroneous ruling the plaintiff recovers judgment, and the testimony is taken down by the official reporter, who fails to note the objection and exception, and the defendant moves for a new trial, and adopts as his statement the report of the official reporter, without observing the error in the report, and by means thereof fails to obtain a new trial, the mistake has been accompanied by such negligence of defendant's attorney that a Court of equity will not relieve against the judgment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The Court below rendered judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Argument for Appellants.

John Reynolds, for Appellants.

The whole scope of this complaint is to correct an alleged error of law committed by a Court of law. Courts of equity will not entertain bills for such a purpose. (14 Cal. 142; 4 McLean, 12; Merit v. Baldwin, 6 Wis. 439; Shottenkirk v. Wheeler, 3 Johns. Ch. 279-81.) No fault whatever is charged upon the defendants, and Courts of equity will only relieve against unjust judgments, where some fraud, actual or constructive, has been practiced. (Pinkham v. McFarland, 5 Cal. 137; 3 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, Secs. 1,489-1,491.) Taking the complaint in its whole scope, and giving it the most liberal construction, it cannot be sustained. It is destitute of equity. Plaintiffs seek nothing now but what they have had two opportunities to avail themselves of at law, and have neglected them both. (Hilliard on New Trials, Sec. 3, p. 451; authorities cited by plaintiffs' counsel; Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 226; Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 443-447; 1 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, 467, and 3 id. 1,468, 1,489, 1,491, 1,495; Strope v. Sullivan, 1 Kelly, 136; 1 Johns. Ch. 97.)

If for no other reason, this bill should be dismissed on account of the laches of the plaintiffs, and they are chargeable with the knowledge and neglect of their attorney; and the attorney must be held to have had notice and knowledge of what occurred under his own exclusive direction. He was not justified in relying on the reporter's notes. They form no part of a statement; and if it was intended that they might be so used, why require any settlement of the statement? (See Prac. Act, Sec. 195; 3 Graham & W. on N. T. 1,520.)

W. H. Patterson, for Respondents.

The assessment was void, there being no dollar mark before the figures showing the valuation. (Hurlbut v.

Argument for Respondents.

Butenop, 27 Cal. 50; Bradley v. Seaman, 30 Cal. 619; People v. San Francisco, S. N., 31 Cal. 135; People v. Hastings, 34 Cal. 571.) The facts are sufficient to authorize the relief awarded. (Wright v. Eaton, 7 Wis. R. 607; Huebschman v. Baker, 7 id. 542; Bacon v. Jones, 1 Comstock's R. 281; Huggins v. King, 3 Barb. R. 619; Truly v. Wanzer, 5 How. U. S. 141; Kent v. Ricards, 3 Md. Ch. 397; Pollock v. Gilbert, 16 Georgia R. 398; Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 332; Lambro v. Anderson, 1 Chandler, 224; Little v. Price, 1 Md. Ch. 182; Graham & Waterman on N. T., Vol. 1, pp. 572-4.) If the attorney could not be made answerable as for negligence in the given case, the client, having no knowledge, and trusting to his attorney, cannot be held guilty of negligence. (Patterson v. Matthews and Wife, 3 Bibb, Ky. R. 80.) As it is only through the attorney that laches can be imputed to the client (as by proxy), the measure of the attorney's negligence is the criterion by which the conduct of the client will be determined; and if the attorney is not chargeable, the client will not be presumed to be. We are content to state the rule as it obtains in most of the United States, in which attorneys and counsel are allowed to contract for fees and pay for their services, which are held to be "the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence." (Varnum v. Martin, 15 Peck, 440; Goodman v. Walker, 21 Ala. [N. S.] 647; Ransom v. Cothron, 6 Sanders & Marshall, 3 Mason, 405; Pennington v. Yell, 6 Eng. Ark. 212; *Wilson v. Was it culpable negligence in the attorney to rely on the certified notes of the reporter as being a faithful and correct transcript of the evidence taken on the trial? The statute declares they shall be deemed and taken to be correct. We argue then, that the accident or mistake not being the act of the attorney, or of his clerk or agent, he is not chargeable with or liable for the consequences of it.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

There seems to be no conflict in the authorities as to the principles upon which Courts of equity interfere to grant relief against judgments recovered at law. It must appear that the party could not avail himself of his defense in the action at law, or that he was prevented from doing so by fraud, accident, or mistake, without fault or negligence on his part. To this effect are all the authorities cited; and the only question I deem it necessary to discuss is whether the defendants in the action sought to be set aside were guilty of negligence.

That action was brought to recover certain premises in San Francisco, and the plaintiff in that suit relied entirely upon a tax title. The assessment roll was introduced, showing the assessment upon which the tax sale was based, and from that it appeared that no dollar mark was prefixed to the valuation of the property in the assessment. This assessment has in several cases since that trial been declared void by this Court. The evidence was taken down by the official reporter; and judgment having been rendered for plaintiffs, a motion for a new trial was duly made, and a statement of the evidence proposed and settled. On the trial the plaintiffs in this action — defendants in that — had objected to the assessment roll on account of the defect above mentioned; but in making up their statement on motion for a new trial they adopted the report of the official reporter, who had taken down the statements from the assessment roll as though the dollar mark had been added. This error was not observed by the counsel for the defendants in that action until twenty days after the judgment had been affirmed by this Court. It is claimed that the judgment in that case must inevitably have been reversed but for this mistake on the part of the official reporter.

It will be observed that these plaintiffs had the full benefit of all the facts in the trial of the former action in the District Court. The assessment was correctly read there. And yet, in the present action, the same Court, claiming to sit as a Court of equity, has set aside its former judgment, rendered before upon precisely the same facts which were before it in the former case, and not only without proof of accident, mistake, or fraud, but upon positive proof that there was neither. It is not claimed that the District Court, on the former trial, would have granted a new trial if the evidence had been correctly stated. The true evidence was before that Court, and neither counsel nor the Court seem to have discovered that the statement did not accord with the facts. The reason for this most likely was that this fact was not regarded as very essential until after the decision of this Court declaring the defect fatal to the assessment. The only effect of the mistake was that defendant in that action failed to obtain a review of his case in this Court. To obtain the benefit of such a review is the real object of this action.

No case cited raises any question as to the degree of negligence which will prevent a party from obtaining relief in this form. I think it clear, however, that one is bound to exercise at least ordinary care and diligence in the management of his defense to the action brought against him. As I think the complaint in this case shows a want of ordinary care and diligence, it is not necessary to inquire whether a party could obtain relief in this way, although he may have been guilty of some degree of negligence.

In the first place, the evidence, as written out by the reporter, is not the statement contemplated in section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act. No prudent attorney would adopt it as a statement of evidence without a careful examination to see if it stated the evidence and noted his exceptions correctly. The reporter is not required to take down documentary evidence; and if he were, attorneys would scarcely accept his copies in preference to the originals; and if they did it would be very negligent not to compare them when the case turns upon so slight a thing as the omission of a letter or a dollar mark. The official reporter cannot be expected to understand the importance of such things, and to suppose no such mistake could occur would be to credit him with greater accuracy than is often found.

Amendments were then proposed to this statement, and it became the duty of the attorney for these plaintiffs, in that action, as the moving party, to have it correctly engrossed. After that, the motion for a new trial was submitted to the District Court. If this ruling were one of the errors assigned upon that motion, it is strange that it was not pointed out, or that such an assignment of error were made in the statement, and the statement itself not examined to see if the errors appeared. The only office of the statement is to show the errors, and the attorney ought to have seen that only such evidence as was necessary to explain the points taken was inserted. On appeal to this Court the same statement was used, and it became the duty of the appellants in that case to see that a correct transcript was prepared and correctly printed, and then point out the errors to this Court.

On all these occasions it became the duty of the attorney for the defendants in the former action to examine his statement and to see that it was correct. Attorneys ought, and generally do, examine carefully their transcripts before they have been printed for use here, to see if they are correct, in order that prompt measures may be taken to supply defects. If the error had existed only in the transcript used here, it certainly would have been culpable negligence to allow so material an error to pass unnoticed.

Statement of Facts.

The judgment is reversed and the Court directed to sustain the demurrer.

Mr. Justice WALLACE, having been of counsel below, did not sit in this cause.

JAMES B. CHASE AND THOMAS DE VRIES v. CHRISTIAN H. CHRISTIANSON AND R. MURDOCH ET AL.

COLLATERAL ATTACK ON JUDGMENT.—If the Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, and acquires jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, the decision of all other questions arising in the cause is but the exercise of that jurisdiction, and an erroneous decision of any of these other questions cannot impair the validity and binding force of the judgment, when brought in question collaterally.

ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT NOT VOID.—A judgment rendered by the Court in a cause in which it has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person is not void, even though it may exceed the measure of relief demanded in the complaint, and no answer may have been filed.

STAY OF EXECUTION.—The Court will not, on motion, order a perpetual stay of execution on an erroneous judgment, if it had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person of defendant.

SECTION ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVEN OF THE PRACTICE ACT.—Section one hundred and forty-seven of the Practice Act, which provides that the relief granted to the plaintiff shall not exceed that asked in the complaint, has no application to questions of jurisdiction.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

In the action to recover the street assessment, the complaint was filed December 30th, 1864. The plaintiff in his complaint asked for judgment against the lot, and that a decree be made for the sale of the lot, and that all persons claiming subsequent to the date of the warrant be barred and foreclosed of all equity of redemption. There was no claim for a personal judgment against the defendants. Judgment was rendered December 23d, 1865, and it contained the following clause: "And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that if the moneys arising from such sale shall be insufficient to pay the amount due to plaintiffs, with interest, costs, and expenses of sale as aforesaid, that the Sheriff specify the amount of such deficiency in his report of said sale, and thereupon judgment shall be docketed against the defendant, R. Murdoch, who is personally liable for the payment of the debt, for the amount of such deficiency, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the date of said report; and that plaintiffs have execution therefor against said R. Murdoch, defendant within named."

An order of sale was issued on the judgment, and the lot was sold by the Sheriff on the 30th day of January, 1866. There was a deficiency of one thousand three hundred and fifteen and sixty-two one hundredths dollars returned by the Sheriff. An execution was issued against the property of Murdoch for this deficiency, and he moved the Court for a perpetual stay of the execution on the personal judgment. The Court below denied the motion, and the defendant, Murdoch, appealed from the order denying the motion.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. M. Seawell, for Appellant.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, and James Mee, for Respondent.

The judgment in this case was erroneous, and not void, and the omission to appeal within statutory time rendered it valid. (Clarey v. Hoagland, 6 Cal. 688; Ex Parte Cohen, 3 Cal. 494; De Castro v. Richards, 25 Cal. 52; People v. Sheppard, 28 Cal. 115; Mayo v. Ah Loy, 32 Cal. 480; *Langanneur v. By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The motion made by Murdoch to set aside the execution and to perpetually stay all other proceedings upon the personal judgment against him, was correctly denied.

The motion proceeded upon the assumed ground that the judgment itself was not merely erroneous, but was utterly void — so much waste paper — and to be treated as a mere nullity whenever and however assailed.

The subject matter of the action was a claim assessed by the plaintiffs for street work in San Francisco, and which was alleged in their complaint to have been assessed upon a certain city lot, of which Murdoch was averred to be owner. Murdoch appeared in the action and made defense. Here, then, was jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person, and, these conditions conceded, the decision of all other questions arising in the case is but the exercise of that jurisdiction, and an erroneous decision of any of these other questions could not impair the validity and binding force of the judgment when brought in question collaterally.

One of the questions, and the first one in natural order, for determination at the trial of the action had in the Court below, was as to whether or not the plaintiffs had any claim to be paid. That being determined in their favor, then came the question of its amount. Upon that being ascertained, the quo modo of its enforcement unavoidably presented itself for the judgment of the Court. Murdoch was thereupon adjudged to be personally liable for any deficiency which might remain after the proceeds of the sale of the lot should be exhausted, and execution was accordingly directed to issue against his property therefor.

This was a decision upon the quo modo. The judgment of the Court might have disposed of the question in some other way. It might have limited the plaintiffs to the proceeds of the sale of the lot, or it might have adjudged Murdoch to of the Western Pacific. The property of respondent, Seale, was in the same condition, with reference to the Western Pacific, as that of E. P. Reed; but the Southern Pacific took a portion of his land in addition to that taken by the Western Pacific. The Commissioners awarded Seale fifty dollars damages for his land taken, and six hundred and fifty dollars for damages to his land not taken. James F. Reed and his children owned one hundred and fifty acres, and the land taken for the track of the Southern Pacific was a portion of this track. The Commissioners awarded them one thousand five hundred and forty dollars for their land taken, and four thousand and one hundred dollars for damage to their land not taken.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Peckham & Payne, for Appellants.

The ordinance of the Mayor and Common Council of San José was passed in pursuance of authority conferred upon them by the Legislature. (See Laws of 1861, p. 618, Sec. 21.) This ordinance conferred upon the railroad company the right to lay their track upon the street, and to pass and repass over it with their trains, without making any compensation to the original proprietor of the soil. . The mere possibility of reverter to the original owner, or his heirs or grantees, is not an appreciable interest requiring compensation. (See Wright v. Coster, 3 Dutcher, 76; Plant v. Long Island Railroad Co., 10 Barb. 26; Adams v. The Saratoga and Washington Railway, 11 Barb. 414; Chapman v. Albany and Schenectady Railway, 10 Barb. 260; Drake v. The Hudson River Railway, 7 Barb. 508; Applegate v. Lexington and Ohio Railway, 8 Dana, 289; Wolf v. The Covington and Lexington Railway, 15 B. Monroe, 404; Williams v. The New York Central Railway, 18 Barb. 222, 246; Brainard v. Connecticut River Railway, 7 Cushing, 506.)

S. O. Houghton, for Respondents.

The only right a railway company can acquire to a street of a city is the same easement which the public in general enjoy. The grant by the City of San José only gives the appellants the public property in the street, and does not prevent E. P. Reed from recovering any damages that he may sustain by reason of the location of the road in question. (Fletcher v. Auburn and Syracuse Railroad Co., 25 Barb. 463, 464.) That Reed will be damaged by the construction of appellants' road, is beyond question. His property will be to a great extent inaccessible, unless he gives to the public at least ten feet off of the front of his property, on the side upon which the additional track is laid. "The owner of land adjacent to a street has a right, as an essential incident to his title, to certain services and easements in the street, which are as inviolable and may be as valuable to him as his right to the land itself; among these is the right to free and unobstructed passage into and upon the street to and from his adjacent land." (Chapman v. The Albany and Schenectady R. R. Co., 10 Barb. 367.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an appeal by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from a judgment awarding damages to each of the respondents, severally, for lands in the City of San José, taken by the appellant for the use of its railroad. The respondent, E. P. Reed, was the owner of a considerable tract, containing about thirty acres, within the corporate limits of the city, and in the year 1862 laid it out into lots and blocks, fronting on a street called Dame street, which he opened and laid out through the property with a view to enhance its value. Subsequently, the Western Pacific Railroad Company obtained the right of way for its road through said street, and damages to the amount of three thousand dollars were awarded to said Reed and paid to him by said company; and thereupon the track of their road was laid in the center of said street, and has ever since continued to be used for the conveyance of freights and passengers. In 1868 the city authorities, by ordinance, granted to the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valley Railroad Company the right to lay their track through said street; but the right was not exercised, and the company assigned to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company what rights it acquired in this respect under the ordinance. The street is eighty feet wide, and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company has laid its track on one side of the street, as near to the track of the Western Pacific Company as could conveniently be done to permit of the safe passage of trains over the two roads. But there is left a very narrow space between the track of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and the sidewalk — too narrow to allow the safe transit of teams and vehicles when trains are passing over that part of the road. In the present action the Commissioners awarded to Reed damages to the amount of two thousand dollars, which award was confirmed by the Court; and the company has appealed. The award is resisted on three grounds, to wit: First — That Reed has already been paid by the Western Pacific Railroad Company all the damages which he has sustained or to which he is entitled by reason of the use of the streets for railroad purposes. Second — That, as assignee of the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valley Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company is authorized, by ordinance of the city, to lay its track through the street without the payment of damages to any one. Third — That the damages awarded are excessive, and not justified by the proofs. But neither of these grounds is tenable. If it be conceded that Reed dedicated the lands included in the street to public use as a highway for ordinary travel, with a view to enhance the value of his conterminous lands (and the evidence shows that it had that effect), it by no means results that his adjoining lands may not be greatly depreciated by devoting the street to railroad purposes—a purpose not contemplated by him when the street was opened. Taking this view of his rights, the Court awarded to him three thousand dollars for the damages which he suffered by the location of the track of the Western Pacific Railroad Company through the street. But this gave to that company no title to the land, nor any interest in it, except a mere easement, consisting of a right of way over the street, in common with the general public. If private property was injured by the use and enjoyment of this easement by the company, the owners of it were entitled to a just compensation. But the damages paid to Reed by the Western Pacific Railroad Company were only those which he suffered from the location of the road of that company. But it by no means follows that the location of another railroad in the same street may not inflict additional, and perhaps much greater damage. A single railroad track in the center of a wide street may not very seriously obstruct ordinary travel; but another railroad track, by the side of the first, may so obstruct the street as almost to exclude it from use by teams and vehicles. It is too plain for discussion, that each succeeding railroad track laid through a public street tends to obstruct, in an additional degree, ordinary travel through it; and if the whole street be occupied with railroad tracks it would be comparatively useless as a highway for other purposes. If, therefore, Reed was damaged by the use of the street by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, he was entitled to a just compensation. Nor can the company escape its liability for the damage on the ground that, as assignee of the Santa Clara and Pajaro Valley Railroad Company, it was authorized, by the ordinance, to lay its track through this street. Without the consent of the city authorities none of the streets of the city could be used for that purpose; but this consent, when obtained, in no wise touches the question of damages to private property on the line of the street. The right to a just compensation for the injuries inflicted on private property by the appropriation of the street to a public use not contemplated when it was opened and dedicated as a highway for ordinary travel, is in no wise affected by the question whether the city authorities did or did not consent to such appropriation.

The two propositions have no just or necessary relation to each other; and the right to a just compensation in no degree depends upon, or is affected by, the fact that the city authorities did or did not consent to such use of the street. Nor can we disturb the award on the ground that the damages are excessive, and not justified by the evidence. On this point it would be sufficient to say that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence; but, giving proper weight to the judgment of the Commissioners, we think the preponderance of the evidence is in favor of the award.

The views already expressed are decisive of the case of the respondent, Seale. We discover no error in the award of damages to him. In respect to the case of the respondent, James F. Reed, and his children, the appeal is frivolous. No plausible ground whatsoever is alleged why the award should be set aside, or is unjust.

Judgment affirmed as to the respondents, Seale and E. P. Reed; and as to the respondent, James F. Reed, and his children, it is affirmed with twenty per cent damages.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
JOHN G. KLUMPKE, ELISHA HIGGINS, ALEX-ANDER BLANC, WILLIAM C. HOFF, A. A. HAR-VEY, W. J. TURNER, HERMAN WOHLER, AND
C. K. GARRISON.

EVIDENCE IN EJECTMENT — DIAGRAM TO SHOW CLAIM.— In an action of ejectment, where the question in controversy was the position of the red line, or water front, of San Francisco: held, that a diagram, made by the County Surveyor and believed by him to be correct, though not an official plat, was admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing what the party offering it claimed to be the true position of such line.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER FRONT — HARBOR COMMISSIONERS' MAP.— In an action of ejectment by the State for land in San Francisco claimed to be outside of the red line, or water front: held, that the map purporting to have been made in 1864 by order of the State Harbor Commissioners, but not shown to have been approved or adopted by them, was not competent evidence in their favor to show the true location of the red line.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER FRONT — STATE LAND COMMISSIONERS' MAP.— The Board of State Land Commissioners, appointed under the Act of May 18th, 1853, establishing such Board (Stats. 1853, p. 219), was authorized to find the red line, or water front, of San Francisco, as established by the Act of March 26th, 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 307), and their map is competent evidence tending to prove the position of that line.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER FRONT — DEEDS OF STATE LAND COMMISSIONERS AS EVIDENCE.— In an action of ejectment by the State for land in San Francisco between Jackson and Pacific streets, and claimed by it to be outside of the red line, or water front: held, that deeds of the State Land Commissioners, appointed under the Act of May 18th, 1853 (Stats. 1853, p. 219), for lands to the south of Jackson street, were not admissible for the purpose of showing the position of the red line.

LOCATION OF THE SAN FRANCISCO RED LINE.— The question of the location of the San Francisco red line, or water front, established by the Act of March 26th, 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 307), is a question of fact; and the acts of official surveyors and Boards in running and mapping out the line, though they tend to show its position, yet as they could not change, they do not conclusively fix it.

SURVEYS OF SAN FRANCISCO RED LINE.— As the Act of March 26th, 1851, establishing the red line, or water front, of San Francisco (Stats. 1851, p. 307), mentioned a number of points on it with the same certainty as the initial point, the true position of the line between any two of such points can be ascertained by drawing a line between them, and it is unnecessary for a survey to commence at the initial point.

Points decided.

SAN FRANCISCO RED LINE — ACTS OF STATE LAND COMMISSIONERS — ESTOPPEL IN PAIS — If the State Land Commissioners, appointed under the Act of May 18th, 1853 (Stats. 1853, p. 219), changed the red line, or water front of San Francisco, as laid down by the Act of March 26th, 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 307), an alleged adoption and recognition by the State of the acts of the Commissioners would not effect a change or create an estoppel in pais as against the State, unless it should be shown that the Legislature and other officials, while adopting and recognizing such acts, knew that they had changed the line.

EVIDENCE OF SALES OF SAN FRANCISCO LOTS, OUTSIDE OF RED LINE. EXCLUDED. — In a suit by the State, for land in San Francisco, outside of the red line, or water front, claimed by defendants under deeds from the Board of State Land Commissioners, appointed under the Act of May 18th, 1853 (Stats. 1853, p. 219): held, that, as the Board was destitute of authority to sell such lots, it was no error to exclude defendants' proffered evidence of the reports of the Board to the Legislature, and the Controller's receipts for the purchase money paid.

DEEDS OF STATE LAND COMMISSIONERS, OUTSIDE OF SAN FRANCISCO RED LINE, VOID. — Deeds from the State Land Commissioners, appointed under the Act of May 18th, 1853 (Stats. 1853, p. 219), so far as they include lands in San Francisco, lying outside of the red line, are void.

NO REVERSAL OF VERDICT AS AGAINST EVIDENCE, WHERE CONFLICT. — A verdict and judgment will not be disturbed, as being against evidence, where there is a conflict in the evidence.

DEED VOID FOR UNCERTAINTY OF DESCRIPTION. — Where a deed called for a lot in San Francisco, commencing on the north line of Jackson street, seventy-two feet from the intersection of Jackson and Drumm streets, running thence easterly on the north line of Jackson street fifty feet; thence north on East street forty feet; thence at right angles west fifty feet; and thence to the place of beginning: held, that if East street did not extend north of Jackson street, or was so understood and recognized. East street was a false call, and must be rejected; and the deed, as the description then would fit equally well four different parcels of land, would be void for uncertainty.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS — ADVERSE POSSESSION OF ONE'S GRANTORS. — In an ejectment suit by the State, for land in San Francisco outside of the red line, where a defendant claimed title under the statute of limitations, and relied upon the adverse possession of his grantors; but it appeared that his deeds either called for land different from that sued for, or were void for uncertainty of description: held, that he did not connect himself, by means of such deeds, with the possession of his grantors.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

This was an action brought by the people of the State, upon the relation of the Board of State Harbor Commissioners, to recover possession of certain property in the City and County of San Francisco, two hundred and eighty-eight feet in length by one hundred feet in width, lying north of Jackson street and east of what was alleged to be the water front of said city and county, as established by law. Of this property the defendants were in possession, and had built piers and wharves thereon, from which they collected tolls and rents. The answers set up that the separate portions of the land held by defendants, respectively, were within and to the westward of the water front established by law; they also alleged quiet, peaceable, notorious, and exclusive possession in themselves and their grantors for ten years and upwards, and set up the statute of limitations.

When the case was called for trial in the Court below, the defendant, William C. Hoff, was not prepared, on account of the absence of his counsel, and the cause proceeded, under the order of the Judge, as against the other defendants. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, motion for new trial made and overruled, and this appeal by the defendants was both from the order overruling the motion for a new trial and from the judgment.

On the trial the plaintiff called George C. Potter as a witness, who testified that he was City and County Surveyor; that he was acquainted with the water front of the city since 1849; that he was employed by the State Harbor Commissioners, in the Spring of 1864, to make a survey and map of the city front, in accordance with the Act of the Legislature creating the Board of State Harbor Commissioners; that he made such a map, which was produced in Court; that he did not think the red line (the water front line) was laid down on the map where it crossed Jackson and Pacific streets; that a diagram had been made in his office, under his directions, which he had examined, and believed to be correct.

The diagram was then produced, marked "Exhibit A," and offered in evidence. Defendants objected that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and inadmissible, as being a mere diagram or sketch made in the office of the witness, without authority, and not an official act; and that none of the parties could be affected by it. The Court overruled the objections and permitted the diagram to go to the jury, as showing what plaintiff claimed to be the true line. Defendants excepted.

The plaintiff also offered in evidence the map above referred to, marked "Exhibit B." Defendants objected, on the ground that it appeared to have been gotten up by the direction of the Harbor Commissioners, without authority of law; that it was prepared ex parte on their behalf, for their own purposes, and could not affect the rights of, or be used as evidence against, the defendants. The Court overruled the objection and allowed the map in evidence, and defendants excepted.

The defendants, among other testimony, introduced in evidence "An act to provide for the disposition of certain property of the State of California," passed March 26th, 1851, (Stats. 1851, p. 307); also, "An act to provide for the sale of the interest of the State of California in the property within the water-line front of the City of San Francisco, as defined in and by the Act of March 26th, 1851," approved May 18th, 1853 (Stats. 1853, p. 219); also, "An act supplementary to and amendatory of the Act of May 18th, 1853," passed May 1st, 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 226). They called as a witness Richard H. Sinton, who testified that he had resided in the city since 1848; was familiar with the city front property; was connected with the State Land Commissioners (who had been appointed by and under the above mentioned Act of May 18th, 1853); had sold all the property sold by the Land Commissioners, as auctioneer for the city and State; and had, and produced in Court, the original map, according to which the sale was made by order of the Land Commissioners, and which had been made under their supervision.

Defendants offered the map in evidence. Plaintiff objected that it was immaterial and incompetent, on the ground that the Land Commissioners had no authority to fix the red line, and there was nothing to show that they had any knowledge of it. The court sustained the objection and ruled the maps out, and defendants excepted.

Defendants also offered in evidence, deeds from the State Land Commissioners for all the lots and blocks lying between Drumm, Jackson, and Washington streets, and between Washington, Clay, and Drumm streets, for the purpose of showing the location of the red line of 1851, as fixed, ascertained, and laid down by the State Land Commissioners, under the provisions of the Act of May 18th, 1853, and that the State had sold and disposed of its property in the same, in lots and blocks, according to such location of said Commissioners. The plaintiff objected, on the ground that such testimony was irrelevant and immaterial. The Court sustained the objection, and defendants excepted.

Defendants also offered in evidence the reports of the State Land Commissioners to the Legislature, dated January 7th, 1854, and other legislative documents relating to the Commission and its proceedings, and also receipts of the State Controller for the amounts due to the State from sale of lots between Jackson, Pacific, and Drumm streets and the eastern limits of the city. Plaintiff objected, on the ground that they were immaterial. The objection was sustained, the testimony ruled out, and defendants excepted.

The defendant Alexander Blanc, in his answer, claimed the lot commencing on the north side of Jackson street, seventy-two feet east from the northeast corner of Jackson and Drumm streets; running thence east fifty feet; thence at a right angle north forty feet; thence west fifty feet; and thence south forty feet. The deeds under which Blanc claimed described the property as a lot beginning on the north line of Jackson street, seventy-two feet from the intersection of Jackson and Drumm streets; running east on the north line of Jackson street fifty feet; thence north on East street forty feet; thence at right angles west fifty feet; thence south parallel with Drumm street to the place of beginning. Plaintiff objected to these deeds, on the grounds that they did not describe the property claimed by Blanc, and that they were void for the uncertainty of the description.

J. P. Hoge, for Appellants.

1. The diagram "A" was a mere sketch, made in the office of the witness Potter, without authority—not an official act—and it was not competent as evidence to affect the rights of defendants.

2. The map "B," purporting to be made by order of the State Harbor Commissioners, was improperly admitted in evidence. The Commissioners, under the statute (Stats. 1863-4, p. 144), were simply required, by an accurate plot, to show the location and lines of the streets along the water front. The evidence did not show that this map had ever been filed, or acted upon or adopted, or approved in any way by the Commissioners. The true location of the so-called red line of 1851, is a question of fact. (Cook v. Bonnet, 4 Cal. 398.) Upon what principle can the ex parte proceedings of the plaintiffs, as represented by the Harbor Commissioners, be made evidence against the defendants? The plaintiffs themselves locate the line upon which depends their whole right as against these defendants, and by their own act make it evidence, and conclusive evidence, as the result proved, of their own rights, and of the adverse rights of the defendants. Nothing can be found in the Act of 1864 to sustain any such action.

3. The true location of the red line, as established in 1851, could only be ascertained and fixed by commencing at the initial point of the line, as established by the Act of the 26th of March, 1851, and then running out the whole line according to the calls of the Act itself. The only point that could by any possibility serve to determine the position of the line, was the initial point. (Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 553; Waugh v. Waugh, 28 N. Y. 94.)

4. There was error in refusing to admit the map of the State Land Commissioners. It is difficult to understand the reasoning by which the Harbor Commissioners' map was admitted and the State Land Commissioners' map excluded. The latter was not only authorized by the Acts of the Legislature, but it was intended to fix definitely and permanently, on the part of the State, the line of water front in San Francisco, beyond which the State would never go. This map was, therefore, not only admissible, but was conclusive evidence against the State of the true location of the red line. It was, in fact, an act of State, locating the water front boundary as delineated thereon. (People v. Frisbie, October Term, 1865, not reported.)

5. The Court erred in refusing to admit the deeds of the State Land Commissioners for the lots and blocks lying between Jackson, Washington, and Drumm streets, and Washington, Clay, and Drumm streets. They were offered for the purpose of showing the location of the red line of 1851, as fixed, ascertained, and laid down by the State Land Commissioners, under the provisions of the Act of May 18th, 1853, and that the State sold and disposed of its property in the same, in lots and blocks, according to such location.

6. It was error to exclude the reports of the State Land Commissioners and the legislative proceedings thereon, and

Argument for Respondent.

Edward Tompkins, for Respondent.

1. The State owned the locus in quo, by virtue of its sovereignty, and the defendants wholly failed to connect themselves with the title thereto. The premises are wholly without the red line of the water front, as established by the Act of March 26th, 1851. The defendants averred that the premises they claimed were within that line; and hence the real issue in the case was the location of the red line of 1851. For the purpose of making out title defendants attempted to show that they had acquired it under deeds from the Board of State Land Commissioners. But to this attempt there are two answers: First, that the deeds do not profess to go beyond the red line, but, on the contrary, bound upon it; and second, the Board had no power or authority beyond that line, and the purchasers knew it. The Act under which they were appointed expressly limited them to land "within the line fixed by the Act of March 26th, 1851." It could be claimed with equal plausibility that a power of attorney authorizing the sale of a particular piece of property only, would enable the attorney to convey everything belonging to his principal. If the Board could go one foot beyond the red line, they could convey the whole Bay of San Francisco. The several offers to prove that the State received the money for the lots sold was immaterial in itself, and doubly so, because not accompanied with any offer to show that it was received with knowledge that the Board had exceeded its powers. The offer of the map of the Land Commissioners of the property within the red line, it is not supposed would have been material to any issue in this case, even if it had been otherwise sufficiently proven. The Commissioners had no more power to affect the rights of the State outside of the red line, by making a map, than they had by giving a deed.

2. The defendants wholly failed to establish a defense under the statute of limitations. It is not conceded that the statute of limitations has any application. That statute, we submit, applies only to land as such, held by the State under grant from the government, or otherwise acquired, to be used and disposed of at its pleasure, and not to the rights which it holds by virtue of its sovereignty, in trust for the benefit of the whole people. It needs neither argument nor authority at this day to establish that the Legislature could not grant away the exclusive use of the entire bay to individuals, and if not the whole, they could not any part that would interfere with the general and beneficial use. Surely they cannot do by neglect what they could not by express grant. It is further insisted, that the Act of April 24th, 1853, substantially repealed the statute of limitations, if it had before applied to such cases. It rendered the occupation by the defendants illegal, and made it a misdemeanor for the defendants to collect wharfage, or to interfere with the Commissioners in the use and occupation of the property outside of the red line. The first beach and water Act made the red line the permanent line of the water front, and required the space beyond it to be kept free from all obstructions. The second Act (Stats. 1851, p. 311) required the spaces between the wharves, outside of the red line, to be kept free from obstructions for public slips. Thus, the entry and occupation by the defendants have all been in direct violation of the statutes of the State, and for the last year have been a continuous misdemeanor, upon which no right to continue to violate the law can be founded. But if the statute applied, the defendants had the whole benefit of it, and the jury who heard the evidence found directly against them upon the facts.

3. The defendant Blane presents his case separately from the other defendants, and claims the benefit of alleged errors, that affect his interests only. It will be manifest from an examination of the transcript that he had no interests to be prejudiced. On his title, as exhibited by himself, no error that the Court could have committed would have been material. It is only those that are prejudiced that can complain of errors. It is manifest that he must make out title or show an adverse possession by himself and his grantors for over ten years. All the title or adverse possession for that length of time, which he even attempts to make out, is under a certain quitclaim deed of persons who are not shown ever to have had either title or possession, and which, in addition to other objections, is void for uncertainty of description. It calls for a lot on the north line of Jackson street, commencing seventy-two feet from the intersection of Jackson and Drumm streets. This might be east or west, and it might be seventy-two feet from the northeast or from the northwest corner. Thus, there would be four lots, either one of which would answer that call in the deed. The second line does not help it, but the third runs "north on East street." That, it will be remembered, is the east line of the lot, and the utmost the defendant can claim is, that his lot is thus located between East and Drumm streets, with East street for its eastern boundary. But by reference to the map it will be seen that not only the lot as thus located, but the whole of East street, also, is within the red line of 1851, and that the lot by no possibility can be a part of the demanded premises. Really, East street only extended to Jackson street, and hence the East line is an impossible call in the deed.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The Court did not err in admitting in evidence the diagram marked "A," offered by the plaintiffs. It was offered as a diagram, and was admissible as such, in connection with, and explanatory of, the testimony of the City and County Surveyor, and for the purpose of showing what the plaintiffs claimed to be the true position of the red line—the water front.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

The Court erred in admitting in evidence the map marked Exhibit "B," and purporting to be made by the Harbor Commissioners. It was not competent evidence of the true location of the red line, as it was not shown that it had been approved or adopted by the Harbor Commissioners.

The Court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the map made by the State Land Commissioners. The Board, in the discharge of its duties, was authorized to find the red line, but it was not authorized to change the line, or to establish a new line in the place of that which was established by the Act of March 26th, 1851. The map was competent evidence, tending to prove the position of that line, but was not conclusive evidence on that point.

The deeds of the State Land Commissioners, offered in evidence by the defendants, were not admissible for the purpose of showing the position of the red line; but they would have been admissible for the purpose of showing title in such of the defendants as claimed through those deeds, had the Court admitted evidence tending to show—as do the maps made by the State Land Commissioners—that the red line was to the east of the lots mentioned in the deeds.

The question of the location of the red line is a question of fact. The line was established and fixed by the Act of 1851. The acts of the surveyors and of the different Boards in running the line, and making maps to show the line, do not fix the line, but those acts tend to show the position of the line as established by the Act of 1851. Those officials were authorized to find, but not to fix the line, and if in running the line on the ground or in platting it, they have varied from the calls of the Act, their proceedings did not have the effect to change the line.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

A number of points in the red line were mentioned in the Act, and many of them were described with the same certainty as the initial point. By drawing a line through those points which are near the premises in controversy, the position of the red line, between Jackson and Pacific streets, can be ascertained. It was unnecessary for the surveyors, who testified in the case, to have commenced their surveys at the initial point of the red line.

If the red line, as laid down by the Land Commissioners, was the red line as established by the Act of 1851, then any adoption or recognition thereof by the State, through the Legislature, or any of her officials, adds nothing to the title of the defendants, who claim under the deeds of the Land Commissioners. If, on the other hand, the line laid down by the Land Commissioners varies from the true water front line established by the Act of 1851, the alleged adoption and recognition by the State, of the acts of the Land Commissioners in that respect will not aid the defendants, unless it be shown that the Legislature and the other officials, while adopting and recognizing the acts of the Land Commissioners, knew that they had changed the red line. That fact is not shown. The estoppel in pais asserted by the defendants against the State fails for the same reasons.

The State is neither bound nor estopped by the proceedings of the Land Commissioners in selling lots outside of the water front — if they sold any east of the red line — for they were as destitute of authority to sell lands beyond that line as beyond the State lines. The Court, therefore, did not err in excluding the reports of the Land Commissioners, and other legislative documents, and the Controller's receipt for the purchase money.

The Land Commissioners had no power to convey lands lying outside of the red line. By providing that the space adjacent to and outside of that line should be kept open for the benefit of commerce, the Legislature prohibited the sale of lands lying to the east of that line, and along the eastern water front of the city. The deeds of the Land Commissioners, to the persons under whom certain of the defendants claim title, so far as they include lands—if any—lying east of the red line, are void.

The title derived from the Land Commissioners' deeds may be assailed in an action of ejectment, by showing that the land purporting to be conveyed by the deeds, is beyond the limits of the lands which they were authorized to sell and convey; in other words, by showing that the Commissioners had no authority to sell and convey the lands described in the deeds. The description of the lots mentioned in the Land Commissioners' deeds is not given in the transcript, but we understand that the deeds purport to convey beach and water lots. Beach and water lots, at the eastern front of the city, are situated west of the red line.

If it be found that the lands in controversy are east of the red line, the defendants cannot rely on the Land Commissioners' deeds in proof of title, because the Land Commissioners had no power to sell or convey such lands; and the defendants cannot maintain their defense to the action, unless they can show adverse possession as against the State. The lands lying to the east of the red line were covered by the waters of the bay; the State held the title for the benefit of commerce and navigation, and had provided by law, that for that purpose, they should be kept open and free from obstructions. The question whether a private person can acquire a title by adverse possession, to lands held in that manner and for that purpose, will not be discussed or decided at this time. But if adverse possession of such lands can be maintained, the verdict against the defendants, other than Blanc, will not be disturbed as contrary to the evidence relative to that issue, for the evidence is manifestly conflicting.

The defendant Blanc claims that the premises for which he defends are within the red line, and that, whether they are within or without that line, he has shown an adverse possession for more than ten years. He does not claim title under the State. All the deeds through which he claims, down to and including the Sheriff's deed to McGlensy, describe the property as bounded on the south by Jackson street, and on the east by East street. If East street did not extend north of the north line of Jackson street, or if it was not so understood and recognized, East street is a false call, and must be rejected; and in that event the description of the premises would fit equally well four different parcels of land, and the deeds would be void for uncertainty. Should East street not be rejected as a false description, then the premises described in the deed would not extend to the east of the red line, and would not include any portion of the premises in controversy. The defendant Blanc, therefore, does not connect himself, by means of the deeds above mentioned, with the possession of the respective grantors named in the deeds.

WILLIAM GREGORY ET AL v. JAMES NELSON ET AL.

APPEAL.—An appeal from a judgment and subsequent order of the Court denying appellants' motion to modify the same, is only an appeal from the judgment.

WHAT JUDGMENT SHOULD BE.—A judgment should be a simple sentence of the law upon the ultimate facts admitted by the pleadings or found by the Court.

WHAT JUDGMENT SHOULD NOT CONTAIN.—A judgment should not declare the existence of facts which are not within the issues made or tendered by the pleadings, nor should it declare the judgment of the Court upon such facts.

JUDGMENT ON FACTS NOT IN ISSUE.—If the judgment decrees the existence of facts not within any issues made or tendered by the pleadings, and then pronounces the judgment of the Courts upon such facts, such part of the judgment is superfluous and void.

JUDGMENT MUST ACCORD WITH FACTS ADMITTED.—Any finding or judgment of the Court, repugnant to facts admitted by the pleadings, is erroneous.

JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS WHEN INJUNCTION IS ASKED.—If, in an action to enjoin the destruction of a ditch, the complaint avers the ownership by plaintiffs of the ditch for the conveyance of water, and that the ground over which it passes was vacant and unoccupied when it was dug, and that plaintiffs have used it for years for mining purposes, and the answer does not deny these allegations; nor set up any prior right of the defendants to the ground over which it passes, nor any claim or right of defendants to destroy it by reason of any custom, the Court should not, by its judgment, limit or restrain the right of plaintiffs in the use of its ditch, but on the pleadings should enjoin the defendants from destroying or interfering with the same, regardless of the testimony.

EVIDENCE MUST BE PERTINENT TO THE ISSUES.—The appellate Court will not presume that the Court below permitted evidence to be introduced on the trial to rebut facts admitted by the answer, nor will it presume that any evidence was received except such as was pertinent to the issues.

JUDGMENT IN ACTION TO ENJOIN WASHING AWAY DITCH.—If a party owns a ditch and the right of way for the same to conduct water for mining purposes, and has acquired such right by priority of location, the Court should not, in an action to enjoin another party from washing away the ground over which it passes, limit the plaintiff's right, by allowing the defendant to wash away the ditch if he builds a flume or other aqueduct in place of the ditch, of sufficient capacity to carry the water, and gives bond to pay the damages sustained thereby.

FACTS FOUND MAY BE PRESUMED FROM THE JUDGMENT.—If, in an action to enjoin a defendant from washing away a ditch, the answer admits the plaintiff's ownership of the ditch and right of way, but denies that the defendant is about to wash it away, it will be presumed that the Court found, as a fact, that the defendant was about to wash the ditch away if, in its judgment, it allows him to wash it away upon the condition of previously building an aqueduct to convey the water in place of the ditch.

POWER OF COURT OF EQUITY.—If a plaintiff owns a ditch and right of way for same, by priority of location, a court of equity has no power, by its judgment, to allow the same to be washed away for mining purposes, provided an aqueduct of sufficient capacity to carry the water is previously built in its place.

Argument for Appellants.

COURT OF EQUITY SHOULD NOT LICENSE TRESPASS.—A Court of equity should not license a trespass upon ditch property in the mining regions, nor compel the owner to exchange the same for another means of conveyance for the water flowing therein.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, County of Butte.

There were no findings of fact or conclusions of law in the Court below, except such as were included in the judgment.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

W. C. Belcher, for Appellants.

This judgment only requires the defendants to keep up the flume or pipe until the plaintiffs have worked out their claims. As we understand the law, if the plaintiffs, owning a reservoir for the collection of water, had acquired, by location or adverse possession, a right of way for a ditch to convey the water from the reservoir to some place of use the Court has no authority or power to limit the time, or restrict the method of use. They may, when the mining claims on which they now use it are worked out, or before, extend this ditch still further to other mining ground of their own or of others, or may use the water flowing through it for irrigation, or any other useful purpose. Their right of way for the ditch, and the right of use of the ditch, and the water, are absolute; and Courts should protect them in the enjoyment of their rights. When the Court had determined that the plaintiffs were the absolute owners of the ditch, and that the defendants were about to destroy it, the conclusion of law necessarily followed that they were entitled to the judgment of the Court, making the injunction perpetual. The duty of Courts of equity, as of Courts of law, is to ascertain and protect the rights of parties; and it never was competent for any Court to compel the owner of any specific property, real or personal, to give it up for the convenience of another, and to receive something else in its stead.

Haymond & Stratton, for Respondents.

The findings of fact are one thing, and the judgment of a Court another, and very different thing. The former contain the results of a judicial examination or inquiry into some matter of fact (Pr. Act, Sec. 180), whilst the latter embodies the sentence of the law on facts found (Pr. Act, Sec. 144). The language used by the learned Judge below, in this case, is not the language in which facts are stated, but that in which rights are fixed. It is "adjudged and decreed" (not found as facts), that plaintiffs and defendants have certain right in the premises. To treat the matters contained in this judgment as findings of fact would be to do violence to the language used; for such, evidently, was not the purpose of the Court below, or it would have used expressions more in accord with that purpose. The district is a mineral one, and the value of property of all kinds there situated depends solely upon a development of its mineral resources. To encourage that development has always been the policy of the Government, and the end of the law is the preservation of rights acquired under that policy. Whilst the miner's right to mine in a given spot, and the ditch owner's right of way is treated as real estate, yet neither has any fee in the soil, and use measures the extent of the rights of either. Both may use the same piece of land at the same time, each for his own purpose, and whilst they do so, neither can complain of the other. (O'Keiffe v. Cunningham, 9 Cal. 591.) The right of the former is to mine the land, and extract the precious metals from the soil; the right of the latter, to have his water flow uninterrupted; and whenever a Court enforces either right, it seems plain that the complaining party can demand nothing further. (Clark v. Willett, 35 Cal. 548.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This is an appeal from the judgment and subsequent order of the court denying appellant's motion to modify the same. Substantially, it is but an appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The practice adopted by the learned Judge of the District Court before whom the case was tried cannot be commended. What is termed the judgment in the case, instead of being a simple sentence of the law upon the material ultimate facts, admitted by the pleadings or found by the court, proceeds to adjudge and decree the existence of ultimate facts, some of which are not within the issues made or tendered by the pleadings, and then declares the judgment of the court upon the facts previously adjudged to exist.

The action was for the purpose of obtaining a judgment and decree perpetually restraining defendants from a destruction of plaintiff's water ditch, and from the further prosecution of mining operations, in which they were engaged in such manner as to endanger the stability and security of plaintiff's said ditch.

"The complaint is verified, and alleges that plaintiffs are the owners of certain mining claims at Cherokee Flat, and also of a certain reservoir and water privileges at or near said point, called and known as the 'Tom Jones Reservoir,' and of a certain ditch leading from said reservoir to said claims and certain other mining claims at Cherokee Flat, to conduct the water of said reservoir to said claims for mining purposes." This allegation is not denied by the answer.

The complaint further alleges that said ditch and ground in which the same is constructed was located for said ditch in 1856, and the ditch fully constructed and completed in the Fall of the same year. This allegation is not denied by the answer.

The complaint also alleges that some of the plaintiffs were the original locators of said ditch, and that all of them now own the same by good and sufficient conveyances from the first locators, and are and have been in the actual and peaceable possession of the same since June 3d, 1862, and are and have been using the same for the purposes aforesaid. This allegation is not denied by the answer.

It is further alleged that at the time said ditch was located, in 1856, and when said ditch was constructed, the ground over which it passed was vacant and unlocated, and that plaintiffs' rights in the premises are prior and paramount to any that defendants have or claim to have in the ground on the line of said ditch. This allegation is not traversed so as to put the material facts therein alleged in issue as between plaintiffs and defendants.

These averments, not denied by defendants, and hence, for the purposes of the action, admitted by them, established the plaintiffs' rights in the premises.

The subsequent averments of the complaint, as to the acts and operations, intentions and threats, of defendants, as to what they had already done and were about to do tending to endanger the safety and stability of plaintiffs' ditch, and its ultimate destruction by defendants, to the irreparable injury and damage of plaintiffs, were substantially denied by the answer.

The answer does not set up any prior right in defendants to the ground over which plaintiffs' ditch was constructed, or any part thereof; neither does it set up any claim or right, derived from the customs or usages of the mining district or otherwise, to prosecute their mining operations in such manner as to endanger the safety or security of plaintiffs' ditch, destroy the same at any point, or in any manner interfere with the same against the wishes of plaintiffs. Nor does the answer set up any claim or right of defendants to any specified mining ground, or describe any mining claims whatever as belonging to defendants.

What by respondents is termed the judgment of the Court upon the issues thus made and tendered by the pleadings, proceed first to adjudge and decree "that the defendants have title and right of possession to the mining land in action, as defined in defendants' answer." Whether this be regarded as the finding of an ultimate fact, conclusion of law or judgment, it is entirely outside of any issues made or tendered by the pleadings; hence, as a finding of fact, conclusion of law, or judgment of the Court upon the subject matter embraced therein, is superfluous and nugatory. (Burnett v. Stearns, 83 Cal. 473, 474.)

The judgment then proceeds: "It is further adjudged and decreed that plaintiffs have a right of way for the purpose of conveying water across a portion of said mining ground from the line of defendants' claim where defendants' ditch enters upon it to the point of departure of plaintiffs' ditch from the line of defendants' claim, and that the same has been acquired from and by adverse possession for more than five years last past prior to the bringing of this action, and that the ditch, the right of way for which was thus acquired from adverse possession, was of the capacity of one hundred and fifty inches of water."

Neither the complaint, answer, nor any other portion of the record before us defines or in any manner describes or indicates any specific mining ground or claims of defendants; hence that portion of the judgment, conclusion of law, or finding last quoted, for want of certainty and definiteness is utterly impotent as the assertion or protection of a right of way for plaintiffs' ditch to any extent. The allegations of the complaint in relation to the acts performed and contemplated by defendants, alleged to be injurious and prospectively destructive of plaintiffs' rights in their ditch, and that defendants have entered into a conspiracy to wash down and away so much of plaintiffs' ditch as is on the ground known as the Welsh Boys' claims; that in pursuance to said conspiracy defendants had already washed off ground abreast and along the line of plaintiffs' ditch for the distance of about one hundred feet to the depth of from twenty to twenty-five feet, and for the space of about one hundred feet aforesaid had washed down the ground to within sixteen feet of said ditch, and threaten and declare that they will continue to prosecute their operations on and through the ground over which plaintiffs' said ditch is located, and wash down and away said ditch to the extent of about four hundred and fifty feet; that defendants were then mining towards and near said ditch, and in conducting their operations use a large head of water, and run the same over the surface of the ground along the line of said ditch, thereby softening the ground and rendering it liable to break, cave, and to pass plaintiffs' ditch; that defendants declare that they will continue to run water on and over said grounds there known as the Welsh Boys' claims; that if defendants wash off the grounds upon which the plaintiffs' said ditch is located within the limits of the said Welsh Boys' claims, it would be a great and irreparable injury to plaintiffs, etc. These allegations are simply denied by the answer. Defendants, by their answer, do not claim to own or to have any right to work the Welsh Boys' claims, or any other specified ground or claims.

It is adjudged that the plaintiffs have a right of way for their ditch within some indefinite, undefined, and intangible limits, and that such right was acquired from and by an adverse possession of more than five years next preceding the commencement of this suit. The undenied allegations of the complaint are that plaintiffs' ditch was located and constructed in the year 1856; that some of the plaintiffs were the original locators of said ditch, and that all of them now own the same by good and sufficient conveyances from the first locators as aforesaid, and are and have been in the actual and peaceable possession of the same since June 3d, 1862 (the suit was commenced December 12th, 1867); that at the time said ditch was located and constructed, in 1856, the ground over which it passed was vacant and unlocated, and that plaintiffs' rights in the premises are prior and paramount to any that defendants or any of them have or claim to have in the ground on the line of the said ditch. For want of denial these averments became admitted facts in the case, and any finding or judgment in the case repugnant to these facts is erroneous.

Whether plaintiffs' rights in the premises were acquired by prior location, grant, or prescription — if they are adjudged to exist — the law protects them in the full enjoyment thereof.

The Court next proceeds to further adjudge and decree "that plaintiffs have no title, or right of possession, or right of working the mining grounds described, save and except the right of way to convey the said one hundred and fifty inches of water across a portion of the mining ground of defendants to claims of plaintiffs, until the claims of plaintiffs shall have been fully worked out, according to mining usages."

In view of the pleadings it is difficult to comprehend the pertinency or utility of the last quoted portion of the judgment; no issue is made or tendered by the pleadings as to the right of plaintiffs to work the mining grounds over which their ditch is located and constructed, and no "mining ground of defendants" is specified or described either in the complaint or answer. Again: the ownership of the ditch by plaintiffs and their right of way for the same from the Tom Jones Reservoir over and across the ground known as the Welsh Boys' claims to claims of plaintiffs "and certain other mining claims at Cherokee Flat" being established by the pleadings, we look in vain for any issue made or tendered by the pleadings to justify or authorize a judgment limiting or restricting this right of property in the ditch, and the right of way for the same to such time as "the claims of plaintiffs shall have been worked out according to mining usages."

This Court cannot presume that the trial Court required or permitted evidence to be introduced on the trial for the purpose of establishing or rebutting allegations of the complaint not denied by the answer; nor can it be presumed that any evidence was received by the trial Court, except such as was pertinent to the issues made or tendered by the pleadings, and evidence tending to rebut such legitimate evidence.

The judgment under consideration, after having adjudged and decreed as hereinbefore recited, proceeds, upon the basis of such adjudication, to modify an absolute and unconditional order theretofore granted, restraining defendants "from washing down or damaging in any manner the ditch of plaintiffs called the Tom Jones Ditch, at any point within or without the ground known as Cherokee Flat, * * * as the Welsh claims, and also from washing away the ground upon which said ditch is located, and from washing or working in any manner that will be injurious to said ditch," as follows: "It is further adjudged and decreed that the injunction heretofore issued in this cause be hereby [so] modified as to permit the defendants to mine the ground described in defendants' answer, fully and freely, and as of right, upon the erection of a flume of wood or metal pipe as shall be sufficient to conduct and convey one hundred and fifty inches of water across said grounds, for the use and benefit of plaintiffs, * * * and that said flume of wood or metal pipe shall be so erected or constructed as to delay the flow of the water of plaintiffs for the least practicable or reasonable time; * * * that prior to the washing and mining away of said ditch of plaintiffs, that defendant shall file in this Court a bond in the penal sum of five hundred dollars, payable to plaintiffs, to be approved by the County Clerk, conditioned to pay all damages which may occur to plaintiffs by the failure of defendants to keep said flume or metal pipe in repair, until the claims of plaintiffs shall be worked out according to the usage of miners, * * * and that each party — plaintiffs and defendants — pay each their own costs in this action."

The allegations of the complaint unquestionably were entirely sufficient to authorize an injunction to the full extent prayed for, and as temporarily granted by the Judge. These allegations, so far as they relate to the rights of property of plaintiffs in the ditch and reservoir, with the right of way for their ditch, as we have seen, were not denied by the answer. The subsequent allegations as to acts of defendants already performed and designed, and threatened by them to be continued, and the consequences of such acts to the property and rights of plaintiffs, if continued, are simply denied by the answer. The answer does not set up any substantive matter of defense, or claim any legal or equitable right derived from the customs or usages of the mining district or otherwise, to wash away or in any manner interfere with the plaintiffs' ditch. There is nothing in the pleadings which can serve as a legitimate foundation for, or authorize that portion of, the judgment which is styled a modification of the injunction theretofore issued. It is but a license to the defendants, upon the condition precedent of their filing their bond in the penal sum of five hundred dollars, payable to plaintiffs, to enter upon and destroy the plaintiffs' property.

If the acts and purposes of defendants, with the resulting consequences to plaintiffs' ditch, as alleged in the complaint, were established by the evidence on the trial, most clearly the Court should, by its judgment, have made its preliminary injunction perpetual. On the contrary, if the evidence failed to establish that plaintiffs' rights of property in their ditch were jeopardized by the contemplated operations of defendants, the injunction should have been dissolved and bill dismissed.

In support of the judgment modifying the previous injunction, it must be presumed that the evidence fully established the allegations of the complaint as to the designs of defendants in reference to plaintiffs' ditch, for the judgment authorizes the precise thing which plaintiffs alleged defendants designed to do, and which, by their answer, they denied—upon condition that they would give their bond in the sum of five hundred dollars, conditioned that they would substitute for a limited period, for the use of plaintiffs, a flume of wood or metal pipe in place of plaintiffs' ditch, and pay such damages as plaintiffs might suffer by reason of defendants' failure to keep such flume or metal pipe in repair. But this modification or license to defendants to invade the private property and admitted vested rights of plaintiffs without their consent, is entirely beyond and outside of the subject matter submitted to the Court by the pleadings, and for this reason alone the judgment should be reversed.

But even had the defendants, after having admitted the property rights of plaintiffs in their ditch, as alleged in their complaint, admitted their intention to wash away the ground upon which it was constructed, as alleged by plaintiffs, and alleged in justification of such purpose their design to substitute, in place of so much of plaintiffs' ditch as they should wash away, a flume or metal pipe for conducting the water for the use of plaintiffs, and that such flume or pipe would answer plaintiffs' purposes as well as the ditch, with a prayer that the Court, by its judgment and decree, authorize them to consummate their designs, upon their filing a bond, payable to plaintiffs, conditioned to keep such flume or metal pipe in repair until plaintiffs' claim should be worked out, I know of no principle of law or power in a Court of equity to justify or authorize such an invasion of the property rights of one private party to serve the wishes, convenience, or necessities of another private party. Such a principle, if once adopted by judicial tribunals, upon grounds of necessity, in view of the peculiar relations and character of private property rights of miners on the public domain, would readily be invoked as applicable to other property rights, and its practicable application would result in a system of judicial condemnation of the property of one citizen to answer an assumed paramount necessity or convenience of another citizen.

It is the duty of Courts to protect a party in the enjoyment of his private property, not to license a trespass upon such property, or to compel the owner to exchange the same for other property to answer private purposes or necessities.

ZACHARIAH MONTGOMERY, AND ELLEN MONTGOMERY, HIS WIFE, v. ROBERT O. STURDIVANT.

DEEDS WITHOUT WORDS OF INHERITANCE.—A deed, which in its granting part, simply grants, bargains, and sells to the party of the second part, and contains no words of inheritance, under our statute, conveys a fee simple title; but the title thus conveyed may be limited, in the habendum clause, to an estate for life.

IDEM.—Such limitation in the habendum clause of a deed is not repugnant to the granting clause.

HABENDUM CLAUSE IN A DEED.—The office of the habendum clause in a deed is to limit and define the estate which the grantee is to have in the property granted.

the life of the survivor, with remainder to the issue and heirs of their two bodies, and the heirs of such issue forever, vests a life estate in the grantees, and a full estate in their children.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, directing the defendant to perform specifically the contract mentioned in the opinion. The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Williams & Thornton, for Appellant.

At common law the word heirs, or words of a similar import, are necessary to the creation of a fee. (4 Kent, 6.) Our statute dispenses with the necessity of such terms to create a fee. In applying, then, this statute to a deed which omits the term heirs, and all other words of inheritance, it is necessary to inquire whether or not the intent to pass a less estate than a fee appears by express terms in the instrument itself. If such intent appears, the act has no application to the deed. The statute does not provide that this express intent must appear in one part or another of the deed. It matters not whether it appears in the premises or the habendum, so that it appears on the face of the deed. But it is said that the clause in the habendum is repugnant to the premises. We do not see in what the repugnancy consists. The grant is to Montgomery and wife, without stating the quantity of the estate. It may be for life, for a term of years, or in fee. It is the very object of the habendum "to determine the interest granted, or to lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify the premises. But it cannot perform the office of divesting the estate already vested by the deed; for it is void if it be repugnant to the estate granted. It has degenerated into a mere useless form; and the premises now contain the specification of the estate granted, and the deed becomes effectual without any habendum. If, however, the premises should be merely descriptive, and no estate be mentioned, then the habendum becomes efficient to declare the intention; and it will rebut any implication arising from the silence of the premises." (4 Kent, 519, 520; vide, also, Mitchell v. Wilson, 3 Cranch C. C. 242; Jackson v. Ireland, 3 Wend. 101.)

The language, "the issue and heirs of their two bodies," etc., is clearly intended as descriptio personæ; for the deed provides that in case of the death of one of them, the share of the one so dying shall go to his child, if he leaves any. (Wash. Real. Prop. 559; Reeves' Dom. Rel. 619.) The word "heirs" may sometimes mean the same as child or children, which are words of purchase. The word "issue," in a deed, is always taken as a word of purchase, and when so used is synonymous and coextensive with the term descendants, and includes all persons who answer that description. (4 Kent, 240; Reeves' Dom. Rel. 609 [465]; Cooper v. Collis, 4 T. R. 299.) This interpretation comports with our statute. (Laws of 1855, Sec. 5, p. 171.) In Norris v. Hensley, 27 Cal. 445, it is said: "The first thing, therefore, to be ascertained is, what the object of the testator is; the next, whether it is such as the rules of law and equity admit." In Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2,579, Lord MANSFIELD said, the rule (in Shelley's Case) is not a general proposition, subject to no control, where the intention is on the other side, and where the objections may be answered; and he agreed with Justices WILMOT and ASTON, that the intention is to govern, and that Shelley's Case does not constitute a decisive uncontrollable rule. (1 Preston on Estates, 275; Tanner v. Livingston, 12 Wend. 90.) It is a general principle that a person not a party can take nothing by the deed; but remainders are exceptions to the rule. This is admitted in the case of Eldridge v. See Yup Co., 17 Cal. 52, 53.

S. F. & L. Reynolds, for Respondent.

The most important part of a deed is the premises. A deed may be good with the premises alone, and without any habendum clause. The premises in a deed embraces the date, the parties, names and description, the recitals, consideration, the grant, and the thing granted and conveyed. (1 Wood's Conveyancing, 315; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 612, Secs. 6, 7; 372, Secs. 60, 61; 4 Kent, 468, [519]; 2 Blackstone's Com. 298.)

A deed is perfectly good without a habendum clause. A grant cannot be included in the habendum. If there is no grant, nor thing granted, before the habendum, nothing passes. If, therefore, anything is embraced in the habendum which is not granted, it does not pass. (1 Wood's Con. 324; 2 Washb. 374.) By the statute of this State, the word "heirs" is not necessary to create an inheritance.

When an estate in fee or of inheritance passes by the premises, and the habendum clause is repugnant to the grant, or by it the estate is limited in the premises or granting part of the deed, then the habendum must yield to the grant, and is void. (2 Blackstone, 298; 2 Washb. 612, 613, 642; 1 Wood's Con. 314.) The words of the habendum are mere words of limitation, as they are called, in distinction from the words in the grant, which are words of purchase and conveyance. (2 Washb. 373.) It is a principle well settled, that a limitation of the freehold to one, whether by deed or will, followed by a limitation in the same conveyance to the heirs, or heirs of the body of the grantee, will vest the inheritance in the grantee. This is the general rule, as settled in the case known as "Shelley's Case." It is said that the word "issue" is a word of purchase. That may be so in certain or limited cases, when the remainder is to the issue "then living," or any other words annexed, showing the intent to confine it to certain persons, as a particular designation of persons, and not as descendants or to an indefinite issue, or what is called to an indefinite failure of issue, then it may be a word of purchase. Whatever difference of opinion and views may have arisen in certain cases subsequent to Shelley's Case, it will be found that that difference arose rather from the application to the particular case considered, and the facts of such case, than upon the property of the rule, as a rule of property. In all those cases the rule, and its propriety as a rule of property and its application, were, with greater learning and ability, discussed in the case of Perrin v. Blake, 4 Burr. 2,579, than in any other case. See, also, Coulson v. Coulson, 2 Atk. 246; 2 Strange, 1,123; and Haynes v. Lorde, 2 Wm. Blackstone, 698.) The rule in Shelley's Case would apply if the limitation is accompanied by a declaration to the effect that the heirs shall take as purchasers, or is made to the heirs of the first taker and their heirs, or when the estate is to A. for life, and after his death to the heirs of his body, to share as tenants in common, or to be equally divided between them. (Hargrave's Law Tracts, 562-574; Toller v. Atwood, 15 Q. B. 929; 2 Wash. 272, Sec. 14; Kingsland v. Rapleye, 3 Edwards, 1.) In the last case, the words "lawful issue" were held to have as extensive a significance as heirs of the body. In Tennessee, in the case of Polk v. Favis, 9 Yerger, 209, the rule, with all its force, has been declared as a rule of property. It was declared by Judge Reeves to be a settled principle of the common law, and that whatever may have been the original policy of the rule, it was a rule of property not inconsistent with the genius of our institutions or with the liberal and commercial spirit of the age. It checked the disposition to lock up property and render it inalienable. (Dore v. Featherstone, 1 Barn. & Adol. 944; Franklin v. Lay, 6 Madd. 258; Leigh v. Norbury, 13 Ves. 339; Doe v. Harvey, 4 Barn. & Cress. 610; Doe v. Cooper, 1 East, 229.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

On the 12th day of March, 1864, Bridget M. Evoy, for an expressed consideration of one thousand dollars, conveyed to Z. Montgomery, and Ellen, his wife (the said Ellen being the daughter of the grantor), a tract of land. The premises of the deed contain no words of inheritance, but simply grant, bargain, convey, and confirm to parties of the second part a specific tract of land. The habendum is as follows:

“To have and to hold all and singular the above mentioned and described premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said parties of the second part, and to the longest liver of them, for and during their natural lives and the natural life of such longest liver, remainder thereafter to the issue and heirs of their two bodies, begotten and to be begotten, and the heirs of such issue forever, to and for the use and benefit of such longest liver of them, for and during the life of such longest liver, and thereafter to and for the use and benefit of the said issue and heirs of their two bodies, begotten and to be begotten, in equal shares, as tenants in common, the issue, if any, of any child of their bodies who may die before the death of the longest liver of said parties of the second part, to take the share and portion of such deceased child.”

In November, 1869, Montgomery and wife made a valid contract, by which they agreed to sell to defendant a portion of this land. In pursuance of this contract they afterwards tendered a deed to the defendant, and demanded a performance on his part, which was refused on the ground that plaintiffs were not the owners of the land in fee simple, the deed from Mrs. Evoy conveying to them a life estate only. This action is brought to compel defendant to perform the contract, and is resisted on the ground above stated.

It is first contended by plaintiffs that under our statute the granting part of the deed conveyed to them an estate in fee simple, and that the limitation in the habendum is repugnant to the grant, and therefore void. The section of the statute referred to is as follows:

“Section 2. The term heirs, or other words of inheritance, shall not be necessary to create or convey an estate in fee simple; and every conveyance of any real estate hereafter executed shall pass all the estate of the grantor, unless the intent to pass a less estate shall appear by express terms or be necessarily implied in the terms of the grant.”

If the habendum were entirely omitted, the deed in question would undoubtedly have conveyed an estate in fee simple; and it is, therefore, contended that the language of the habendum, which attempts to limit the estate granted to a life estate, is repugnant. Independently of the statute, the common law rule was that a deed like this, without the habendum, would convey a life estate only. The estate, though different, was just as definite as that under the rule of the statute. If the argument of counsel were correct, the result would have been that the grant could not have been enlarged by the habendum. Yet we all know that where the formal parts of a deed are all used this was the customary mode of conveying, and is still often followed.

The rule of common law was only intended to apply to conveyances in which the extent of ownership of the grantee in the thing granted was not defined in the conveyance. The statute rule was merely intended to take the place of the common law rule. Neither was intended to override the expressed intention of the parties. The office of the habendum is to limit and define the estate which the grantee is to have in the property granted. It is not an essential part of a deed, but has generally been used, and in some States the form adopted in this case is in general use. No estate is limited in the granting part of the deed, but this is done in the habendum. The Legislature did not intend to prohibit this form of conveyance, but merely to supply a rule of construction when the parties failed to define the estate conveyed. The word grant, in the last part of the section of the statute, has precisely the same meaning as the word conveyance in the preceding clause.

Giving full effect to the language of the habendum clause in this deed, it is a conveyance to the grantees for their joint lives, and to the survivor during the life of the survivor, with the remainder to the issue and heirs of their two bodies and the heirs of such issue forever.

It is contended by the defendant, and I think correctly, that this language clearly indicates an intention of limiting the interest of the grantees named in the deed to a life estate, and that the issue or children of the grantees named take by purchase and not by limitation; and this is rendered more evident from the fact that the deed goes further and uses apt words to vest an estate in fee simple in such issue, as though they had been the first takers. It is to them and their heirs, and in a subsequent clause provision is made that they shall take as tenants in common; and that in case of the death of one of them, during the life of the longer liver of the grantees named in the deed, the issue of such deceased child, if any, shall take the share of such deceased child. The conveyance is to the grantees and to the heirs and issues of their bodies. Had it stopped there, undoubtedly, by familiar rules of construction, it would have vested in Montgomery and wife an estate in fee tail general. The word issue, connected as it is with the word heirs, would not indicate a specific designation of certain individuals, but the phrase, heirs of their bodies, would clearly be a nomen collectivum, indicating a class of heirs who would take in perpetual succession. It would include all the posterity of the grantees. But the conveyance vests a new inheritance in the heirs of their bodies. They take an estate of inheritance generally. The remainder is to the heirs of the bodies of the grantees. When once vested in them, however, it is inheritable generally, and may go to those who are not descended from the first grantees. As a new descent commences from the issue of the first grantees, it is necessary that the estate shall vest in them, as the root of this new inheritance. (2 Wash. on Real Prop. 273; 4 Kent Com. 221, and cases there cited.)

This language clearly indicates an intention on the part of the grantor to limit a life estate in Montgomery and wife, and to vest a full estate in their children. Otherwise, by the terms of the conveyance, it would be an estate tail in the first grantees, and an estate in fee simple in their heirs. This, of course, could not be.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, Sutter County.

March 20th, 1868, Alfred Briggs recovered a judgment in the District Court of the Sixth District, Sacramento County, for three thousand six hundred and twenty-eight dollars and twelve cents. On the 15th of May, 1868, the Judge of said Court made an order for said McCullough and Knobland to appear before a referee to answer concerning their property. The Sheriff, the defendant here, advertised the policy for sale, and this action was commenced to obtain judgment for a return of the policy, or, if return could not be had, for its value. The defendant, in his answer, set up the proceedings supplementary to execution as a bar to the action, and on the trial they were introduced as testimony. The Court below gave judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, and in his statement inserted all the said proceedings. His specification of grounds on which he would rely for a new trial, so far as the insufficiency of the evidence was concerned, was as follows:

Because the evidence of plaintiff and defendant showed that there had been no wrongful seizure or detention of the policy by defendant; that the policy in question had been delivered by plaintiff to the defendant pursuant to a judgment of the Sixth Judicial District Court, which judgment was afterwards affirmed by the Supreme Court. Because the documentary evidence in this case established defendant's plea in bar, and showed that, first, the referee, second, the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, and, third, the Supreme Court, had each determined the policy in question not to be exempt from execution under the law of March 28th, 1868, entitled "An Act to exempt certain property named therein from execution," or any other law.

The Court below denied a new trial, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court, and in 36 Cal., referred to in the opinion.

George Cadwalader and J. G. Eastman, for Appellant.

Defendant's plea in bar was fully sustained by the evidence, and should have been allowed. (Ex Parte McCullough, 35 Cal. 97; McCullough v. Briggs, 36 Cal. 542.) This last case was a judgment upon the merits, and a final determination that the policy was not exempt from execution. The judgment of the Court below entirely ignores that section of our Practice Act providing for proceedings "supplementary to execution." According to its theory, our proceedings before the referee, District Court, and this tribunal were judicial farces. Besides Ex Parte McCullough and Briggs v. McCullough, there was for the information of the Court below the case of Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 201, declaring:

"In reference to the chapter prescribing the mode of proceedings supplementary to execution, it seems clear that those proceedings were intended as a substitute for what was called a creditor's bill. This is so stated by the Practice Commissioners, in their original note to this chapter in the New York Code. The design was, in the language of those Commissioners, to furnish a cheap and easier method. The different sections of the statute, when taken together, form a connected and harmonious whole, and when fairly and literally carried out, afford a cheaper and easier method than the former one by creditor's bill. * * * It would seem clear that so soon as the proceedings supplementary to execution were instituted before the District Court, that Court obtained jurisdiction over the case, and had authority to proceed and apply the property of the judgment debtors to the satisfaction of the judgments of the present defendants."

Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440, gives the same effect to the order of a referee as if made by a Court; and Ex Parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 175, and Ware v. Robinson, 9 Cal. 111, establishes the right to a civil appeal from a contempt order. Both the orders were after final judgment, and the last affirmed the former — in fact, embodied it. Both were appealed from and affirmed on the merits of the controversy.

S. J. Stabler and Van Clief & McCann, for Respondent.

The alleged former adjudications are not such as to estop the plaintiff from showing, in this action, that his policy of insurance was exempt from execution, for the following reasons:

The proceeding, supplementary to execution, had before the referee, was not an action or proceeding in which the orders or decisions may be regarded as res adjudicata. (Boggs v. Clark, 37 Cal. 237; Simpson v. Hart, 14 Johns. 73; Van Rensselaer v. Sheriff of Albany, 1 Cow. 512.) The question as to which plaintiff is alleged to be concluded arose and was decided, if at all, collaterally to the main issues in the former proceedings, and, therefore, the decision of it is not conclusive. (Hanlow v. Fulton, 20 Cal. 450; Caperton v. Schmidt, 26 Cal. 450; Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 521; 4 Conn. 276; 15 Cal. 145, 182.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

If the answer of the defendant was not properly verified, the plaintiff should have moved in the Court below, either to strike out the answer, or for judgment as for want of an answer. But after going to trial on the merits, without objection to the verification, he will not be allowed to raise the point, for the first time, in this Court. He must be held to have waived all objection to the verification by his failure to except to it at the proper time. The principal question in the case is whether or not the adjudication of the District Court in the proceeding supplementary to execution, and of this Court on appeal from the order of the District Court, are res adjudicata in such form as to estop the plaintiff from maintaining this action. Under our code, proceedings supplementary to execution, by which a judgment debtor is required to appear before the Court or a referee to answer concerning his property, are but a substitute for a creditor's bill at common law. It is only a summary method of purging the debtor's conscience and compelling the disclosure of any property he may have which is subject to the execution. The proceeding was intended to be summary and effectual, and affords the widest scope for inquiry concerning the property and business affairs of the judgment debtor. It is true there are no formal issues framed; for in the very nature of the proceeding it would generally be impossible to frame specific issues in advance of the examination of the judgment debtor. The very object of the proceeding is to compel him to give information concerning his property; and until the disclosure is made there is nothing upon which an issue could be framed. Nevertheless, witnesses may be called and examined on either side; and after hearing the case the Court or referee is to decide what property, if any, the judgment debtor has which is subject to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, and to direct its application accordingly. The proceeding is purely judicial, involving an examination into the facts upon sworn testimony, and the decision of questions of law arising on the facts proved. The judgment creditor and debtor are parties to the proceeding, and each is at liberty to call and examine witnesses in respect to any contested fact which may be brought in issue in the course of the proceeding. If the parties to such a proceeding, as between themselves and privies, are not estopped from again litigating the same matters in another form of action, the whole proceeding would be but a judicial farce, accomplishing no useful end. But it is too plain for argument that, after the Court or referee has finally decided that a specific parcel of property should be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, the only remedy which the law affords to the judgment debtor is an appeal to this Court from the order of the District Court.

If he claims that the property was exempt from execution, and that the Court erred in ordering it to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, he has a plain and adequate remedy by appeal to this Court; but cannot again litigate the same matters in an independent action, as the plaintiff has attempted to do in this case. Before the referee and the District Court he distinctly made the point that the policy of insurance was exempt from execution and was not liable to be applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment. The referee decided against him and ordered him to deliver the policy to the Sheriff, who then had the execution, in order that he might apply the policy toward satisfying the judgment. Refusing to obey the order, the Court ordered him to comply with it, on pain of being committed for a contempt. Still refusing, and after being committed to prison, he sued out a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that the policy was exempt from execution and that he was illegally committed for refusing to deliver it. On the hearing the writ was dismissed, and thereupon the plaintiff delivered the policy to the Sheriff as he had been ordered to do, but prosecuted an appeal to this Court from the order of the District Court. On the hearing of the appeal, the plaintiff insisted in this Court that the policy was exempt from execution; but on the facts, as presented on the appeal, we held otherwise, and that the referee and the District Court properly ordered it to be applied towards the satisfaction of the judgment. (86 Cal. 542.) After an adjudication by the referee, the District Court and this Court upon the precise point, that this particular policy was not exempt from execution and ought to be applied towards the satisfaction of Briggs' judgment, it is quite evident, that as between Briggs and himself, the plaintiff is estopped from again litigating the same question. And as between them the estoppel was mutual. If the Court had decided in that proceeding that the policy was exempt from execution, Briggs would have been concluded by the judgment, in like manner, and for the same reason, that the plaintiff is now concluded by it. Nor can the plaintiff assert any rights as against the Sheriff, the defendant in this action, to whom he delivered the policy, other than those he could have asserted against Briggs. The plaintiff being estopped to deny that the policy was properly ordered to be applied towards the satisfaction of the judgment, and the Sheriff having received it and now holding it, in obedience to that order, which has been affirmed by this Court, it is clear that the Sheriff, in seeking to apply the policy toward the payment of the judgment, is only performing a duty enjoined upon him by law, and, therefore, cannot be treated as a wrongdoer.

I think the defendant's specifications in his statement of the particulars wherein the evidence was insufficient to justify the judgment or decision of the Court, were sufficiently specific. The only object of the specification required by the statute is, clearly, to direct the attention of the adverse party to the particular point on which the evidence is laimed to be insufficient; and the specifications in this case were sufficient for that purpose.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The controversy is between the creditors of the company; and the principal question made is as to the validity of a note for thirteen thousand dollars, given by the company to

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, J.

Locke & Montague, with a mortgage upon the company's property to secure its payment, and which they seek to foreclose in this action. The other creditors, who levied attachments upon the mortgaged property subsequently to the recordation of the mortgage, allege, and gave evidence tending to show, that the thirteen thousand dollar debt was fictitious.

Locke & Montague do not claim that the company was indebted to them in that sum; but it is claimed that the note and mortgage were executed to them to secure sundry creditors of the company in the payment of divers sums, alleged to be severally owing to them; and, among others, the claim of one J. W. Moore (deceased since the making of the mortgage) for three thousand dollars.

To show that the claim of Moore was actual and bona fide, Locke & Montague offered the genuine receipt of Prescott & Scheidel, foundrymen of Marysville, acknowledging the payment to them by Moore of the sum of five hundred dollars for certain machinery, furnished and paid for by Moore for the benefit of the company, and used in the construction of the company's mill. The receipt was objected to as "irrelevant, and not the best evidence the nature of the case would admit of." The Court sustained the objection, and the plaintiffs excepted.

In Prather v. Johnson, 3 Harris & Johns. 490, the Court of Appeals of Maryland say: "If A., as surety for B., pays a debt due to C., on the proof of the payment, A. could recover of B. He could recover on C.'s saying A. had paid; and, of course, if C. wrote that A. had paid, surely it is evidence whether the writing was in a book or letter." This decision of the Court of Appeals was lately cited and approved by the Supreme Court of the United States. (3 Wallace R. 149.)

In Holladay v. Littlepage, 2 Munf., 306, the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia held that in an action of assumpsit, in which the plaintiff sought to recover for passage money paid by him for the testator of the defendant, upon the voyage of the testator to Europe, the statements of the Captain of the ship, made to a third party, in which he admitted that the plaintiff had advanced the passage money for the testator, was admissible. The District Court had admitted the evidence, on the ground that the Captain was dead; but the Court of Appeals said "the acknowledgment" (of the Captain of the ship) "having been made at or about the time of the said testator's sailing for Europe; and being the admissions of those who were competent to charge themselves with the receipt of the passage money, by an ordinary receipt or acquittance, the Court is of opinion that the said testimony, on these grounds, and not on that assigned by the Court below, was properly received by that Court." (See also, Sherman v. Grosby, 11 Johns. 70.) We think the receipt was prima facie evidence that Moore did make the payment in question — of course the fact of the indebtedness of the company to Prescott & Scheidel must be shown by other evidence than the receipt.

As, for this error, the case must go back for a new trial, it will be unnecessary to express an opinion upon the questions of practice presented, since upon the new trial they will not probably arise.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURT—RECONVEYANCE BY EXECUTOR OF LAND HELD AS SECURITY.—A Probate Court has no authority, on the petition of an executor, to order him, on the receipt of money loaned, to reconvey real estate, conveyed to his testator by deed absolute on its face, but intended only as security for the repayment of such money.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

This was an action of ejectment, to recover possession of a portion of the Rancho Los Potos, in Solano County. There was a former appeal in the same case, which will be found reported in 36 Cal. 625. It appears that the original title was a Mexican grant to Manuel Cabeza de Vaca and Juan Felipe Pena, afterwards confirmed and patented by the United States Government.

The plaintiffs claimed title under a deed executed in 1848 by Vaca to Jacob D. Hoppe and Zimri Hollingsworth. This deed was not recorded until December 31st, 1851; previous to which, in 1850, Vaca executed another deed of the same land, recorded August 22d, 1850, to William McDaniel, who had also become the purchaser from Pena. In 1854 McDaniel executed a deed, absolute on its face, to J. Caleb Smith, and George T. Marye, of the land purchased by him of Vaca. Afterwards J. Caleb Smith died, and Austin E. Smith was appointed, by the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, the executor of his last will and testament.

Statement of Facts.

In 1858, Austin E. Smith, as such executor, presented a petition to the Probate Court of San Francisco, setting forth; that on or before August 10th, 1854, McDaniel entered into a contract with the said J. Caleb Smith and George T. Marye, whereby said Smith and Marye agreed to advance, and did advance to McDaniel, at a monthly interest of two per cent, the sum of five thousand dollars; that for the purpose of securing the payment of the said sum and interest, McDaniel conveyed to Smith and Marye, by deed absolute, the property mentioned; that there was then due and owing, on the sum so advanced, the amount of eight thousand eight hundred and fifty-three dollars, which said McDaniel was ready and willing to pay upon the proper reconveyance being made to him of the property; that Marye had sold and transferred all his interest in the property to H. Clay Smith, who was ready to make a reconveyance to McDaniel upon the receipt of his portion of said money; that the only obstacle in the way of a full and final settlement of the matter was the inability of the petitioner to execute the necessary deed as the executor of said J. Caleb Smith, deceased, without the order of the Court; and praying to be allowed, upon receiving the portion of the money due the estate, to make, execute, and deliver the necessary conveyance of the property to McDaniel. In response to this petition, proceedings, analogous to those usual upon a petition for the sale of real estate, took place in the Probate Court; and on May 10th, 1855, an order and decree was entered, directing the executor, by deed of release and quitclaim, to reconvey the property to McDaniel upon the payment of the amount found due the estate; and a deed in accordance with that order was soon after made, executed, and delivered by the said executor.

Upon the trial of the cause from which this appeal is prosecuted, after the plaintiffs had introduced their proofs, the defendants offered the record of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, in the above mentioned matter, for the purpose of showing a reconveyance to McDaniel, under whom they claimed, of the interest previously conveyed by him to J. Caleb Smith, deceased. The plaintiffs objected to the admission of the record and evidence, upon the grounds that the same were irrelevant and incompetent to show any transfer of title, for the reason that the Probate Court had no jurisdiction to receive the petition of Austin E. Smith, or to act upon the same or the subject matter thereof, or adjudicate the same, or to enter the order and decree prayed for and entered, and that no authority was shown in Austin E. Smith to execute the deed so as to make it operative as a conveyance of the legal title to McDaniel. The objections were overruled and the record admitted in evidence, to which rulings plaintiffs excepted.

There was a judgment for defendants; and a motion for a new trial having been denied, the plaintiffs appealed.

M. A. Wheaton and James L. English, for Appellants.

The petition of Austin E. Smith was a bill in equity, and the order entered thereon was a regular decree in equity, which bill and decree could only have been entertained in the District Courts of the State. As the State Constitution then read, the District Courts had "original jurisdiction in law and equity in all civil cases where the amount in dispute exceeds two hundred dollars, exclusive of interest." (Const., Art. VI. Sec. 6.) Austin E. Smith did not believe, and no one will now contend, that he had any power as executor to convey such legal title to McDaniel, unless he could obtain such power from some Court. Under the statutes the only power which the Probate Court had to order a transfer of legal title was in cases of probate sales, and the instances in which decedents were bound by contracts in writing to convey real estate. (Probate Act, Secs. 205, 206.) If it should be claimed that Austin E. Smith and the Court were intending to proceed under the sections of the Probate Act last quoted, then we say the petition was entirely insufficient to confer jurisdiction, because it was presented by the executor, and not "by any person claiming to be entitled to such conveyance;" nor did it set forth any facts upon which such claim could be predicated, to wit: that J. Caleb Smith was bound by any contract in writing to make such conveyance, nor, indeed, did it even state that McDaniel, or any one else, claimed such conveyance. The petition not being presented by one having a right to present it, and not stating enough to confer jurisdiction upon the Probate Court, its entire proceedings in the matter were a nullity. (Gregory v. McPherson, 18 Cal. 576; Hayes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 314; Townsend v. Gordon, 19 Cal. 207; Gregory v. Taber, 19 Cal. 409; 4 Kent's Com. 303; 1 Story's Eq. Jur. 29; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 128; Willis v. Farley, 24 Cal. 499; Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 32.) The question is important, because our deed was good against all the world, except parties holding under Vaca's second deed; and any interest in the land which they do not hold under that conveyance we are entitled to recover, because we have the legal title to it, and the defendants have no title whatever to it. It is only subsequent bona fide purchasers, for a valuable consideration of the same interest, conveyed by the first deed, which are protected. (Recording Act, Secs. 26, 41; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 373.)

JAMES REILLY ET AL. v. GEORGE RUDDOCK ET AL.

SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT.—Where the Court makes an order requiring the plaintiff to appear at a time specified, and show cause why a default of the defendant for failure to answer should not be set aside, and there is no service of the moving papers, but the application is heard and decided in the absence of plaintiff's attorney, and where there is no reasonable excuse for the failure to answer within the proper time, it is error for the Court to set aside the default.

SHOWING OF DILIGENCE.—It is not a sufficient showing of diligence to excuse a failure to answer, for an attorney who has interposed a demurrer, which is afterwards struck out, and default for failure to answer entered, to make an affidavit that he was present in Court at the calling of the law calendar, on law day, and answered, "Ready," when the demurrer was called for argument, but did not then argue it, because the opposing attorney was not present in Court; and that he did not know that the Court would entertain a motion concerning a demurrer, except on a regular law day, without stating that he had no notice of the motion to strike out the demurrer, nor when he was informed, for the first time, that it had been struck out, nor that he supposed the demurrer to be still pending until after the time for answering had expired.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action upon a promissory note. The defendants demurred to the complaint; the demurrer was struck out, and a default for failure to answer was entered against them. Afterwards, on motion of defendants, the default was set aside, and an answer was filed. The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict was rendered for the defendants. Plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Thomas H. Brents, for Appellants.

Plaintiff's counsel had no sufficient or any notice of defendant's motion to set aside the default. (Vallejo v. Green, 16 Cal.) The affidavit upon which the motion for leave to answer was based was insufficient, because it failed either to excuse the default or to present a meritorious defense. (Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 423; Johnson v. Clarke, 6 Wend. 517; King v. Merchants' Exchange Co., 5 Sand. 697; Slover v. Forbes, 22 How. 477; Elliott v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 377.)

W. H. Tompkins, for Respondents.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The default of the defendants for a failure to answer was improperly set aside: First—Because there was no service of the moving papers, and the application was heard and decided in the absence of the plaintiff's attorney, who had no notice of the motion. This was error. (Vallejo v. Green, 16 Cal. 160.) Second—No reasonable excuse was given for the failure to answer within the proper time. The defendants had interposed a demurrer to the complaint, and the defendants' attorney states in his affidavit that he was present in Court at the calling of the law calendar on the last preceding "steamer day," and answered "Ready" when the demurrer was called for argument, but did not then argue it, because the plaintiff's attorney was not present in Court; and that he did not know that the Court would entertain a motion concerning a demurrer except on the regular law days. The Court, in the meantime, had stricken out the demurrer, because, as we infer, it was deemed to be frivolous. But the attorney does not state that he had no notice of the motion to strike out the demurrer, nor when he was informed, for the first time, that it had been stricken out, nor that he supposed the demurrer to be still pending, until after the time for answering had expired. This was the only showing of diligence, and the only excuse offered for failure to answer, and it was clearly insufficient.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to vacate the order setting aside the default of the defendants, and with a further order that the answer of the defendants be stricken out.

CORNELIUS KING v. JOSEPH H. BLOOD AND ISAAC HARTMAN.

COMPLAINT IN SUIT ON JUDGMENT.—In a complaint, in an action brought on a judgment, it is unnecessary to aver that an execution has been issued on the judgment, and an unsuccessful effort made to collect it.

STATEMENT IN SUMMONS.—A statement in a summons, that "the said action is brought to recover judgment against the defendants for the sum of five thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars and twelve cents, and interest at three per cent. per month from November 14th, 1863, and the further sum of eleven dollars and twenty cents, and the costs of this action," is sufficient to answer the twenty-fourth section of the Practice Act, as a copy of the complaint is served with the summons.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS AND COPY OF COMPLAINT.—When there are several defendants, and all are served with summons in one county, the presumption is that all resided in the county where served, and a service of a copy of the complaint on one is deemed a service on all.

Argument for Respondent.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. A. Cobb, for Appellants.

The Practice Act (section twenty-four) requires that the summons shall state, among other things, "the cause and general nature of the action." A statement that the action is brought to recover a judgment for so many dollars, without anything further, is not stating the cause or general nature of the action. (Polack v. Hunt, 2 Cal. 193; People v. Woodlief, 2 Cal. 241; Porter v. Herrmann, 8 Cal. 619; Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449.) If the summons contains no cause of action, but refers to the complaint for a further statement of a cause of action, it is sufficient. No such reference is made to the complaint, in the summons under consideration, for a fuller statement of the cause of action. It is a good defense to an action on a judgment to show that execution is still available on the former judgment. (White v. Hadnot, 1 Port. 419; Welles v. Dexter, 1 Root, 253.)

Whiting & Naphtaly, for Respondent.

As the statute required a certified copy of the complaint to be annexed to the summons, the most general statement is sufficient; a detailed one would be surplusage. The cases cited by appellant in this connection all arose on motion to strike out the summons, which is the only way to take advantage of any defect that might exist in it. We have not been able to obtain access to 1 Port. It may have been under a local statute, or it may have arisen on issue joined. At all events, it is sufficiently answered by the fact that our State has adopted the common law rule, which treated a judgment like any other contract. And from the next case quoted by appellant, it would seem that the fact of a remedy, to be available on execution, must be affirmatively shown to constitute a defense.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This action was commenced in the Fourth District Court, City and County of San Francisco, by filing a complaint and causing summons to be issued thereon on the 15th day of November, 1867, to recover the amount of a former judgment against defendants.

The summons states that "the said action is brought to recover judgment against the defendants for the sum of five thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars and twelve cents, and interest at three per cent per month from November 14th, 1863; and the further sum of eleven dollars and twenty cents, and the costs of this action;" and further notified defendants that if they failed to appear and answer the said complaint within the time specified in the summons, plaintiff would take judgment against them by default for the said sum of five thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars and twelve cents, and interest from November 14th, 1863, at three per cent per month, and for the further sum of eleven dollars and twenty cents, and the costs of this action.

The summons, together with a certified copy of the complaint, was duly served upon defendant Blood, in the City and County of San Francisco, on the 23d day of May, 1868; and the summons was duly served on defendant Hartman, in the same city and county, on the 1st day of June, 1868. The defendants having failed to appear, answer, or demur, judgment by default was entered against them by the Clerk of said Court, on the 25th day of June, 1868. From this judgment defendants appeal to this Court, having filed their notice of appeal June 1st, 1869; and now insist that the judgment is erroneous and must be reversed, because the summons, as appears from the record, does not state "the cause and general nature of the action," as required by the twenty-fourth section of the Practice Act. And it is further contended that the complaint fails to state a good cause of action upon a judgment, because it does not allege that an execution had been issued upon the judgment and an effort made to collect the same, without success.

The last point is untenable. There is no more necessity for alleging an unsuccessful effort by execution to collect the judgment, upon action brought thereon, than there is for alleging an unsuccessful demand upon defendant for the payment of an overdue promissory note made by him.

Upon the first point I think the statement in the summons a substantial compliance with section twenty-four of the Practice Act. Again, a certified copy of the complaint was served with the summons personally upon one of the defendants, and as both of defendants were served with the summons in that county, they are, therefore, presumed to have been residents of said city and county, and service of such copy is deemed to have been made upon both. (Calderwood v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 153.)

By the summons and copy of complaint thus served the defendants were fully and particularly notified of the cause, general nature and object of the action, the relief sought, the time within which they were required to appear and answer, and the consequence of a failure to appear.

The error or defect claimed to exist in the summons is more technical than real, and I am unable to discover that any substantial right of defendants could be affected thereby, or that the judgment should be reversed on account thereof. (Prac. Act, Secs. 71 and 188; Page v. O'Neil, 12 Cal. 493; English v. Johnson, 17 id. 107.)

HORACE ALLEN v. JOHN CURREY.

BILL OF REVIEW FOR NEW TRIAL.—A bill of review for a new trial must be filed within the time allowed by law for the prosecution of an appeal, or writ of error, in the original cause, a review of which is sought.

BILL TO SET ASIDE A JUDGMENT AS FRAUDULENT.—A bill of review to set aside a judgment as fraudulent will not be sustained on the ground that the opposing party was sworn as a witness in the case in which the judgment was rendered, and knew of a fact which, if proved, would have given judgment to the other party, and failed to disclose it, and witnesses have since been discovered who will testify to such fact.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

The facts out of which this case arose are stated in Currey v. Allen, 34 Cal. 254. The complaint in this case averred that Currey recovered a judgment against Joaquin Y. Castro on the 24th day of October, 1855; that an execution was issued October 26th, 1855; and the Sheriff, on the 29th day of November, 1855, sold the land, and that plaintiff became the purchaser, and received the Sheriff's certificate of sale; and that the Sheriff, on the 25th of April, 1863, gave him a deed; that on the 24th of August, 1865, Currey brought suit to have him declared a trustee, and to compel him to convey to him (Currey); and that Currey was a witness on the trial, and testified that Allen bought as his agent, and for him; and that Allen was a witness, and testified that he did not buy as Currey's agent, and that no other witnesses were sworn. The complaint then recited the judgment in the former cause, and the affirmation of the same in the Supreme Court; and that Allen had since discovered new evidence, to wit, that of Joseph Emeric. This suit was commenced in June, 1869.

The other facts are state in the opinion.

A. W. Sweet, for Appellant.

The suppression of facts material to an issue, where the party is in conscience bound to reveal them, is fraud. (See 1 Story Eq. Jur., Sec. 187; 1 Story Eq. Jur., Secs. 204-207; Page's Ep. R. 390, Sec. 2; Page's Eq. R. 394, Sec. 4.) Fraud taints, and when shown, will set aside and annul all contracts and judgments and decrees, either in law or in equity; and equity Courts have, from time immemorial, had unlimited jurisdiction over all cases of fraud, whether the fraud consists in contract, or in obtaining a judgment in a Court of last resort.

H. Allen, also for himself.

A bill of review will be entertained in equity when it appears on the face of the pleadings that the former decree is against law, or when there is newly discovered evidence that could not have been brought before the Court in any manner, before the final determination of the case. (2 Barbour's Ch. Prac. 90-93.)

S. F. & L. Reynolds, for Respondent.

The proposed evidence, if proven by Emeric, would be only cumulative to that of Allen, tending only to discredit that of Currey, and to corroborate that of Allen. It has been long established as a just and reasonable practice not to grant a new trial to introduce new witnesses or new evidence to points before in controversy. There would be no safety in trials upon any other doctrine. And in no case will a new trial be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, which does not relate to new facts but goes only to corroborate the testimony given at the former trial; or which consists merely of cumulative facts or circumstances, relative to the same matters controverted at the former trial. (Smith v. Bush, 8 John. 84; Pike v. Evans, 15 John. 210; Steinbach v. Columbian Co., 2 Caines, 129; Taylor v. Stage Company, 6 Cal. 228-230; Blockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160-163; Live Yankee v. Oregon Co., 7 Cal. 40-42.) If the bill in this cause shall be considered as of review then it should have been filed within one year after the decree in the former case was entered. The well settled rule of England is, that such a bill will not lie after the time when a writ of error to a judgment at law could be brought. That time there was twenty years. (Story's Eq. Pleadings, Sec. 410; Smith v. Clay, Ambl. R. 645; Cooper Eq. Pleadings, 91.) Here the time for an appeal or writ of review is one year.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In the action of Currey v. Allen the precise point in issue was whether or not Currey had authorized Allen to bid in the land in contest, at the execution sale, in Allen's name and for his own benefit; or whether, in bidding it in, Allen was acting only as the agent and attorney of Currey. This was the only point in contest; and each of the parties testified in his own behalf, and there was no other evidence in the cause. The judgment was in favor of Currey; and after a motion for a new trial, which was denied, Allen appealed to this Court. On the hearing of the appeal the judgment was affirmed (34 Cal. 254), and thereupon Allen conveyed to Currey the title he had acquired at the execution sale, as he was required to do by the judgment.

The present action is in the nature of a bill of review, or for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, to the effect that Currey, many months prior to the former action, had admitted, in a conversation with one Emeric, that he had authorized Allen to bid in the land in his own name and for his own benefit, and that he (Currey) had no interest whatever in the land. The District Court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and entered a final judgment for the defendant from which judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

If the complaint be treated as a bill of review, the application for relief came too late. Nearly three years had elapsed after final judgment of the District Court in the former action before the complaint in this case was filed; and it is well settled that courts of equity will not entertain a bill of review after the time within which an appeal or writ of error may be prosecuted. The repose of society demands that when a controversy has been ended by the final judgment of a Court, it shall not be reopened except within a reasonable time; and in respect to bills of review Courts of equity have adopted, as a reasonable period within which they may be prosecuted, the time allowed by law for the prosecution of an appeal or writ of error. (Story Eq. Pl. Sec. 410; Smith v. Clay Ambler R. 645; Cooper Eq. Pl. 91; Thomas v. Harrie, 10 Wheaton R. 146.)

Tested by this rule, and treating the complaint as a bill of review, the Court below properly refused to entertain it, because it came too late. But the plaintiff claims that the judgment in the former action was obtained by means of a fraudulent suppression, by the present defendant, of the facts of the transaction, and ought, therefore, to be set aside on the ground of fraud. The fraud imputed to the defendant is his alleged failure to disclose at the trial the fact that he had authorized the plaintiff to bid in the land in his own name and for his own benefit; but it is said that instead of admitting this fact, as he ought to have done, the defendant denied it, when testifying in his own behalf; and it is proposed to prove the truth of this allegation by the testimony of Emeric, in addition to that of the plaintiff himself. It is not pretended that any new fact has occurred since the former trial, to vary the rights of the parties, nor that the plaintiff was then ignorant of the facts of the transaction. All that he has since discovered is some additional testimony tending to sustain the theory of the facts, and to rebut that of the defendant. But it is quite evident that if a judgment could be set aside as fraudulent on such a showing as this, litigation would be interminable. If, on another trial, the plaintiff should still fail to maintain his case, he might, on the same theory, thereafter institute a new action on the discovery of additional evidence, and so on ad infinitum. If the losing party were permitted to assail the judgment as fraudulent, on the ground that his adversary knew the facts to be as he claimed them to be at the trial and failed to disclose them, and that he has since discovered some additional evidence tending to prove them, a judgment, instead of being a "final determination of the rights of the parties," as defined by the statute, would be little else, in its legal effect, than an order to show cause why it should not be set aside.

Judgment affirmed.

[No. 2,256.]ABEL GUY v. CHARLES BIBEND.

DEFENSE IN SUIT ON NOTE.—The fact that contemporaneously with a promissory note, a parol agreement was made, that the note should be payable only out of the surplus arising from the sale of goods assigned to the payor, as security for a debt due him, it appearing no such surplus has arisen, is no defense in a suit on the note.

Argument for Respondent.

CONSIDERATION FOR NOTE.—A promise by A. to B. to give B. further time to pay a debt he owes to A. is a good consideration for a promissory note, given by C. to A., for the amount of B.'s debt to him.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff demurred to the answer, and the Court below sustained the demurrer. The defendant declined to amend the answer, and the plaintiff had judgment by default. The defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Whiting & Naphtaly, for Appellant.

While we admit, as of course, that this note in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value could not be disputed, we are at a loss to see how the holder, a party to the note, receiving it with the understanding that it was to be paid to him only upon the happening of a contingency—that is, the realization by Bibend of the amount of the note in excess of his own claim—can possibly claim that he has any right to enforce the payment of the note. The contingency upon which the note was to become payable has not occurred, and no consideration has been received by the maker.

Pringle & Pringle, for Respondent.

The defense is an attempt to vary by parol the written instrument. It seeks to convert an absolute promise into a promise to pay out of a certain fund, or, on the happening of a certain event. (Cowen & Hill's Notes to Phillips Ev. 591.) The pleader evidently hopes to rely upon the general rule that in commercial paper between the original parties he may prove the want or failure of consideration, although a consideration be expressed. Certainly, if he leaves the instrument to say what it purports to say, he may prove that it is void for misrepresentation or for want of consideration. But in this case he cannot reach his defense without first changing the character of the instrument. This note, if it did not take away the respondent's right of action against Wegener & Schoenbar, at least suspended his remedies against them, and this delay was a sufficient consideration for the note. (Miller v. Cook, 23 N. Y. 495; Moscher v. Hotchkiss, 40 N. Y. 161.)

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The plaintiff sues upon a promissory note, and the answer sets up as a defense that the note was obtained under these circumstances: The firm of Wegener & Schoenbar were indebted to defendant in the sum of thirty-three thousand dollars, and in payment of such indebtedness conveyed to defendant personal property estimated to be worth more than eighty thousand dollars; that after the conveyance of this property to defendant, plaintiff's agent, and also Wegener & Schoenbar, requested defendant to give plaintiff his promissory note for some two thousand four hundred dollars, representing, as an inducement to defendant, that he would realize out of the assets assigned to him twenty thousand dollars or thirty thousand dollars more than his claim. That defendant thereupon agreed to give his note, payable only out of such surplus, and then did execute and deliver to plaintiff his note, payable in four months. At the expiration of this time, not having realized the assets assigned to him, he gave plaintiff a new note, with the understanding that it should be paid only out of such surplus. When this second note became due, defendant paid nearly one-half the sum due, and gave a new note for the residue, which is the note sued upon. This note is alleged to have been given with the express understanding that it was payable only out of the surplus arising from the assets received from Wegener & Schoenbar, and that there was no other consideration for the note than the expectation created by the representation that there would be a large surplus arising from such assets. The property received from Wegener & Schoenbar has been sold, and there is no surplus whatever; that the sum realized did not equal one third of the indebtedness of Wegener & Schoenbar to him.

Points decided.

The facts averred in the answer show a contract or understanding, made contemporaneously with the note, that it should be payable only out of a particular fund, to wit: the surplus arising from the assets received from Wegener & Schoenbar, after paying the debt due to defendant. This defense cannot be maintained. To do so would be to vary or add to the terms of the written contract by parol. It does not go to the consideration of the note. The answer shows a sufficient consideration for the note in the credit given by plaintiff for the indebtedness of Wegener & Schoenbar to him. The first note was payable four months from its date, and was accepted in lieu of the claim of plaintiff against Wegener & Schoenbar. The note sued upon is payable thirty days after date. The demurrer, therefore, was properly sustained.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

Ejectment to recover one hundred and sixty acres of land. For several years prior to January 1st, 1867, a contest had been going on in the United States Land Office between Brennus Kenyon, a brother of the plaintiff, and the defendant, relative to the demanded premises, the same being a part of the public domain of the United States. Said Brennus claimed the land as a pre-emptioner, under the laws of the United States; and the defendant claimed it by a location made through him by the State of California, as a part of the five hundred thousand acres granted by Act of Congress to the State of California for school purposes. This contest was decided by the Secretary of the Interior in favor of said Brennus, on the 29th day of January, 1867. On the 22d day of January, 1863, the defendant obtained a judgment against said Brennus for thirteen hundred and fifty-eight dollars. On the 19th of March, 1867, the defendant caused an execution to be issued on the judgment; and the Sheriff, on that day, levied on the interest of said Brennus in the land. On the third day of April following said Brennus paid the United States for the land, and received a certificate of purchase. On the twenty-ninth day of April thereafter, the Sheriff, after legal notice, sold the land to satisfy the execution, and the defendant became the purchaser. On the 1st day of October, 1867, a patent was issued by the United States to said Brennus for the land. On the 29th day of October, 1867, the Sheriff executed a deed to the defendant. On the 30th day of April, 1867, said Brennus conveyed the land to the plaintiff, and again, in 1868, made another conveyance to the plaintiff.

Argument for Appellant.

On the trial of this action the defendant offered in evidence the said judgment, execution, Sheriff's certificate of sale, and deed. The plaintiff objected to the same, and the Court overruled the objection. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. H. Budd, for Appellant.

The Court erred in overruling the objection of plaintiff to the judgment, execution, Sheriff's sale, and Sheriff's deed, offered in evidence by defendant. Such evidence was clearly irrelevant under the pleadings. The legal title was derived from the United States under the patent. The most that could be claimed from such evidence was to show that the defendant had acquired the equitable title of plaintiff's grantor to the land, arising from payment of the purchase money to the United States; but the answer sets up no such equitable title. In ejectment, unless an equitable defense is set up, the legal title must prevail. (Clark v. Lockwood, 21

Argument for Respondent.

Cal. 220.) An equitable defense cannot avail a defendant unless it be pleaded. (Cadiz v. Majors, 33 Cal. 288.)

The Sheriff could not have levied on the equitable interest of plaintiff's grantor arising from payment of the purchase money, since such equitable interest did not exist at the time of the levy. The levy controlled all subsequent proceedings. (Steaper v. Fisher, 1 Rawl. 155.) Plaintiff's grantor acquired his right to the land under the preëmption laws of the United States. This right could not be assigned or transferred prior to the issuing of the patent. (Preëmption Act of 1841, Sec. 12.) There is no ambiguity in the preëmption law on this point. It provides that "all assignments and transfers of the right hereby secured prior to the issuing of the patent shall be null and void."

George W. Tyler, for Respondent.

At the time of the levy and sale, Brennus Kenyon had an equitable title to the land, a preëmption claim being an equitable interest that can be sold on execution. At any rate, the right acquired by him upon payment for the land, and taking a certificate of purchase, may be sold, as well as taxed. (Pr. Act, Sec. 217; People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645; Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 255.) The Sheriff levied on all the right, legal and equitable, Kenyon had, and that right passed by the Sheriff's deed. At common law, whatever title the debtor had at the levy and sale passed by the deed, because the title passed by the sale, and the deed could be executed at once. The same rule prevails in States where no redemption is allowed by statute. (Starks v. Harrison, 5 Rich. 7; Ernstine v. Sawyer, 2 Wend. 507; see, also, 9 Cowen, 182.) But under our statute the purchaser at Sheriff's sale gets no title till the Sheriff's deed is executed. (9 Cal. 103; 12 Cal. 128; 26 Cal. 655.)

It seems somewhat absurd to hold that when a man pays for the land and gets a certificate of entry, and then his rights are divested by a Sheriff's sale, that, if the naked legal title comes into the debtor before the time for redemption expires, the same would not pass by the deed.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

Assuming that the preemption claim of Brennus Kenyon was subject to seizure and sale under the defendant's execution (a point not now necessary to be decided), all that the Sheriff could have done, and all that he attempted to do, was to seize and sell such right, title, and interest as Kenyon had in the premises at the time of the levy, and such as he acquired between the time of the levy and sale. At the date of the levy Kenyon had no title to the land, either legal or equitable, not then having paid the purchase money or obtained a certificate of purchase. (Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475.) But after the levy, and before the sale, he paid the purchase money and obtained a certificate of purchase, which vested in him an equitable title, and which entitled him to a conveyance of the legal title by a patent from the Government. Assuming that this equitable title was and could be sold to the defendant under the execution, when he obtained the Sheriff's deed he thereby became invested with the equitable title of Kenyon, and nothing more, this being all that the Sheriff sold, or had the power to sell. But the Sheriff had no power, and did not attempt, to bind Kenyon by any covenant of warranty, seizin, or for further assurance, nor are any such covenants implied by law in the Sheriff's deed. The defendant, by his purchase and the Sheriff's deed, had simply succeeded to the equitable title of Kenyon; and when the latter afterwards obtained the legal title by means of the patent, he held it in trust for the defendant, and could have been compelled to convey it upon a proper application to a Court of equity for that purpose. The defendant, however, claims that under section thirty-three of the Act concerning conveyances, the legal title conveyed by the patent inured to his benefit, and vested in him by operation of law. But that section has no application to a Sheriff's deed made under an execution sale. This section provides that "if any person shall convey any real estate, by conveyance purporting to convey the same in fee simple absolute, and shall not at the time of such conveyance have the legal estate in such real estate, but shall afterwards acquire the same, the legal estate subsequently acquired shall immediately pass to the grantee, and such conveyance shall be valid as if such legal estate had been in the grantor at the time of the conveyance." To bring a conveyance within this section, it must have been made by the party by himself or his duly authorized attorney; but a Sheriff's deed is not made by the judgment debtor, nor does it purport to be a conveyance by him. On the contrary, it is made by an officer of the law having authority to convey the title of the judgment debtor in invitum, and does not, on its face, purport to convey the fee, but only such right, title, or interest as the judgment debtor had. The section above quoted has no application to such a conveyance. It results, from these views, that the defendant acquired, if anything, only an equity in the land by the Sheriff's deed, and that the legal title conveyed by the patent did not pass to the defendant; and if he desired to avail himself of his equitable title as a defense to this action, he should have pleaded it, and asked the appropriate relief. Not having done so, he was not entitled to give it in evidence, under the answer as it now stands.

I deem it unnecessary to express an opinion on the other points presented on the appeal.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the defendant to amend his answer if he shall elect to do so.

JACOB MORRIS ET AL. v. EULOGIO F. DE CELIS.

PASSING ON MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.—The Court should not decide a motion for a new trial before the statement, as settled, has been engrossed and certified as correct.

REMARK.—Even if the statement has been settled, engrossed, and certified, and filed as correct, the Court should not pass on the motion for a new trial, until it has been submitted for decision, and the parties afforded an opportunity to be heard if desired.

SETTING ASIDE ORDER MADE ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—If a motion for a new trial is decided by the Court, before it has been submitted, the order denying or granting the new trial should be set aside as improvidently made, if application is made therefor.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

The statement on motion for a new trial had no certificate of the Judge attached to it, nor did it appear by the record, except as stated in the order denying the motion to set aside the order granting a new trial, that it had been settled. The appellant made a statement on appeal from this order, reciting the motion to set aside the order, and containing an affidavit that the motion for a new trial had not been submitted, and appellant's counsel had no notice of submission until after the order was made granting a new trial, and reciting the order granting a new trial, and the following order made by the Court: "Statement on motion for new trial submitted for settlement by the Court, who took the same under advisement." This statement the attorneys on each side stipulated to be the statement on appeal.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

Glassel, Chapman & Smith, and James H. Lander, for Appellants.

There was, therefore, no basis to support an order setting aside the verdict of the jury, and the judgment thereon, and granting a new trial herein. (Cosgrove v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 509; Kimball v. Semple, 31 Cal. 657; Linn v. Twist, 3 Cal. 89; Baldwin v. Frere, 23 Cal. 461; Vilhac v. Biven, 28 Cal. 409; Marlow v. Marsh, 9 Cal. 259; Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304.)

Thom & Ross, and V. E. & F. Howard, for Respondent.

The purported statement on motion for new trial cannot be reviewed by this Court for any purpose, for the obvious reason that it is not authenticated, either by stipulation of the respective parties, nor by a certificate of the Judge, nor in any manner whatever. (Practice Act, Sec. 195; Cosgrove v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 509; Marlow v. Marsh, 9 Cal. 259; Baldwin v. Frere, 23 Cal. 461.)

It does not appear that appellant's attorney ever applied to be heard, and if he had, it was a matter discretionary with the Judge. The Judge had a right to set aside the verdict and order a new trial the moment it had been placed upon the record.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

A verdict and judgment for defendant having been rendered, the plaintiffs gave notice of their intention to move for a new trial.

The statement in support of the motion, and the amendments proposed thereto, were submitted for settlement on May 9th, 1870. On July seventh following an order was entered granting the motion for a new trial. Neither party appears to have been notified in anywise, in the meantime, that the statement had been, in fact, settled. No opportunity for engrossment was afforded, nor was it even known, with certainty, what matters would be contained in the statement when it should be thereafter finally engrossed and certified, so as to be used on the hearing of the motion for a new trial. On August fifteenth following a motion was made by the defendant to set aside the order granting a new trial, on the ground that it was improvidently made, that the motion for a new trial had never been submitted, etc. This motion came on to be heard on August twenty-second, and was supported by affidavit of the counsel for defendant and the records of the Court, and was then heard and taken under advisement until September 5th, 1870, when an order was entered denying the motion. This last order is as follows:

"This cause having been heretofore submitted on motion to vacate and set aside the order granting a new trial herein, the same having been well considered by the Court, it is ordered that the statement on motion for new trial, as submitted by the plaintiffs, together with such of defendant's amendments as are marked 'Allowed,' and the testimony of O. W. Childs and Matthew Keller, be, and the same is, the statement as settled by the Court, and is allowed as the true statement in the case. It is further ordered that said statement, so settled, be considered now as having been engrossed at the time of its settlement. And whereas, the said statement was settled before the motion for new trial was passed upon by the Court, but was not certified or engrossed, by reason of an inadvertence growing out of the multiplicity of duties devolving upon the Court at that time, it is further ordered that said statement, so settled, be and the same is hereby settled and considered engrossed, now for them. It is further ordered that defendant's motion to vacate and set aside the order granting a new trial herein is hereby denied, and that the said order, heretofore made, granting a new trial, be and is hereby affirmed.

"MORRISON, Judge.

Opinion of Rhodes, C. J., dissenting.

"Los Angeles, August 31st, 1870.

"Filed September 5th, 1870."

I think that the Court below should have sustained the motion of the defendant to set aside the order granting the motion for a new trial. Even in view of what is recited in the order of September 5th, it is clear enough that the motion for a new trial itself had never been submitted to the Court for decision; and even if the Court had in the meantime not only settled the statement, but had engrossed it, and certified and filed it as a correct statement, it should not have undertaken to determine the motion until that motion had been first submitted for decision, and the parties afforded an opportunity to be heard on the motion, if desired.

The practice here pursued operated as a complete surprise upon the defendant, and if countenanced would be utterly subversive of the rights of parties litigant.

It is ordered that the order of the Court below, denying the motion of the defendants to set aside the order granting a new trial, be reversed, and that the cause be remanded, with instructions to sustain said motion of the defendant, and for further proceedings for the orderly determination of plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

RHODES, C. J., dissenting:

The appeal is taken from an order granting a new trial, and from an order refusing to vacate the order granting the new trial. The foregoing opinion proceeds on the latter order alone. I would be content with merely expressing my dissent, were it not that the opinion establishes a new rule of practice, and in doing so overrules, without mentioning Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304, and the authorities on which the decision in that case was based, and the large number of cases following Quivey v. Gambert. Indeed, so constant and uniform have been the decisions since that case, that by far the larger number have been rendered orally from the bench. The appeal in that case was dismissed because the order was not a special order made after final judgment. Nor is the order in this case a special order after final judgment in the sense of the statute. I do not propose, at this time, to reopen the discussion of the question involved in those cases.

I concur with my associates in the opinion that the action of the Court in passing on the motion for a new trial, before it was submitted, was erroneous; but I have no manner of doubt that the error can be corrected on an appeal from the order granting a new trial.

[No. 1,733.]DICK GERDES v. CHARLES MOODY ET AL.

CONSTRUCTION OF DEED.—Powell gave a power of attorney to Neleigh, authorising him to convey certain lots in San Jose, confirming by the terms of the instrument any sales he might make. Soon after receiving the power of attorney, Neleigh sold the property to Naglee for a fair consideration, and conveyed it to him by his own deed, in which there is no reference to Powell; but about a year thereafter, and while the power of attorney remained in full force, Neleigh indorsed on the deed a writing to the effect that the lots were intended to be sold to Naglee under the power of attorney, and that he executed the deed only as the attorney for Powell, adding: "and as such attorney I do hereby bind John W. Powell, his heirs and assigns, to the within agreement, having received the consideration as within specified. (Signed): ROBT B. NELLEIGH, Attorney." Held, that in order to ascertain the intention of the parties, these two papers must be construed together, and that under the circumstances they constitute an attempt by Neleigh to convey to Naglee under the power of attorney.

RELIEF FOR DEFECTIVE EXECUTION OF POWER OF ATTORNEY.—Such a case is the ordinary one of a defective execution of a power, and a Court of equity will afford the appropriate relief.

DEED—WHEN INVOKED.—It is only when there has been an unsuccessful attempt to execute a power in proper form that the interposition of a Court of equity is properly invoked.

Argument for Appellants.

EQUITIES OF OCCUPANT WITHOUT LEGAL TITLE.—Neither the fact that the party in possession first entered as an intruder without title, and subsequently obtained from Naglee all his title to the premises, nor the fact that Naglee reconveyed one of the lots to Neleigh soon after the making of the second writing, would impair the equities of the party in possession.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BAR TO EQUITABLE DEFENSE.—In an action by the vendor of lands holding the naked legal title against his vendee to recover the possession, the vendee having paid the purchase money and being rightfully in possession under his contract of purchase, the statute of limitations is not a bar to the equitable defense of the vendee and to his right to affirmative relief.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

S. O. Houghton, for Appellants.

1. In equity Powell is bound by the contract of sale made by his duly authorized agent. The instrument attached to the deed made by Neleigh to Naglee declares fully the intention of the agent to bind his principal; and the fact that that instrument is not signed with the name of the principal by the agent, does not make the instrument inoperative. It was an attempt to execute the power, but it was defectively executed. While equity will not compel the execution of a power of this character, it will relieve in the case of a defective execution of it in favor of a purchaser for a valuable consideration. (Willard's Eq. Juris. 83; Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. 142; Beatty v. Clark, 20 Cal. 35; Story's Eq. Juris., Vol. 1, Secs. 169, 170; Love v. The Sierra Nevada Water and Mining Co., 32 Cal. 652.)

Neleigh, at the time he executed the second instrument, was still the attorney in fact of Powell, and yet had power to bind him, for there is no proof that his power ever was revoked; and if he had the power to bind Powell in the first instrument, but failed to do it through ignorance or by mistake, he could yet remedy the defect.

Argument for Appellants.

A power over a legal estate defectively executed at first may be executed over again, and the last execution shall stand, the first being a nullity. (Hervey v. Hervey, Bernardiston's Chan. R. 111.)

The testimony of Neleigh shows that the lots in question were really the property of Neleigh, and when he made the deed to Naglee he may have acted upon the belief that his own deed would pass the legal title; but, subsequently, it is evident he learned that such was not its effect, and to remedy the defect he executed the second instrument. Neleigh testifies that he applied for the grant of these lots, and that he paid for them with his own money — fourteen dollars each.

2. In a contract for the sale of real estate, when the consideration is paid and the purchaser goes into possession, the vendor holds the legal title in trust for the vendee. The trust which arises from such a transaction is a presumptive or resulting trust. (Taft v. Stephenson, 7 Hare, 1; Green v. Smith, 1 Atk. 572.)

The general rule in relation to the enforcement of trusts is, that so long as the trust subsists or is recognized, no lapse of time will bar the beneficiary from asserting his rights to the trust property as against the trustee, whether the trust be express or implied. But it is conceived that the principle upon which the statute of limitations is set in motion in all cases of trust is the same — that is to say, it begins to run from the time that the claims of the cestui que trust and the trustee become adverse. It has been stated in some cases in general terms, that as between the trustee and cestui que trust an express trust will not be barred by any length of time. That rule, however, is subject to the qualification that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust still subsists. (Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Merivale, 360; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 4 Mylne & C. 53.) The statute begins to run from the open disavowal of the trust and what amounts to an adverse possession by the trustee. (Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 John. Ch. R.; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. S. C. R. 411.) In this respect, express and resulting trusts stand substantially upon the same footing. The general rule is, that after the sale of land, and before a conveyance of the legal title, the vendor is the trustee of the vendee, and the Act of limitations will have no operation. (Piper et al. v. Lodge, 4 Serg. & R. 310.) Whenever the legal title is in one person and the real interest in another, they form but one title, and the statute of limitations does not run between the holders of such title until the trustee disclaims and acts adversely to the cestui que trust. (Rush v. Barr, 1 Watts, Penn. 110; Lyon v. Marclay, 1 Watts, Penn. 271; Murdock v. Hughes, 7 S. & M. 219; Wesner v. Barnett, 4 Wash. C. C. 631; 2 Story's Eq. Juris., Sec. 1,520.)

The general rule seems to be, that the time when the trustee disavows the trust or sets up a claim adverse to the cestui que trust is the terminus a quo — the statute of limitations begins to run.

The appellants have been in the actual possession of the premises for many years, and have made extensive and valuable improvements thereon, without any claim having ever been set up by Powell adverse to them, although he lived in and about San José until 1854 — was a policeman there; and in 1865 was informed by a lawyer that the lots were granted in his name.

It does not appear, then, that Powell ever disavowed the trust or denied the right of appellants to the property, or that he ever did any act which placed him in a position adverse to the right claimed by appellants until he executed the deed to respondent, even if that act, under the circumstances, could be so considered. Under these circumstances he must be considered as recognizing the trust as still subsisting, at least until he made the deed to respondent, for a disavowal must be by positive acts, and not by mere silence. If, then, our view is correct, that the statute did not commence to run so long as the trust was a recognized and subsisting one, it certainly did not begin to run before appellants filed their bill against Powell for a specific performance, August 7th, 1866, which was a few days before the deed was made to respondent, if the filing of that complaint be deemed a sufficient demand, which it doubtless was according to the rules of practice of Courts of Chancery. (Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 203; Grey v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 282; Jones v. City of Petaluma, 36 Cal. 233.)

Powell answered in that action, and denied the right of the plaintiffs therein to a specific performance; and Gerdes, the respondent, filed his petition to intervene therein, after he obtained the deed from Powell, and demanded judgment against plaintiffs for the possession of the premises. That action was subsequently dismissed by plaintiffs, as doubts were entertained whether such an action could be maintained under our code without a demand for and a refusal to execute a deed before suit brought, where there had been no act done by the trustee amounting to a disavowal of the trust.

If either the institution of that action, or the denial of the trust by the answer filed therein, or the execution of the deed by Powell to Gerdes, first set the statute in motion, the right of appellants to compel a specific performance was not barred by lapse of time when this action was commenced, as less than two months had passed after the happening of either of those events. Lapse of time will not bar an action by the vendee for a specific performance of a contract of sale where there has been no adverse possession by the vendor. (Tiffany & Bullard on Trusts and Trustees, 720; Hill on Trustees, 268; Grey v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 279; Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 202; Dodge v. Clarke, 17 Cal. 588; Miller v. Bear, 3 Paige, 467; Barbour v. Whitlock, 4 Monroe, 197.)

Argument for Respondent.

A. J. Moultrie and William Matthews, for Respondent.

The position of appellants, that there was a defective execution of a power to sell, is unsupported by any averment in the cross complaint, or any testimony in the record. The averment in the cross complaint is, that on the 27th of December, 1847, Neleigh, "being thereunto duly authorized and empowered by John W. Powell, and acting for him and in his behalf, sold the said lots to Henry M. Naglee." This is an averment of a valid, not an invalid, execution of a power; and to support it the defendants offered upon the trial an instrument appearing to be a deed or conveyance, in which "Robert B. Neleigh" is the grantor, and purporting to convey "Neleigh's right, title, and interest" in the lots described in the pleadings to "Henry M. Naglee." Powell's name is not mentioned in the instrument, and no reference, however remote, is made to any power from him to Neleigh. This deed bears date on the 27th of December, 1847. Three hundred and sixty-three days afterwards Mr. Neleigh writes upon the record, underneath his deed, to Naglee that he "acknowledges," and states "that the foregoing deed was executed by him as the attorney of John W. Powell, and that thereby binds John W. Powell, his heirs and assigns, to the within agreement;" and he signs it, "In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal. ROBERT B. NELEIGH, Attorney." So far as Neleigh, in this instrument, attempts to "bind" Powell by any agreement, his act was void. The letter of his authority limited his power to the making of the deeds and conveyances. He was not empowered to make any contracts or agreements for Powell.

But we submit that this instrument is nothing more than the legal opinion of Mr. Neleigh, as to the effect of his own deed, the value of which is somewhat diminished by the fact that four days after the making of this last instrument, viz: on the 26th of December, 1848, Naglee, in consideration of the sum of one dollar, reconveyed one of the lots to Neleigh. Courts of equity never aid the non-execution of a power. (1 Story's Eq. Jur., Sec. 169; Tollet v. Tollet, 2 P. W. 490.)

But independent of these considerations, the defendants do not stand in the position of parties in whose favor Courts of equity will reform a deed defectively executed. Such reformation will be directed only upon a valuable and meritorious consideration. (1 Story's Eq. Sec. 169; Beatie v. Clark, 20 Cal. 13.) The defendants do not so stand in Court. With the record evidence of Powell's rights before them, they have succeeded to Ransom G. Moody, who entered upon the premises without pretense of title; and they stand in the shoes of Robert B. Neleigh, who declares that he has attempted to convey the lands of his constituent, and four days thereafter receives from the person to whom he conveys, for the nominal consideration of one dollar, one half of his constituent's estate. No such transaction as this was, we submit, ever aided by a Court of equity. Nor does the circumstance that Powell was ignorant of his title to these lots, until Mr. Ryland informed him of the fact in 1865, assist the defendants. The ignorance of his rights was produced by the false statement of Neleigh, that his four lots were situate in block four and range four. A statement which the circumstances of the case would lead to the suspicion was deliberately untrue.

The consent of Powell that Neleigh might use his name in acquiring lots for Neleigh's benefit — the granting officer being ignorant of this private arrangement — created neither an express or implied trust in Neleigh's favor, or constituted an agreement which a Court will enforce. In the present case, the right to file a bill to reform the defective execution of the power by Neleigh existed, if at all, in Naglee, on the 17th of April, 1850, when the statute of limitations was passed.

The cause of action, therefore, became barred on the 18th of April, 1854. The defendants in this case did not connect themselves, in any manner, with the supposed rights of Naglee, until the 3d of September, 1858. Eight years and four months had thus passed, more than double the period, upon the lapse of which the action became barred.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action in the usual form, to recover the possession of two lots in the City of San José. Among other defenses the answer avers, in substance, that in July, 1847, at the request of one Neleigh, the Alcalde of San José granted and conveyed the lots to one Powell; that the purchase money therefor was paid by Neleigh, and was never refunded by Powell; that Powell never applied for the grant; that soon after the grant was made Neleigh entered into possession, and erected a house thereon, which he occupied with his family; that in October, 1847, Powell executed and delivered to Neleigh a power of attorney, whereby he authorized the latter to sell and convey the lots for such price and to such person as he should deem meet; that in December, 1847, Neleigh, whilst in possession, "and being thereunto duly authorized and empowered by the said Powell, and acting for him and on his behalf, sold the said lots to Henry M. Naglee for the price or sum of forty dollars, which was at the time the full value thereof;" that Naglee paid the said sum to Neleigh, and the defendants, by proper mesne conveyances and for a valuable consideration, have succeeded to all the rights of Naglee in the premises; that by virtue of the rights so acquired, the defendants entered into possession, and for more than eight years past have been and yet are in possession; that relying on the belief that Powell would fulfill and perform said contract of sale, and convey said premises to them, the defendants have erected thereon valuable improvements, consisting of a steam flouring mill, sawmill, brick warehouse, etc., of the value of fifteen thousand dollars; that in August, 1866, while the defendants were so in possession, Powell conveyed said premises by quitclaim deed to the plaintiff, for the consideration of three hundred dollars, then paid in cash, and the further sum of five hundred dollars, to be thereafter paid, in the event that the plaintiff recovered the property; that the plaintiff purchased with full and actual notice of the defendants' equities; that in September, 1866, the defendants demanded of Powell a proper conveyance of the premises, which he refused to make; that the plaintiff has no other title than that derived from the deed from Powell.

As a separate defense, the answer sets up the statute of limitations, and prays, as affirmative relief, that the defendants be adjudged to be the owners of the property, and that the plaintiff release to them the legal title. To this new matter an answer was filed by the plaintiff, which denies all the material allegations of the defendants in that behalf.

The equitable defense thus set up in the answer was first tried, and after hearing the evidence, the Court finds, in substance, that Powell and Neleigh came together across the Plains to California in 1846; that while Powell was working at San Francisco, Neleigh obtained his permission to use his name in procuring a grant to town lots in San José from the Alcalde for Neleigh's use and benefit, on the pretext that Neleigh had already obtained a grant for four lots in his own name, and the law permitted only four lots to be granted to one person; that Neleigh, in fact, had no grant of lots at that time in San José; but there was, in 1847, a regulation of the Ayuntamiento of San José which fixed the size of lots to be granted at fifty varas square, and prescribed that not more than four lots should be granted to any one person; that this regulation, however, was not observed by the Alcalde, because it appears from the records of the Alcalde that on the 16th of July, 1847, four lots were granted to Neleigh, and on the 20th of July, 1847, four other lots were also granted to him; that on the 16th of July, 1847, four lots were granted to Powell, and in the year 1848 five other lots were granted to him; that after Powell had consented to the use of his name by Neleigh, for obtaining a grant for the benefit of the latter, Neleigh solicited the Alcalde for a grant of four lots to himself and of four lots to Powell; and on the 16th of July, 1847, the Alcalde granted four lots to Neleigh and four to Powell, for all of which Neleigh paid the municipal fees; that the lots in controversy are two of those which were thus granted to Powell; that in October, 1847, Powell executed and delivered to Neleigh a power of attorney, authorizing him for Powell, and in his name, "to make and execute, sign, seal, and deliver any and all deeds or other instruments of writing which may be necessary to convey and assure title to any and all my real and personal estate in said Pueblo San José, for the absolute disposal thereof or any part of it;" that in December, 1847, Neleigh sold the lots in controversy to Naglee for forty dollars, which was a fair price for them; that Naglee paid the purchase money to Neleigh, and thereupon Neleigh, in his own name, and not in the name of Powell, made, executed, and delivered to Naglee his deed of bargain and sale for the lots, whereby he, for himself, conveyed to Naglee "all his right, title, and interest in and to said lots;" that afterwards Neleigh made and delivered to Naglee an instrument in writing, indorsed on said deed in the following words:

"In connection with the foregoing, I, the undersigned, Robert B. Neleigh, attorney for John W. Powell, this 25th day of December, 1848, in the Pueblo de San José, hereby acknowledge and state that the lots, seven and eight, deeded by the Alcalde to John W. Powell, and which lots were sold by—— to Henry M. Naglee, under a power of attorney of said Powell, which power is recorded, and as such attorney only was the above deed executed; and as such attorney, I do hereby bind John W. Powell, his heirs and assigns, to the within agreement, having received the consideration as within specified.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal.
(Signed:) "ROBERT B. NELEIGH, Attorney."

That neither Neleigh, nor Naglee, nor any one claiming under them, or either of them, occupied or improved said lots, but the lots remained open and uninclosed until 1856, when the father of defendants entered into possession, without right or title, and erected a mill on one of the lots; that he remained in possession a few years, when he delivered the exclusive possession to his sons, Charles and David B. Moody, and on 3d September, 1858, he and his said two sons acquired, by mesne conveyances from Naglee, all the right, title and interest of Naglee in the premises, for the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, which was a fair price; that in 1859 the other defendant, Volney D. Moody, acquired an interest under one of the other defendants, and the defendants have been continuously in possession from the time of their entry, during which period they have erected valuable improvements on the premises, worth from eight to fifteen thousand dollars, and at the commencement of this action they were, and yet are, in possession, claiming title under Naglee adversely to the plaintiff; that in 1866 the defendants commenced an action against Powell, to quiet title to said premises, which action was pending when the plaintiff purchased from Powell, and he had full notice of it at the time of his purchase; that Powell never had the grant in his possession, but it was recorded in the Alcalde's book of grants; that Powell did not know until 1865 that the lots had been granted to him; and when the plaintiff applied to him to purchase, he refused to make any other conveyance than a release of whatever right, title, or interest he might have in them; that in August, 1866, Powell sold the lots to the plaintiff for eight hundred dollars, of which three hundred dollars was paid in cash, and the balance was to be paid when the plaintiff recovered the lots.

As conclusions of law, the Court finds:

First—That the plaintiff does not hold the legal title in trust for the defendants, because, first, a resulting trust in favor of Neleigh did not arise at the time of the grant to Powell, by reason of the previous consent of Powell to take a grant for Neleigh's benefit; second, the grant is a gift, and not a purchase.

Second—That the plaintiff cannot, in equity, be compelled to convey the legal title to the defendants, on the ground of perfecting a supposed parol contract for the purchase of the premises, between Naglee and Neleigh, or his principal, because:

1st. There was no parol contract between them in relation to the land under which Naglee paid the purchase money, and entered into the lands, and made improvements on them; and without possession taken and maintained, under such contract, there can be no pretense of part performance.

2d. The purchase by Naglee was fully performed by the payment of the purchase money by him, and the execution and delivery of a deed of bargain and sale by Neleigh.

3d. The deed was ineffectual to pass the title of Powell to Naglee.

4th. The defendants did not enter under any parol contract with Powell, or Neleigh, as his agent, on the faith of which they made improvements. They took possession under their father, and, being in possession, they acquired whatever title Naglee had; but as Naglee had neither title nor possession under any contract with the owner, they did not acquire from him, or by their own possession, any equity which can be enforced against the legal title of the plaintiff.

Third — But if any equities did arise in favor of Naglee, or the defendants claiming under him, out of the transaction between Naglee and Neleigh, the same have become barred by the statute of limitations.

The Court thereupon entered judgment against the defendants on their equitable defense; and after a motion for a new trial, which was denied, the defendants have appealed. We have stated thus minutely the pretensions of the parties and the findings of the Court, because, in our opinion, if it be assumed that all the facts are correctly embodied in the findings, the Court erred in the conclusions of law which it deduced from the facts found.

It is found as a fact that Powell made a power of attorney to Neleigh, whereby he authorized him "to make, execute, sign, seal, and deliver any and all deeds or other instruments of writing which may be necessary to convey and assure title to any and all my real and personal estate in said Pueblo San José, for the absolute disposal thereof, or any part of it." It also appears from the power itself, a copy of which was put in evidence, that it contained an additional clause, as follows: "Hereby, ratifying and confirming all such deeds, conveyances, sales, etc., which shall at any time hereafter be made by my said attorney touching or concerning the premises." It further appears that very shortly after the execution and delivery of the power of attorney, Neleigh sold the lots to Naglee for a full, fair price, and conveyed them to him by his own deed, in which no reference is made to Powell; but about one year thereafter, and while the power of attorney remained in full force, he indorsed on the deed a writing to the effect that the lots were intended to be sold to Naglee under the power of attorney, and that he executed the deed only as the attorney for Powell: "and as such attorney I do hereby bind John W. Powell, his heirs and assigns, to the within agreement, having received the consideration as within specified." Signed: "ROBERT B. NELEIGH, Attorney."

In order to ascertain the intention of the parties, these two papers must be construed together; and when thus considered, and in view of the surrounding circumstances, it is obvious that however inartificially the papers were worded, the two, taken together, constitute an attempt by Neleigh to make a conveyance to Naglee under the power of attorney. It is but the ordinary case of the defective execution of a power, and in such cases Courts of equity always afford the appropriate relief. In arriving at the intention of the parties in making these instruments, we interpret them, as all other writings ought to be interpreted, in the light of the surrounding circumstances. In view of the fact that Powell claimed no interest in these lots, and held only the naked legal title for the benefit of Neleigh, who had a power of attorney from Powell, authorizing him to convey them, it would not be a forced or unnatural interpretation of the transaction to hold, that, by his own deed to Naglee, Neleigh intended to convey his own supposed interest in the lots, and by the subsequent writing, indorsed on the deed, to release the legal title held by Powell. It may be that the writing is so unskillfully drawn as not to have that effect; but if it was operative in law to convey the title, it would not need the aid of a Court of equity to give it vitality. It is only where there has been an unsuccessful attempt to execute a power in proper form that the interposition of the Court is properly invoked. We are satisfied that this is a case of that character. (Beatty v. Clark, 20 Cal. 35; Love v. Sierra Nevada L. W. & M. Co., 32 Cal. 654; Story's Eq. Secs. 169, 170; Barr v. Hatch, 3 Ham. 529.)

But it is urged that the defendants do not occupy such a position as entitles them to demand the interposition of a Court of equity, because, as it is said, they originally entered under their father, who was a mere intruder, without title; and because Neleigh, under whom they claim, very soon after the conveyance to Naglee, took back from him a conveyance of one of the lots for a nominal consideration. This latter fact does not appear in the findings; but if it did, neither that nor the other fact relied upon could impair the defendants' equities. When they succeeded to Naglee's rights, they became entitled to enforce them as he might have done, without reference to the manner in which they had acquired the possession; and if Neleigh practiced any fraud on Powell in taking the conveyance from Naglee, there is no proof that the defendants were privy to it or had notice of it. But the fact that Naglee reconveyed one of the lots to Neleigh, under the facts proved, does not establish or tend to establish any fraud in Neleigh.

The only point remaining to be considered is whether or not the defendants' right of action is barred by the statute of limitations. We are satisfied it is not. After the sale and attempted conveyance to Naglee, Powell held the legal title in trust for Naglee and his assigns; and the defendants' cause of action did not accrue, in a legal sense, until after a refusal by Powell or the plaintiff, his vendee, to convey the title. There is no proof of any refusal by Powell until after he conveyed to the plaintiff in 1866, and the only proof that the plaintiff refuses is the fact that he denies the defendants' right to a conveyance in the pleadings in this cause.

Our conclusion is that the defendants were entitled to a judgment, as prayed for, on the findings.

The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded, with an order to the District Court to enter judgment on the findings for the defendants, with the relief which they demand in their answer.

[The foregoing opinion was delivered at the January Term, 1869; and after a reargument of the question, as to the operation of the statute of limitations, the following opinion was given at the April Term, 1871.—REPORTER.]

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In this case a reargument was ordered of the question arising under the statute of limitations; and since the reargument we have had occasion, in the case of Love v. Watkins, decided at the last January Term, to consider carefully whether in an action by the vendor of lands, holding the naked legal title, against his vendee to recover the possession, the vendee having paid the purchase money, and being rightfully in possession under his contract of purchase, the statute of limitation is a bar to the equitable defense of the vendee, and to his right to affirmative relief. We decided this proposition in the negative, and held that the rights of the defendant in such a case were not barred by the statute. The present case comes fully within that decision, which we are satisfied is a correct exposition of the law. The opinion heretofore delivered in this case will, therefore, stand as the opinion of the Court, except in so far as that portion thereof which relates to the statute of limitations is inconsistent with the decision in Love v. Watkins and with this opinion; and on that branch of the case we adopt the views expressed herein and in Love v. Watkins, in lieu of those contained in the original opinion.

Points decided.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to enter a judgment for the defendants on the findings, with the relief demanded in their answer.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
EDWARD WHYLER AND CERTAIN REAL ESTATE.

TAX AND ASSESSMENT.—A charge imposed on all the property of a district, to be used in constructing levees to protect the district from overflow, is a tax, and not an assessment.

INEQUALITY OF TAXATION.—The fact that levees built to protect the land of a district from overflow, injure some of the land instead of benefiting it, does not render the tax unequal or void for want of uniformity.

UNIFORMITY OF TAXATION.—If the property of a district is taxed to build levees to protect it from overflow, the fact that land which is injured by the levee is assessed at its former value, and land benefited by the levee is also assessed at its former value, do not render the tax liable to the objection of want of equality and uniformity.

RESISTING PAYMENT OF TAX.—The payment of a tax cannot be resisted on the ground that the property on which it was levied was not assessed at its true value. One whose property is not assessed according to its true value, must apply to the Board of Equalization.

TAX MUST BE LEVIED ON ALL PRIVATE PROPERTY.—An Act taxing the property of a district for a local improvement, which exempts personal property from its operation, is unconstitutional, because not levied on all the property in the district.

TAXATION FOR LOCAL IMPROVEMENT.—A tax levied on the property of a given district, to pay for a local improvement, which is assessed upon the parcels of property in the district, in proportion to the benefits each parcel derives from the work, is unconstitutional. Such tax must be levied on all property according to its value.

Argument for Respondent.

REMISSION OF TAX.—A clause, in an Act imposing a tax, which allows the Board of Supervisors to remit the tax upon such property as they may deem just, does not render the whole Act unconstitutional.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, County of Sutter.

The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. O. Goodwin, for Appellant.

First—The Act under which this suit is brought is unconstitutional.

1. It provides for a local improvement and prescribes the mode in which moneys shall be raised to make such improvement. Now, if the mode prescribed is a tax, then the law is obnoxious to the tenth section of the first Article of the Constitution, which provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation;" and, also, to the thirteenth section of Article XI, which provides that "taxation shall be equal and uniform." If the Act is to be construed as similar in principle to that authorizing the widening of Kearny street, in San Francisco (Stats. 1863-4, p. 347), then, under the decision of this Court construing the latter, the former cannot stand. (Appeal of N. B. & M. R. R. Co., 32 Cal. 504.)

2. On the other hand, if it is not a tax, but an assessment, as the latter has been defined, and contradistinguished from the former by this Court, then the only basis on which an assessment for the purpose this one was authorized to be levied for can constitutionally rest and be apportioned, is one of benefits received. (Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 254.)

S. J. Stabler, and Beatty & Denson, for Respondent.

The demand is a special tax, and not an assessment. The Act provides for the taxation of all the property in the district to be benefited at a rate the limit of which is fixed by the Act, and not according to the benefit to be derived to each piece of property to be taxed. The chief distinction between a tax and an assessment is in this, that an "assessment" is a duty or fine laid upon particular property to raise money with which to accomplish some work that will add to the value of the property itself, while a "tax" is levied upon the citizen according to the value of his property—or what is the same thing, his ability to pay—without reference to any increase of value upon the particular property taxed. (People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46; Smith v. Judge of Twelfth District Court, 17 Cal. 547.)

If an unconstitutional provision is contained in section twenty, it is not so interwoven with the balance of the Act as to mar the meaning, defeat the objects, or in any way impair the act by striking it out. The Court will not in such case declare the whole Act unconstitutional, but will strike out the obnoxious provisions and sustain the balance. (See People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 103; Reed v. Omnibus R. R. Co., 33 Cal. 219; State of Nevada v. Easterbrook, 3 Nev. 180.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The Act of March 25th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 316), set off a certain portion of Sutter County, as Levee District No. 1, and provided for the levying of a tax on all the property within the district, to provide the means for the construction of levees, etc., to protect the district from overflow. This action was brought for the collection of the tax assessed for that purpose, on the property of the defendant. The action is defended on two grounds. It is insisted that the charge is not a tax, but an assessment; and, also, that if it is a tax, the Act is unconstitutional, because it is not equal and uniform, within the meaning of section thirteen, of Article XI, of the Constitution.

The principal reason urged in support of the position that the charge is an assessment, is that it is levied for the purpose of making a local improvement. Acts almost innumerable have been passed, levying taxes for such purposes, and no cases are called to our attention which hold, that by reason of the purpose for which they were levied, they became assessments. Taxes for the construction of roads, bridges, and school houses are familiar instances. The funds to pay for the grading of a street, may be raised by taxes levied upon all the property of a town, should the law so direct; but the tax does not become an assessment, because the latter is the mode usually adopted to raise the funds for that purpose. There is no sufficient reason for holding that the charge is not, what the Legislature declared it to be — a tax.

I see no valid objection to the tax, on the alleged ground of a want of equality and uniformity. In this connection the answer may be noticed, as the alleged inequality of the tax is there relied on, as a defense to the action. It is alleged that by the construction of the levee, the defendant's property, instead of being benefited, is greatly damaged. It is scarcely possible that any work of public improvement of considerable magnitude can be constructed, that will not affect injuriously the property of some one; and the fact that such a result has accrued, is not a valid objection to the tax.

It is also alleged, that while the property of other persons, which was greatly benefited by the construction of the levee, was assessed at its former value, that of the defendant was assessed at its former value, without regard to the injury occasioned by the construction of the levee. Those were matters to be regulated by the Board of Equalization; but if, on application to the Board of Equalization, the defendant failed to obtain the proper relief, he is not, on that ground, enabled to resist the payment of the tax, nor for that reason can he allege that the tax is not equal and uniform.

It is also alleged, that this tax was also levied on his personal property. Had personal property been exempted by the Act from taxation, that provision (if valid) would have furnished an unanswerable objection to the Act—that it did not impose the tax on all the property within the district.

It is further alleged, that the tax was levied to pay for a local improvement, and was not assessed upon property in proportion to the benefits derived from the work. If the Legislature intended that a tax should be levied, and if it may be levied, to pay for a local improvement, it is not only no objection to the Act, or the proceedings that were had under it, that it is not levied upon property in proportion to the benefits received by means of the improvements; but if a tax should be levied on that principle, it would be fatally defective, because lacking the constitutional qualities of equality and uniformity. A tax is equal and uniform, which reaches and bears with the like burden upon all the property within the given district, county, etc. It bears the like burden, when the valuation of each parcel is ascertained in the same mode—the mode prescribed by law—and when it is subject to the same rate of taxation as other property within the district, county, etc. Absolute equality is unattainable, and the benefits derived, or to be derived, from the expenditure of the tax, cannot be taken into the account.

It is further objected, that the twentieth section of the Act authorizes the Board of Supervisors to remit the taxes upon such property as they may deem just and proper. It is not alleged that they have remitted such taxes. When a case of that character is presented, it will be a question whether the action of the Board in that respect is not unauthorized and void—whether the section alluded to is not unconstitutional—but that provision does not render the whole Act void.

Judgment affirmed.

THE CALIFORNIA PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY
v. L. C. FRISBIE ET AL.

ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES IN TAKING LAND FOR RAILROAD.—If Commissioners appointed to assess damages and benefits in an application to condemn land for a railroad assess the cost of fencing separately from the estimate of damage to land not taken, there is no substantial error, although the directions of the statute are not technically complied with; and, in such case, the Court may enter judgment for the value of the land taken and the cost of fencing, and the excess of damages over benefits to land not taken, if there are any.

INDM.—If such Commissioners, in a case where the damages exceed the benefit to land not taken, assess the value of the land taken, and then the gross amount of damages to land not taken over the benefits to land not taken, it is a substantial compliance with the statute requiring them to ascertain and assess the damages to land not taken, and the benefits to land not taken.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Solano County.

This was a petition filed by the plaintiff in the District Court, to condemn the land of Frisbie and some fifty others for the track of a railroad, from the Straits of Carquinez to Sacramento.

The Commissioners, in their report to the Court, included the testimony taken before them. On the filing of the report of the Commissioners, the plaintiff's attorney excepted to the same, and filed a bill of exceptions, which was settled by the Court. The Court confirmed the report, and entered judgment. The plaintiff appealed, without moving for a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Wm. S. Wells, for Appellant.

The authority given to Commissioners is in derogation of the common law. All the requirements of the statute authorizing its exercise must be strictly pursued. (Adams v. Saratoga and Washington Railroad Company, 6 Selden, 328; Sharp v. Spier, 4 Hill, 76; Striker v. Kelley, 2 Denio, 323; Dyckman v. The Mayor of New York, 1 Selden, 439; Central Pacific Railroad Company v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 257.)

L. C. Hays, and Pendegast & Stoney, for Respondents.

Appellant's points are all confined to alleged omissions and informalities in the report, and errors in the mode of ascertaining the damages. There was no error in not making, under the head of damages, a lumping assessment of the damages proper and the cost of fences. The meaning of the statute is that the cost of fences is to be included in the sum of damages from which the benefits are to be subtracted, and not that such costs must be assessed under the name of damages. In all cases the damages and the cost of fencing, being distinct and unlike things, must be separately estimated; and when the benefits equal the damages, why go through the form of adding them before subtracting the benefits?

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

We deem it unnecessary to decide whether the exceptions of the appellant to the report of the Commissioners were made in such form that we could consider them on this appeal. But we think the exceptions to the report are purely technical, and that the appeal is devoid of merit. It is not alleged that any injustice has been done to the appellant, but only that the Commissioners have not strictly pursued the statute in the mode of stating the result at which they arrived. It is objected, in respect to several of the respondents, that the Commissioners ascertained and assessed: First, the value of the land taken; second, the cost of the fencing which would be necessary; third, that the benefits to the land not taken were equal to the damages to the land not taken; and, in one case, that the damages exceeded the benefits two hundred dollars; whereas the appellant contends that the cost of fencing ought to have been included in the estimate of damage to the land not taken. The Court understood the report to mean, in the cases first referred to, that the damage, exclusive of fencing, was equal to the benefits to the land not taken; and in the last case that the damage exceeded the benefits by two hundred dollars. In accordance with this view of the report, the Court entered judgment in the first class of cases for the value of the land taken and the cost of the fencing; and in the other case, in addition thereto, for two hundred dollars, being the excess of damage over benefits to the land not taken. We think the Court correctly construed the report, and entered the proper judgment. The statute, it is true, requires the Commissioners, in assessing the damage to the land not taken, to include therein, as part of the damage, the cost of necessary fencing, and to deduct from the aggregate amount of damage the benefits to the land not taken, if the former shall exceed the latter. But there is no substantial error in stating the cost of fencing separately from the other damage, as was done in this case. The result, practically, is precisely the same as if the cost of fencing had been included as part of the damage, and the benefits had been deducted therefrom. In the case of two of the respondents the Commissioners reported, first, the value of the land taken; and second, that the damage to the remainder of the tract exceeded the benefits by a specified sum; and it is claimed that they erred in not stating separately the gross amount of damages and benefits and then subtracting the one from the other. But the statute apparently contemplates that the report need state only the results at which the Commissioners arrived, and not the details by which the result was reached. It requires them to ascertain and assess, first, the value of the land taken; second, the damages to the land not taken, including the cost of fencing; third, the benefits to the land not taken (Stats. 1867-8, p. 705); and provides that if the benefits are equal to the damages no damages shall be awarded; but if less than the damages, then damages shall be awarded only for the excess. The Commissioners in this case must of necessity have assessed the damages and benefits separately; otherwise they could not have ascertained that the former exceeded the latter by a specified sum.

The statute requires them to append to their report all the evidence, together with their rulings and the exceptions thereto, in order that the Court may be enabled to review their proceedings, and to determine whether their conclusions were justified by the facts.

In respect to damages and benefits, the only question of interest to the railroad company and to the land owner is, whether the benefits are equal to the damages; and, if not, by how much do the latter exceed the former. The Commissioners have answered this by stating the exact amount of the excess, which is a substantial compliance with the statute. If they erred in the amount, the Court, with all the evidence before it, had the means of detecting the error.

Judgment affirmed, with twenty per cent damages.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE, being disqualified, did not participate in the decision.

Mr. Justice RHODES did not express an opinion.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER AGAINST TENANT.—If a tenant fails to pay rent when it falls due, and for three days after a demand thereof, and for possession of the premises by the landlord, his subsequent tender thereof, with interest and costs, is no defense in an action of unlawful detainer.

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

On the first day of July, 1867, the plaintiff leased to the defendant Kelly, a lot in San Francisco, for the term of five years, at a monthly rent of thirty-five dollars for the first two years, and forty-five dollars for the remaining three years. Kelly afterwards sublet to defendant Frist. The rent for the months of January, February, and March, 1870, amounting to one hundred and thirty-five dollars, was not paid; and on the 8th day of March, 1870, the plaintiff served a written demand on the defendants to pay the rent, and to deliver up possession of the premises. Defendants having failed to pay the rent, this action was commenced on the 12th day of March, 1870.

The defendants, in their answer, admitted that the rent was due, and the demand made; but averred that four or five days before the summons was served on them they tendered to the plaintiff one hundred and thirty-five dollars, and that he refused to receive the same; and that, on the 1st day of April, 1870, they tendered to the plaintiff the rent and interest, and all cost which he also refused, and that they now brought into Court the same. The answer further alleged that the lot was unimproved when the lease was made; but they had since erected buildings thereon, at an expense of two thousand and five hundred dollars; and that, by the terms of the lease, the improvements could not be removed during the term of the lease.

Opinion of the Court—Sprague, J.

On the trial the defendants offered to pay all rent then due, and interest, and all cost and expenses; but the plaintiff refused to receive it. The plaintiff then moved for judgment on the pleadings. The defendants offered to prove the matters set up in the answer; but the Court refused to receive the evidence, and sustained the plaintiff's motion.

The defendants appealed.

Quint & Hardy, for Appellants.

Sidney V. Smith & Son, for Respondent.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The record in this case presents the question whether, in an action under the Act of April 27th, 1863, "concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers" (Stats. 1863, p. 652), for the recovery of possession of leased premises, with rents due, by the landlord against the tenant, on the ground of failure by the tenant to comply with the covenant of his lease, as to payment of rent, and his further failure to pay the rent due within three days after demand thereof, and for possession of the premises by the landlord, a subsequent tender by the tenant to the landlord of the full amount of rent due, with interest and costs and expenses of suit, set up in the answer, is any valid or permissible defense to such action.

It may be admitted that, at common law, in an action by the landlord to recover from his lessee the possession of the leased premises, and enforce a forfeiture of the tenant's estate therein, by reason of his breach of a covenant in his lease to pay rent, a defense of the character here set up would be good and valid. But the remedy sought to be enforced in the present action is provided by statute, which definitely fixes and prescribes the rights and responsibilities of the parties in the premises and it is not within the legitimate province of a Court to limit or enlarge the remedy, or to restrict or extend the rights of parties clearly within its provisions.

The third section of the statute declares that "it shall be unlawful for any person to hold over any lands, tenements, or other possessions * * * contrary to the covenants of the lease or agreement under which he or she holds, or after any rent shall become due according to the terms of such lease or agreement, and shall remain unpaid for the space of three days after the same shall become due as aforesaid."

Section four provides that "in all cases specified in the preceding section, the landlord may, at any time within one year after such rent shall become due and remain unpaid, * * * make demand, in writing, of such tenant or tenants, that he, she, or they deliver the possession of the premises held as aforesaid; and if such tenant or tenants shall refuse or neglect, for the space of three days after such demand, to quit the possession of such lands or tenements, * * * or to pay the rent, in case the term has not expired, but rent remains unpaid, then such tenant or tenants shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful detainer."

Thus, it will be seen, by the third section of the Act it is declared unlawful for the tenant to hold the possession of the leased premises for more than three days after rent shall become due from him by the terms of his lease and remain unpaid. And the fourth section declares that if the tenant shall, after rent is due from him and remains unpaid, refuse or neglect, for the space of three days after demand by his landlord, in writing, that he deliver possession of the premises to quit such possession, or to pay the rent due, in case his term has not expired, he "shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful detainer."

The allegations of the complaint in the present case are clearly sufficient, if admitted, to place defendant in the position denounced by the statute as guilty of unlawful detainer. The answer of defendant Kelly, admits the material allegations of the complaint, and asks the Court to withhold the sentence of the law upon his admitted guilt, and condone his offense, upon the grounds that, subsequent to the commencement of the suit, he had tendered to the plaintiff, and brings into Court, with his answer, to be paid to plaintiff, a sum of money sufficient to satisfy the full amount due plaintiff for rent, with interest thereon, and plaintiff's costs and expenses of suit, and that he is now willing to pay such further sum to plaintiff as the Court may adjudge him entitled to.

The sentence of the law upon the admitted facts of this case is defined and fixed by the thirteenth section of the Act, and no provision is made by this or any other statute which would authorize the Court to render or pronounce any other or different judgment in this action.

If the law is harsh, and in its practical application in some instances may seem to be used as an instrument of oppression and injustice, a means of escape from or modification of its rigors should be sought at the hands of the Legislature.

JOHN DOWNS WILSON v. GEORGE K. FITCH, JAMES NISBET, JAMES W. SIMONTON, AND FRANKLIN TUTHILL.

ARTICLE LIBELOUS ON ITS FACE.—When an article in a newspaper imputes to a person grave offenses and dishonest practices, which, if established, would bring him into general contempt and disgrace, it is actionable on its face.

PROOF OF COLLOQUIUM.—When an alleged libel is actionable per se, and still a colloquium is inserted in the complaint, it is unnecessary to prove the colloquium.

Points decided.

WHEN COLLOQUIUM NOT NECESSARY.—A colloquium is not necessary, except when the libel is not actionable on its face, but has a covert libelous meaning.

EVIDENCE OF BELIEF IN ACTION FOR LIBEL.—In an action for damages for publishing a libel, in which it is stated that the owners of a mine believe that they have been swindled by the plaintiff, testimony that such owners, at the date of the publication, believed that they had been swindled, is not admissible, either in justification or mitigation of damages.

IDEM.—If the libel assert the defamatory matter, not as a fact, but only as the belief of the author, or as a rumor, or general suspicion, the libel cannot be justified by proof that the author believed it to be true, or that there was such a rumor, or general suspicion.

IDEM.—In order to justify such publications of the belief of the author or of others, the defendant must prove the truth of the matter published.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.—PROOF OF MALICE.—The trustee of a private corporation is not a public officer in such a sense as to enable the publishers of a newspaper to claim an article published concerning him, and criticising his conduct as trustee, as a privileged communication, and therefore compel such trustee, in an action for libel, to prove express malice.

DEFAMATORY PUBLICATION NOT PRIVILEGED.—A defamatory publication in a public journal, concerning a private person, is not privileged, so as to require proof of express malice on the part of the plaintiff, simply because it relates to a subject of public interest, and was published in good faith, without malice, and from laudable motives.

IDEM.—In such case the publisher, in order to rebut the presumption of express malice, should be allowed the fullest opportunity to show the circumstances under which the publication was made.

EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT IN ACTION FOR LIBEL.—In an action for libel, the defendant cannot introduce in evidence libelous articles, published by other persons, before the publication of the alleged libelous article, whether they refer to the same transactions spoken of in the article published by the defendant, or to other matters.

IDEM.—In an action of libel, the defendant cannot introduce evidence to show that prior to and up to the time of the publication by defendant, the plaintiff had been generally reported and suspected to have been guilty of the acts imputed to him in the libel.

VERDICT AGAINST WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.—The appellate Court will not disturb the verdict of a jury on the ground that it was not justified by the evidence, when there was a substantial conflict in the testimony, even though it is greatly against the weight of evidence.

VERDICT FOR EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.—In an action for a libel, if there is no proof of malice or ill-will toward plaintiff, and the publication is made in the usual course of defendants' business as public journalists, in the full belief that the article was true, after a careful inquiry from an apparently reliable source, the plaintiff is not entitled to punitive damages.

Statement of Facts.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The defendants were the editors and proprietors of the Evening Bulletin, published in San Francisco. The plaintiff and several others owned a silver mine in the State of Nevada, and were incorporated under the name of the Santiago Mining Company, and the plaintiff became one of the trustees of the corporation. The plaintiff owned and sold stock in the corporation. On the 3d day of November, 1863, the following article was published in the Bulletin:

“THE STORY OF A PROMISING MINE.

“A year ago, or more or less, a Mr. Wilson came to town from Washoe, bringing some beautiful specimen bricks and rocks, and a straight story, as to a mining claim (the Zouave) that he owned, convenient to the Carson River. He was not anxious to sell, though he had some two thousand eight hundred feet in his claim, and it was undoubtedly rich. He had no objection, however, to impart to a few friends the intelligence of the brilliancy of his own prospects. He told his story to Mr. Peachy, of the firm of Halleck, Peachy & Billings, who induced him to let him have, for a short time, the refusal of some four hundred and fifty feet, at sixty-five dollars a foot. Mr. Peachy got the foreman of the California Mine (Virginia City) to take a look at the ground, who reported that the prospect was good, and at that price the investment would probably be safe. Mr. Peachy then called upon Lafayette Maynard, telling him that if he would take half of the shares at the price named, he would close the bargain with Wilson. Mr. Maynard consented, and the bargain was completed. A corporation was formed, and the new company, under the name of the Santiago, elected Mr. Maynard its President, who at the time was at Washoe, and, if we are not mistaken, in company with some of the partners, visited the old Zouave, now the Santiago Mine, descended its incline, entered its galleries already excavated, and saw the gray rock which was alleged to be full of silver. Certainly they saw nothing to make them doubt that everything was as promising as had been represented; for, say what you will, except to experts in rock, the barren and the rich look exceedingly alike, when underground, by the flickering light of a candle, and even experts speak cautiously on such points when any great responsibility attaches to their word. The company was soon under full headway, with, as he deserved to be, Mr. Wilson one of its trustees.

“Measures were taken at once to develop the mine; Mr. Wilson knew of an admirable man for Superintendent. The others had no men to name, and Mr. Wilson’s man was chosen. He was instructed to push work with vigor — no capital should be lacking — but to practice economy in all his operations, and faithfully report all that he did or learned. He was to write frequently to the company, and his letters the Secretary was ordered to keep in an open drawer, where every stockholder could see them all. Other San Francisco capitalists heard of the good thing, and induced Wilson to let them in. Pioche & Bayerque bought some. The Barrons, who have been for years in mines, got not a little. Men connected with their house, the Barrons, Mr. Bell, and Mr. Young, the Superintendent of the New Almaden, took among them some eight hundred shares, buying generally at a much higher figure — from one hundred dollars up to one hundred and seventy-five dollars a share. Hall McAllister got some shares, but his were paid for in legal services. Judge Lake got some to the extent of the value of his handsome house on Lombard street. Judge Hoffman bought some. Other men of smaller means, seeing what kind of citizens were putting their money in, bought Santiago, sometimes with all their earnings. The richer owners could not keep them out. When inquired of, they gave the usual advice: 'Don't touch anything in the way of mines, unless you can afford to lose all you invest; it is a lottery.' But they had not the heart to keep a good man poor because he was poor, and, being pressed, they confessed that they believed in Santiago fully, and so the poor men invested, saying example was more cogent than precept, bought as deeply as they could, always of Wilson, but not generally at the highest rates, for Wilson seemed to have a heart under his ribs, and was willing to favor a friend who was struggling. One worthy bookkeeper put in thirteen thousand dollars that he had saved at the desk. The Superintendent's reports were always favorable. He generally obeyed orders, and left the adjectives out of his dispatches. He gave 'bare facts,' but the bare facts were heavy with silver and weighted with gold; some six hundred feet of the mine had been developed; none of the rock was poorer — most of it richer — than had been anticipated. The company, determined not to be misled, ordered him to take seven hundred tons of the rock from the open galleries and have it crushed at various mills; let there be no picking — let every pound that went to the surface be ground; they would have an assay on a grand scale that would faithfully show the average yield of their rock. The Superintendent soon reported that he had obeyed orders, and the result was forty dollars to the ton! That was magnificent. The buyers at the highest figure wished they had more stock. No one but Wilson would sell an inch, and he was rather yielding, in the goodness of his heart, to the importunities of friends, than selling of his own wish, or in accordance with the dictates of his judgment. Mr. Peachy bought more shares, paying at a higher figure this time, and giving for it the house on Rincon Hill which he had purchased of Mr. Tucker, the jeweler, giving him Wide West Stock. The owners thought if custom mills give us forty dollars a ton, with a mill of our own we can get better than that; for such is the faith concerning custom mills the whole land over. They cheerfully agreed to buy, and soon negotiated for a mill on the Carson River, owned by Raymond & Thompson — a mill of fine facilities, convenient to their mine, and of abundant water-power. In the mine was an engineer formerly of the California Mine, and the old and trusted acquaintance of some of the heaviest owners. This gentleman wrote down to the President that he had taken the responsibility of sending a ton of the average rock to the Mexican Mill, which, since the Mexican Mine had caved in, was crushing some for customers. This announcement was not welcomed by Wilson. He said the Mexican Mill, holding its head very high, refused the privilege, accorded by all others, of allowing a representative from the mine whose ore it crushed to stand by and see that a fair return of the silver and gold was made. He prophesied that if the order was not countermanded, the rock would be reported to yield less than its true measure. He protested against exposing the credit of the mine by any such experiment. The company decided otherwise, however. They knew the Mexican Mill owners; they believed they would deal honorably with their customers; if the rock would not stand its test they wanted to know it. They could pay their debts; they could meet their notes; the stock was not on 'change; they wanted no more credit than the rock entitled them to have. The Mexican crushed its ton, and reported a yield of only thirteen dollars to the ton! This was an eye-opener. The mills charge twenty-five dollars a ton for crushing, and it is said to cost full thirteen dollars a ton for a mill to run out a ton. Unless there was some mistake, their mine would ruin them. Investigations followed. It came out that Wilson had sold his shares so far down that, of his original twenty-eight hundred feet, he had but nineteen left! Either he must have lacked the ambition of his fellow owners, or he was trying to get out of a concern which he had all along represented as the richest thing east of the Sierras. Further examination showed that the Superintendent and Director Wilson had been in daily confidential correspondence. Wilson said they owned together many other interests, and had a right to correspond freely concerning them. The other Directors thought it a suspicious circumstance, a breach of faith, if this correspondence concerned Santiago; a reason for the Superintendent's removal if he was dividing his time with other enterprises, when the company thought they had the monopoly of his services. Still further investigations revealed that the seven hundred tons of rock which yielded the forty dollars a ton were not, as was specifically ordered, taken from the whole exposed face of the mine, but picked from one rich spot, if not absolutely salted at the mills. The investigations are not yet ended, but the chief owners believe that they have been outrageously swindled.

"Meanwhile the assessments were thickening to pay thirty-five thousand dollars every sixty days, towards the mill purchase. Some of the heavier owners proposed to ease the burden of the lighter shareholders, and save their own credit, by buying the mill, at the cost to the company, for the use of another company in which they were interested. But this alarmed the small holders. 'A freeze out!' they exclaimed; 'none of that; we want the mill; we believe in the mine!' So, the heavy men, to keep the peace, and save their honor, vote to keep the mill, and the assessments go on. How they are borne may be guessed by the following advertisement which appears in a morning newspaper, and which we insert free, as a part of the story. Wilson's number of shares is set down as greater than is stated above. The explanation of that, however, is not difficult; it is small as here given:

“By order of the Board of Trustees.

“EDWARD A. BREED, Secretary.”

“There may be some who, having no faith in mankind, will insist that this is a gigantic game of freeze out. Citizens generally will believe it to be one instance out of many that seldom come to light, where the shrewdest and most careful and honorable business men are led into operations whose results are more regretted by them on account of the mortification they must feel at seeing poor men ruined by being drawn into enterprises on the strength of their names, than for the thousands of dollars that are taken out of their own coffers and sunk. If that is the case, society is indebted to the capitalists in the ‘Santiago’ who allow the story to be told for the warning of a mining-mad community.

“Every honest exposure of the operations of a mining company or its agents, helps to break up the schemes of swindlers, which are doing more than anything else to prevent the development of the resources of the mineral States. Let the honest men who are diddled, thoroughly sift the method of the deceit that makes them suffer, and with all the appliances of the law prosecute those who deceive them, and prospecting will be put on a firm basis, and California and the territories adjacent will continue every year to astonish the world with the bounty of their newly developed treasures. Meanwhile, every citizen finds a lesson in the story of the Santiago. Whether it was only a mistake or something worse, it is clear that it is not safe for any man to invest his all in any one mining speculation, however promising it may be, nor though the ablest business men in the community believe in it. Let the prospecting go on, but let no man stake his all on the realization of any one prospect that is not absolutely in the line of his own business."

This action was commenced to recover damages for the libel.

The defendants in the answer set up, among other defenses, the truth of the alleged libel. They also averred in the answer, that at the time of, and before the publication, the matters therein contained were commonly reported and generally believed, and that they published the same believing it to be true, after careful inquiry, and without malice, and that it referred to transactions and conditions of a public or general corporation, of which the plaintiff was a trustee and member, and that he was referred to in that capacity only, and that the publication was made in the usual course of defendant's business as public journalist, without ill-will or intent to defame the plaintiff.

On the trial one McCulloch was called as a witness for defendants, and he testified that he was a chemist and had obtained a patent for a process for reducing silver ore; that Wilson had obtained the right to use it in 1861 in Nevada. The counsel for defendants then offered in evidence a pamphlet, published by McCulloch in 1862, in which he had spoken of the plaintiff, and accused him of having tried to induce the witness to make experiments with the process, and falsely represent it as a failure, so that the plaintiff might profit by a depreciation in mining stocks caused thereby. The plaintiff's attorney objected, and the Court ruled out the pamphlet. There was a daily paper published in San Francisco called the Daily Morning Call. On the 31st of October, 1863, the Call published an article in relation to the plaintiff's connection with the Santiago Mine, reflecting severely upon him. The defendants' attorney offered this article in evidence, and the plaintiff's attorney objected, and the Court ruled out the article. The jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for seven thousand five hundred dollars, and the Court rendered judgment for that amount. The defendants appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

J. W. Winans, for Appellants.

The Court erred in refusing to allow defendants to prove their assertion that: "The investigations are not yet ended; but the chief owners believe that they have been outrageously swindled." The evidence was competent in justification. The charge complained of was a distinct part of the alleged libel, and divisible from the rest. It could, therefore, be separately justified. (2 Selwyn's Nisi Prius, 1053; Mowbray v. Walton, 2 Barn. & Ald. 673.) Section thirteen of the Practice Act provides that: "The defendant may, in his answer, allege both the truth of the matter charged as defamatory, and any mitigating circumstances to reduce the amount of damages; and whether he prove the justification or not, he may give in evidence the mitigating circumstances." But this doctrine of justification, by proving the truth of the charge, is sustained fully by the authorities. (Commonwealth v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 341; Bisbey v. Shaw, 2 Kernan, 72; Stow v. Converse, 4 Conn. 33; Thrall v. Smi-

Cases, notes, 116; Voorhees' New York Code, Sec. 165, and notes.) Again, if the evidence of the truth of the charge, that the chief owners believed themselves to be outrageously swindled, did not constitute a justification, it was clearly admissible in mitigation of damages, yet the Court ruled it out on this ground also, although the point was expressly presented. (1 Maule & Selw. 284; Earl of Leicester v. Walter, 2 Campbell, 251; Anthon's Nisi Prius, notes, 38-40; Gilman v. Lowell, 8 Wend. 582; Hanson v. Veatch, 1 Black. 371; Dewitt v. Greenfield, 5 Ohio, 225; Jenks v. Backhouse, 1 Binney, 92; Bailey v. Hyde, 3 Conn. 466; Bush v. Prosser, 1 Kernan [11 N. Y.], 355; Heaton v. Wright, 10 How. Pr. 83.) And in Stanley v. Webb, 21 Barb. 148, a case very similar in principle to that we are considering, the court say: "The rule of law allowed the defendant to prove anything, under the general issue, which does not tend to a justification, but which falls short of that." That was an action for libel, and the attention of this court is invoked to it as being strongly similar in its facts, as well as in its principles, to that under review. (Remington v. Congdon, 2 Pick. 315; Bisbey v. Shaw, 2 Kernan, 72, 73; Weed v. Bibbins, 32 Barb. 321; Mapes v. Weeks, 4 Wend. 662; Starkie on Slander, vol. 2, p. 95, note 2; Root v. King, 7 Cowan, 616, 617; Chalmers v. Shackell, 6 Carr. & P. 475; Kennedy v. Gregory, 1 Binney, 85.) The alleged libel constitutes a privileged communication. Its publishers, the defendants, were not, therefore, liable without proof of express malice. For a clear statement of the doctrine of privileged communications we refer to the opinion of an eminent jurist, Judge PARKER, of New Hampshire. (State v. Burnham, 9 N. H. 41; Bradbury v. Heath, 12 Pick. 165; Perkins v. Mit chell, 31 Barb. 467; Kelly v. Tingling, 1 Queen's Bench, 699; Garrett v. Gilbert, 6 Gray, 97.)

The words complained of are not libelous, per se, as (in themselves) they cannot be said to import anything of a defamatory character concerning the plaintiff. They make no direct charge against him of any kind whatever. It follows that what the defendants intended and understood them to mean, and what they were understood by those to whom they were published to mean, must be a matter of averment and proof. (Gilman v. Williams, 4 Wend. 320; Andrews v. Woodmansee, 15 Wend. 232; Woolnoth v. Meadows, 5 East, 463; Dexter v. Taber, 12 Johns. 239.)

Evidence of previous publication in other newspapers or journals, containing the same charges, was admissible to disprove malice, and in mitigation of damages. The Court erred in excluding the article in the Daily Morning Call, and that in McCulloch's pamphlet. (Wyatt v. Gore, 1 Holt's Nisi Prius, 299; Romayne v. Duane, 3 Wash. C. C. Rep. 246; Morris v. Duane, 1 Binney, 90; Burns v. McCarkle, 2 Browne, 80; Wilson v. Apple, 3 Ohio, 270.)

In Morris v. Barker, 4 Harrington, 521, the Court says it is reasonable "that although a man may not justify the uttering of a slander, nor attempt to prove its truth upon a plea of not guilty, yet with a view to mitigate the damages, and disprove malice, he might show that before the uttering of the slander by the defendant it was generally reported and spoken of by others." In the case of Bailey v. Hyde, 3 Conn. 463, the Court thus declares: "Or if the fame of a person is disparaged by there having been reports in the neighborhood that he had been guilty of practices similar to those imputed to him, it is admissible." (Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 408; Earl of Leicester v. Walter, 2 Camp. 257; Wyatt v. Gore, 1 Holt's N. P. 299.)

Argument for Respondent.

Wilson & Crittenden, for Respondent.

The charge contained in the article was virtually one of swindling. The mere form of expression, "I believe he is a swindler," or "it is believed he is a swindler," does not alter the character of the libel. It would be remarkable if in actions of libel in the above instances, a man could either justify or mitigate the wrong of such publication in a newspaper, by himself taking the stand and swearing that he did believe it, or calling Smith or others to swear that they believed it. Private character is afforded a weak protection if such is the law. A sure mode of contumely and degradation is presented; easy of infliction, easy of justification, and impossible of refutation. The belief of a man's enemy concerning his conduct and principles would at once furnish the sword with which to assault, and the shield to avoid punishment in return. The charge, though made under the form of the belief of other persons, is in the eye of the law a direct charge of swindling, and therefore the only proof admissible in justification would be proof of the fact of swindling, and not merely the belief of others. (Heard on Libel, Sec. 176; Waters v. Jones, 3 Porter's Ala. R. 448; Logan v. Steele, 1 Bibb. 593; Brooks v. Bemis, 8 Johns. 455; Root v. King, 7 Cowen, S. C., 15; 4 Wend. 113; Skinner v. Powers, 1 Wend. 451; Miller v. Miller, 8 John. 74; Stick v. Wisdome, Cro. Eliz. 348; Brown v. Lamberton, 2 Binn. 34; Nye v. Otis, 8 Moss, 122; Kennedy v. Gifford, 19 Wend. 301; Inman v. Foster, 8 Wend. 603.)

It is now the established rule that to publish a libel, giving the name of the author, is as actionable as if no author's name was mentioned. And the proof that the person named told the publisher of the fact published is not even admissible in mitigation of damages.

The very clear and able opinion of KENT, Ch. J., in Dole v. Lyons (10 Johns. 449, et seq.), settles these questions on principle forever, and has remained the settled law of New York, and we believe of the United States, ever since.

Evidence that a defendant had been told by another what he uttered against the plaintiff is as inadmissible in mitigation of damages as it is in justification, whether the author's name was given at the time of publication or not. (Mapes v. Weeks, 4 Wend. 659; Inman v. Foster, 8 id. 602; Kennedy v. Gifford, 19 Wend. 301; Austin v. Hanchette, 2 Root, 148; Treat v. Browning et al., 4 Conn. 408.)

It is well settled that neither particular reports nor public reputation of the truth of the slander, nor of kindred charges against the plaintiff, are admissible. (Inman v. Foster, 8 Wend. 608; Kennedy v. Gifford, 19 Id. 301; Watson v. Buck, 5 Cow. 499; Root v. King, 7 id. 613; Fry v. Bennett, 3 Bosw. 201; Sheckel v. Jackson, 10 Cush. 25.) This is not a privileged communication. A private person complains of a libel published in a newspaper, concerning him as a man. The authorities cited are utterly inapplicable. Mining is said to be a matter of great public interest. True, but not more so than agriculture, or commerce, or transactions in city property. Is a newspaper privileged to charge a man with being a swindler in town lots, because the sale of town lots is now a matter of great public attention? (Littlejohn v. Greeley, 13 Abb. Pr. R. 48, 49; Root v. King, 4 Wend. 122; Sheckel v. Jackson, 10 Cush. 26.) In the libel in the Bulletin no reference is made to the article in the Call. As was said in Bond v. Kendall, 36 Vt. 743, "it lacks the salvo which has characterized all the cases in which it has been permitted to show that the defendant was reporting what had been told him by another, viz.: the giving the name of the author." Evidence that the defendant had been previously told of the slander by another, was rejected when offered in mitigation of damages in the following cases, also:

Were the damages excessive, or given under the influence of passion or prejudice? On this subject the code of civil practice in this State is very plain. It is not merely "excessive damages" which afford a sufficient ground of new trial, but they must be so excessive as to appear "to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice." (Prac. Act, Sec. 193, cl. 5.)

The Court below, in the broad discretion which it exercised in determining the motion for a new trial, did not see any evidence of this passion or prejudice. (Hall v. Bark Emily Banning, 33 Cal. 525.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

If the alleged libel was actionable per se, it was unnecessary to prove the colloquium in order to make out a prima facie case for the plaintiff. When a libel is not actionable on its face, but has a covert, libelous meaning, a colloquium is necessary to explain the subject matter, and to bring to light the true interpretation of the libelous words. In such cases the colloquium must be proved. But in the present case the alleged libel is actionable on its face, and it was unnecessary to prove the colloquium. No unprejudiced person of ordinary intelligence can read the publication complained of, and avoid the conclusion that it imputes to the plaintiff grave offenses and dishonest practices, which, if established, would justly bring him into general contempt and disgrace. The motion for a nonsuit was therefore properly denied.

The alleged libel contains a paragraph in these words: "The investigations are not yet ended, but the chief owners believe they have been outrageously swindled." The defendants offered to call the chief owners of the mine, to prove by them that at the date of the publication they believed they had been outrageously swindled. The Court excluded this proof, but decided that defendants were entitled to prove all the facts and circumstances tending to show that the owners, or any of them, had been swindled, and all facts and circumstances tending to create such belief. The defendants excepted, and assign this ruling as error. They claim that the proof was admissible, both in justification of that portion of the alleged libel and in mitigation of damages. But it was clearly inadmissible for either purpose. It cannot be denied, and the counsel for the defendants concedes to the fullest extent that it is well established, both on reason and authority, that if a libel assert the defamatory matter, not as a fact, but only on the belief of the author, or as a rumor or general suspicion, the libel cannot be justified by proof that the author believed it to be true, or that there was such a rumor or general suspicion.

In order to justify a publication, purporting to be made on the belief of the author that the fact was true, the defendant must prove the truth of the fact, and not merely that he believed it to be true. If one publish of another that he believes he was guilty of murder or arson, it is no justification to prove that he did in good faith believe it; but to make good the justification he must prove that the plaintiff was, in fact, guilty of murder or arson. This is conceded on all sides to be the law; and it results necessarily that if the publication complained of here had asserted that the author of it believed the chief owners of the mine had been swindled, it would not have been a justification to prove that he did so believe. To justify the publication he must have proved that they had, in fact, been swindled. But how can it vary the principle which underlies this rule of law, that the charge is made, not as a matter of belief on the part of the author, but as the belief of other persons? If there be any difference in principle between the two propositions, more plausible reasons can be adduced why proof of the belief should be held to be a justification in the former case rather than in the latter. When the author publishes his own belief that a fact exists, he knows the sources of his information, and whether they are apparently reliable, and whether the conclusion drawn from the facts is reasonable. But these elements may all be lacking in respect to the belief of another. He may have had no plausible grounds whatever for the belief; and to permit a defamatory charge published as the belief of some other person, to be justified by proof that such person did believe the fact to be as stated, would subvert one of the most thoroughly well established rules of the law of libel, and break down one of the chief safeguards of private reputation. The proof which was offered and excluded was obviously inadmissible as a justification. Nor was it competent evidence in mitigation of damages. The "mitigating circumstances" which are permitted by section sixty-three of the code to be pleaded and proved, must be such as tend to rebut the presumption of malice, or to reduce its degree. All libels are conclusively presumed to be, in some degree, malicious; but there are different degrees and phases of malice; and some actionable defamatory publications (all of which the law deems to be malicious, except privileged communications), are in fact published without actual malice. It is eminently just, therefore, that the defendants, with a view to reduce the damages, should be allowed to rebut the presumption of malice by the proof of what the statute terms "mitigating circumstances;" that is to say, the cir-circumstances under which the publication was made, and the real motives which induced it.

In this case the defendants were permitted to show the sources of their information as to the alleged facts, the circumstances under which the publication was made, and the real motives which led to it; and they did, in fact, prove by the witness, Nisbet, that Maynard, one of the chief owners of the mine, stated to the defendants, or one of them, that he and the other principal owners believed they had been swindled. They were further permitted to show that they believed this information to be perfectly reliable, and published the facts as related to them by Maynard, in the full belief that they were true, and not from any malice or ill will toward the plaintiff, but only as a matter of general public interest. Could it, in any possible view of the subject, have tended further to extenuate the publication, if it had been proved that the chief owners did, in fact, then believe they had been swindled? It cannot, I think, be doubted that, so far as the conduct and motives of the defendants are concerned, the actual belief of the owners that they had been swindled is a wholly immaterial circumstance. The defendants were informed, from an apparently reliable source, that they did so believe; and they acted in good faith on this information, believing it to be true. Would it render the conduct of the defendants either more or less reprehensible if it afterwards appeared that the chief owners did or did not believe they had been swindled? In deciding on the conduct or motives of the defendants, the belief of the owners of the mine that they had been swindled was a false quantity. It in no respect touched the question at issue, to wit: the conduct and motives of the defendants in making the publication. If the defendants were credibly informed, from an apparently reliable source, that the owners did so believe, and if they acted on this information, believing it to be true, the extenuation was none the more complete from the fact that the owners did so believe, nor would have been any less complete if they had not so believed. The fact of their belief was wholly immaterial, and could have no effect either the one way or the other toward elucidating the conduct or motives of the defendants. The proof was, therefore, properly excluded.

Another point made by the defendants is that the publication was privileged, and that the defendants could not be held liable, except on the proof of express malice, of which, it is claimed, there was no evidence whatever. It is said to be privileged, because it was published by public journalists as a matter of general and peculiar public interest, and related to the conduct of the plaintiff in his capacity of trustee of a mining corporation. But this was a private and not a public corporation. The plaintiff was in no sense a public officer, and was responsible only to the stockholders and creditors of the corporation for the fidelity of his conduct as a trustee. His office was no more a public office than that of a trustee of a private corporation to build a bridge or construct a wagon road. Officers of this character have never been deemed public officers in such sense as to render them amenable to criticism, as in case of persons filling public offices of trust and confidence, in the proper administration of which the whole community has an interest. In the latter class of officers public policy demands that their official conduct should be open to unrestricted criticism, in which no malice is implied by law; and express malice must be proved to render the author liable. No case has been cited, nor am I aware of any, which holds that a trustee of a private corporation is a public officer in the sense claimed by the defendants. Nor can a defamatory publication in a public journal be said to be privileged simply because it relates to a subject of public interest, and was published in good faith, without malice, and from laudable motives. No adjudicated case, that I am aware of, has ever gone so far. But whilst such publications cannot be deemed privileged, so as to require proof of express malice, the publisher, in order to rebut the presumption of malice, should be allowed the fullest opportunity to show the circumstances under which the publication was made, the sources of his information, and the motives which induced the publication. The public interest, and a due regard to the freedom of the press, demands that its conductors should not be mulcted in punitive damages for publications on subjects of public interest, made from laudable motives, after due inquiry as to the truth of the facts stated, and in the honest belief that they were true. On the other hand, if the rule were further relaxed, so that such publications in respect to private persons would be deemed privileged, thereby shifting the burden of proof from the defendant to the plaintiff, in respect to malice, there would be but little security for private character.

It is easy for the publisher to show the circumstances under which the publication was made, the sources of his information, and the motives for the publication, and thus to rebut the presumption of malice. But if the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, it would often, and perhaps generally, be very difficult, if not impossible, to prove express malice. I think the present rule, which allows to the publisher the fullest opportunity to rebut the presumption of malice, secures to him all the protection which is consistent with a due regard to the safety of private character.

There was no error in excluding from the jury the article from McCullough's pamphlet, or the publication in the Morning Call. The former had no reference whatever to the transactions referred to in the present case, and must be deemed libelous, inasmuch as the Court had no means of determining its truth or falsity by a judicial investigation. A former distinct libel on the plaintiff by another person ought not, on any principle of reason or justice, to be held to be an extenuation of the second libel. If the rule were otherwise, the more frequently an innocent person was libeled, the less would be his chance for redress against each successive libeler; and the more flagrant his wrongs, the less remedy would the law afford him. It has often been decided that it is not admissible to prove in mitigation that prior and up to the time of the publication the plaintiff had been generally reported and suspected to have been guilty of the acts imputed to him in the libel. Some of the earlier cases hold such proof to be admissible. (Earl of Leicester v. Walter, 2 Camp. 251; 1 Maule & Selw. 284; Anthon's Nisi Prius, 38-40, and notes; Noble v. Fuller, Peak's Add. Cases. 139.) But the current of modern authorities is to the contrary. (Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 415; Jones v. Stevens, 11 Price, 82; Mills et al. v. Spencer et al., 1 Holt, 53; 3 Engl. C. L. R. 177; Inman v. Foster, 8 Wend. 606; Saunders v. Mills, 6 Bing. 215, 220; 19 Engl. C. L. R. 104, 106; Hare & Wallace Notes, 1 Am. Leading Cases, 201, et seq.; Townsend on Slander and Libel, 504, et seq.)

These decisions proceed on the theory that public policy, the good order and repose of society, and a due regard for the protection of private character, demand that no one should be permitted to excuse or palliate the offense of defaming the reputation of another on so slight a ground as public rumor or general suspicion, which are often wholly unfounded, and the result either of malice or misapprehension. If the defendants had offered to prove, in mitigation, that the plaintiff was commonly reported and generally suspected to have been guilty of the acts imputed to him in the alleged libel, I think the proof would not have been admissible in mitigation of damages, under the rule established by the almost unbroken current of modern decisions.

Assuming that the article in the Morning Call related to the same transactions referred to in the publication in the Bulletin, it must be deemed libelous, for the reasons already stated in respect to the article from McCullough's pamphlet; and it is not pretended that the publication in the Bulletin was founded in any degree on the information derived from the Morning Call, or any one connected with it. On the contrary, the defendant, Nisbet, testifies that he made an unsuccessful effort to obtain information from that source before the article in the Bulletin was written, and, failing to obtain it in that quarter, the publication was based on the information derived from Maynard, which was deemed entirely accurate and thoroughly reliable. The article in the Call performed no other office than to direct his attention to the subject, and to stimulate further inquiry. A general rumor on the street would have led to the same result, and proof of the rumor would have been as admissible in mitigation as the publication in the Call, which, as here presented, can be treated in no other or more favorable light than as a printed rumor; and, as already stated, proof of rumors or general suspicion is not admissible in mitigation of damages.

It is also assigned as error that the evidence did not justify a verdict for the plaintiff; but there was some evidence tending to support the plaintiff's case, and it was the province of the jury to weigh the testimony. We never disturb the verdict on the ground that it was not justified by the evidence when there was a substantial conflict in the testimony, even though we may consider it to be greatly against the weight of evidence.

We are also urged to reverse the judgment on the ground that the damages are so grossly excessive as to raise a reasonable presumption that the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice in the jury. After a careful examination of the evidence, it is impossible, I think, to resist the conclusion that the damages are for a larger sum than the facts justified.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

There was no proof of special damage, and it was satisfactorily established that the publication was made after careful inquiry from an apparently reliable source as to the truth of the facts, and in the full belief that the publication was true. And there was not only no proof of express malice, but it was clearly shown that the defendants had no malice or ill will toward the plaintiff, and made the publication in the usual course of their business as public journalists, believing the matter to be one of special interest to the public at that time. It was, therefore, not a case calling for punitive damages. Nevertheless, the law implies that every libelous publication causes some damage to the injured party, and it is the peculiar province of the jury to estimate the amount. The Court will not interfere in such cases unless the amount awarded is so grossly excessive as to shock the moral sense, and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury was under the influence of passion or prejudice. In this case, whilst the sum awarded appears to be much larger than the facts demanded, the amount cannot be said to be so grossly excessive as to be reasonably imputed only to passion or prejudice in the jury. In such cases there is no accurate standard by which to compute the injury, and the jury must, necessarily, be left to the exercise of a wide discretion; to be restricted by the Court only when the sum awarded is so large that the verdict shocks the moral sense, and raises a presumption that it must have proceeded from passion or prejudice. As already stated, the verdict in this case is not so grossly excessive as to raise that presumption.

Judgment affirmed.

E. H. HILDEBRAND v. C. E. STEWART.

LOCATION OF SIXTEENTH OR THIRTY-SIXTH SECTION.—A location and entry of any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, made under the Act of April 27th, 1863, is invalid, and fails to vest any title in the locator, provided there was a settlement, by occupation or improvement, on any part of the section, owned by another, who had acquired no preëmption right to a specific part of the section, and the locating agent did not give the occupant or claimant of such improvement the notice of sixty days required by the fifth section of said Act.

ISSUE.—A house and corral are improvements of the character contemplated by the fifth section of the Act of April 27th, 1863, providing for the sale of certain lands belonging to the State.

ISSUE.—The location and entry of any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section is invalid, if the affidavit of the locator, or his application to locate and purchase, does not state that he is desirous to purchase the land, and does not give a description thereof by legal subdivisions. A statement, signed by the applicant and not sworn to, containing the same matters required in the affidavit, and accompanying the affidavit, does not render the entry valid.

RIGHT TO PURCHASE PUBLIC LANDS.—When the law, under which public lands are sold, requires certain acts to be performed as a prerequisite to the right to purchase, the Courts cannot dispense with the performance of those acts by legalizing an entry made without complying with them.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

W. C. Belcher and W. F. Good, for defendant Stewart.

C. D. Semple, for plaintiff Hildebrand.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This was a contest arising before the Surveyor General, between two conflicting applicants for the location and purchase of the west half of section sixteen of the school lands of this State, situate in Colusa County, which was, under the statute of the State, transferred for adjudication to the Tenth District Court, where the questions were litigated between the applicants — Hildebrand as plaintiff, and Stewart as defendant — and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section, and in favor of defendant for the residue of the half section in controversy, from which judgment both parties appeal.

From the findings of the Court contained in the record, it appears that defendant endeavored, by two separate applications, to locate the southwest quarter of said section, under the act of April 27th, 1863, entitled "An Act to provide for the sale of certain lands belonging to the State." (Statutes of 1863, p. 591.) The first application by defendant was made November 20th, 1867, for the location of the southwest quarter and northwest quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, of said section sixteen, which application was accepted by the State Locating Agent on the 17th of December, 1867, approved by the State Surveyor General April 8th, 1868, and a certificate of purchase issued by the State Register to defendant therefor July 20th, 1868.

The second application of defendant was made May 6th, 1868, for the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section, which application was approved by the Surveyor General on the 5th day of January, 1869.

That defendant, on the 9th day of June, 1863, made application to locate and purchase the northwest quarter of the same section, under the Act of March 28th, 1868, entitled "An Act to provide for the management and sale of the lands belonging to the State" (Statutes of 1867-8, p. 507), which application was accepted by the Surveyor General on the 12th day of June, 1868; and thereafter, in December, 1868, a certificate of purchase was duly issued therefor, to defendant, by the State Register. These several locations of defendant embraced the entire west half of said section sixteen.

That on the 6th day of February, 1869, plaintiff made application to locate and purchase the same half section, under said Act of March 28th, 1868, which application was duly accepted by the Surveyor General of the State, upon condition that applicant comply with all the provisions of said Act of March 28th, 1868.

It further appears that, as early as 1860, a house and corral were built upon said half section, being upon the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter thereof, but by whom they were built does not appear; that said house was occupied, at various times, by sheep shearers and other lessees of an adjoining tract of land, owned by a company known as the "French Company;" that about the 1st of November, 1868, the plaintiff leased the adjoining tract of land, owned by the French Company, and thereupon entered into the possession of said house, which was then vacant, and continued to occupy it until the 5th day of February, 1869, when he bought of W. H. Good, who claimed, in selling it, to be acting for one Chamin, who had succeeded to the title of the French Company to said adjoining tract of land; that Good supposed the house was on the land of the French Company until after December 1st, 1868.

It further appears that no notice was given by the State Locating Agent, as provided by the fifth section of the Act of April 27th, 1863, above referred to.

From the foregoing facts, it seems very clear that the locations of the southwest quarter of section sixteen, attempted by defendant in his separate applications of the 20th of November, 1867, and 6th of May, 1868, under the said Act of April 27th, 1863, were both invalid and ineffectual to vest in him any right to the lands described in his applications, by reason of the absence of the notice to the occupant or claimant of the house and corral then located upon said section sixteen, as required by section five of said Act of 1863. That a house and corral are improvements of the character contemplated by the statute, requiring such notice, we have no doubt; and under this statute, during the existence of such improvements upon any portions of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section of the public lands, unless the party occupying or claiming such improvements has acquired a preëmption right to some specified part of such section, no valid location of any portion of such section can be made by a stranger to such improvements until sixty days shall have elapsed after the notice required by section five has been given, and the evidence of such notice having been given must accompany the application.

The statute of March 28th, 1868, above referred to, in direct terms repeals the said Act of April 27th, 1863, but protects parties who were in the occupancy of any portions of sections sixteen or thirty-six at the date of the passage of the Act, by giving them six months from the date of its passage within which to make location and purchase under the new Act. (Statutes of 1867-8, p. 522, Sec. 23.)

This Act took effect May 28th, 1868, sixty days after its passage.

Defendant's application to locate and purchase the northwest quarter of said section sixteen is defective and invalid, by reason of the affidavit upon which the application was made failing to state the facts required by section fifty-two of the Act.

The statute requires the applicant who desires to purchase any portion, not less than the smallest legal subdivision, of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, to make affidavit stating certain facts, among which are, "that he or she is desirous to purchase said lands (giving a description thereof by legal subdivisions) under the provisions of this Act."

The affidavit of defendant of June 9th, 1868, for the northwest quarter, fails to state that he desired to purchase the land under the Act of March 28th, 1868, and fails to describe the land by legal subdivision, or otherwise. This positive requirement of the statute being omitted, or not complied with, the application was invalid and nugatory.

The Legislature has thought proper to require the above facts to be embodied in an affidavit of the applicant, and it is not for the Court to determine that the same items may as well be embodied in a statement of the applicant not verified by his oath, or to sanction a different form or mode of proceeding in the purchase of these lands from that prescribed by the legislative department.

The second application of defendant for the purchase of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section sixteen, made January 11th, 1869, the Court below finds to be "the same in form and substance" as the one of June 9th, 1868, just commented upon; hence, as appears by the record, the defendant has never made application for the purchase of any portion of the lands in controversy in conformity with the law in force at the time such application was made, and is not entitled to purchase any portion thereof by virtue of such application.

The application of plaintiff of the sixth of February seems to have been strictly in conformity with the Act of March 28th, 1868, and entitles him to purchase the entire west half of section sixteen, in township fourteen north, of range three west, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

The judgment of the District Court is therefore reversed, and said Court is directed to enter judgment for plaintiff Hildebrand in accordance with this opinion.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE did not express an opinion.

JAMES F. HARRIS, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF
N. CHATEL, DECEASED, v. THE SAN FRANCISCO
SUGAR REFINING COMPANY, GEORGE GOR-DON, AND JAMES B. BOND.

PRACTICE IN LAW AND EQUITY.—The mode of reviewing the action of the Court upon an issue of fact is the same, whether the case is at law or in equity.

REVIEW OF QUESTION OF FACT.—In order to review a question of fact, there must be a motion for a new trial.

Points decided.

REVIEW OF ACTION OF REFEREE.—If a referee tries a question of fact raised by the pleadings, the Court cannot review his action on such issues, unless a motion is made for a new trial.

IDEM.—If a referee tries a collateral question, not made an issue of fact by the pleadings, his action thereon may be reviewed by the Court, by exceptions to the report, without a motion for a new trial, and his report is not binding on the court until adopted by it.

QUESTION DISCUSSED.—Is not the manner of bringing the testimony before the court in case of such exceptions to be regulated by rules to be adopted by the Court?

REPORT OF REFEREE ON A COLLATERAL QUESTION.—When a collateral question, not made an issue by the pleadings, is referred to a referee, his finding of the facts does not take the place of a special verdict, as provided in section one hundred and eighty-seven of the code, and is not binding on the Court until adopted by it.

REPORT OF REFEREE.—When a referee reports his decision upon the whole case, his report stands as the decision of the Court; when he reports the facts only, his report is a special verdict.

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—If, in an action to obtain the specific performance of a contract, and to have an account taken, the principles upon which the account is to be taken are not raised, as issues in the pleadings, but an issue is made only on the plaintiff's right to have the account taken, and the court enters an interlocutory judgment, that the plaintiff is entitled to a specific performance, and to have an account taken, and orders a reference to take the account on principles fixed in the order, a notice of motion for a new trial need not be given until ten days after the confirmation of the report of the referee.

A FINAL JUDGMENT.—The confirmation of the report of a referee, and an order that judgment be entered for the plaintiff, without annunciation of judgment upon the facts found, and a determination of the particular relief to which the plaintiff is entitled, is not the rendition of the judgment from which an appeal may be taken.

UNDIVIDED PROFITS OF A CORPORATION.—In an action against a corporation and the officers controlling the same, to compel the specific performance of a contract to issue a portion of the stock to the plaintiff, and for an account of the dividends and profits on the stock, it is erroneous to give the plaintiff his share of the stock, and also the same proportion of the undivided profits of the company.

STOCK OF CORPORATION—UNDIVIDED PROFITS.—The stock of a corporation represents its undivided profits, and one who receives his share of the stock, acquires by virtue of the stock, his due interest in the undivided profits.

DIVIDEND OF CORPORATION PAYABLE IN STOCK.—In an action against a corporation and its officers, to recover or have issued to the plaintiff a certain proportion of the stock of the corporation, and to have an account taken of the profits and dividends on the stock, if a dividend of the company has been paid to the stockholders, by an increase in the capital stock, and an issuance of new shares to those to whom the dividend was due, the plaintiff cannot, in taking the account, recover, in money, the dividend thus declared, especially, if he also recovers his proportion of the stock thus divided.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This action was commenced by Nathaniel Chater, in May, 1858, who died during the pendency of the action, and the administrator of his estate was substituted as plaintiff.

The agreement between Chater and defendants Gordon and Bond was dated New York, April 4th, 1856. The agreement provided that the parties should form a corporation in San Francisco, to be called the San Francisco Sugar Refining Co. The corporation was formed the last of May, 1856, in San Francisco, with a Board of three trustees, and the trustees named to manage the affairs of the corporation the first three months were, Chater, Gordon, and Bond. The plaintiff, for several months after the corporation was formed, was actively employed in its business, but became paralyzed in October.

The complaint averred that the plaintiff believed that one third of the stock was issued to him on the books of the company, but was not delivered to him, and that he demanded one third of the stock from the company, and an account of his portion of the profits or dividends therefrom. There were further averments, that Gordon and Bond, owning two thirds of the stock, controlled all the proceedings of the company, and were seeking to become the exclusive owners of all the property and effects of the company, and to exclude plaintiff from all his interest therein. That in December, 1856, without the plaintiff's knowledge, they had declared his trusteeship vacant, and that the defendants refused to account to him, or deliver him his stock, and that the profits or dividends of the company had exceeded one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and that the plaintiff's share thereof exceeded the principal and interest on the notes given by him. The prayer asked for judgment that the plaintiff owned one third of the stock, property, and effects of the company, and that the defendants be compelled to issue, transfer, and deliver the same to him, and that they be compelled to state an account of all the profits or dividends made or received by the defendants, or either of them, upon one third of the stock, and that defendants be compelled to pay the same, less the principal and interest of the promissory notes.

On the 26th of May, 1859, the capital stock of the company was increased to three thousand shares, of one hundred dollars each, being an addition of two thousand shares. The referee took the account up to February 18th, 1860, the date of the interlocutory decree. He found that one third of the profits of the company were twenty-eight thousand four hundred and sixty-five dollars and seventy-five cents; and that after deducting the note and interest, there was due the plaintiff eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-five dollars and fifty cents. In this account of profits he included a dividend of one hundred and three thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars and fifty-four cents, which had been declared by the following resolution, passed August 18th, 1859:

"Resolved, That these profits be divided amongst the shareholders of the company, as follows: three thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars and fifty-four cents in cash, and one hundred thousand dollars in the increased capital stock of the company."

A preceding resolution, adopted at same meeting, set forth this to be the condition of the company, as appeared from the balance sheet of May 31st, 1859:

Showing a surplus of two hundred and three thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars and fifty-four cents, viz: the original capital stock subscribed, one hundred thousand dollars, and one hundred and three thousand six hundred and seventy-six dollars and fifty-four cents of profits.

The Court gave judgment against the defendants for eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-five dollars and fifty cents, on the report of the referee. The first part of the interlocutory decree read as follows:

"It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that plaintiff owns and is entitled to one third, or three hundred and thirty-three and one third original shares, of the capital stock of the San Francisco Sugar Refining Company, and all duplications, increase, profits, and dividends made or accrued upon said one third since the organization of said company; and said San Francisco Sugar Refining Company is ordered and directed to issue said stock to said plaintiff, subject to the restriction that he is not allowed to sell the said stock prior to the 4th day of April, 1861.

"And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said San Francisco Sugar Refining Company is entitled to have and receive from said plaintiff, for his said one third, the sum of twelve thousand and five hundred dollars, with interest from the 1st day of September, 1856, at the rate of two per cent per month, subject to the accounting between the said plaintiff and said company, as hereinafter ordered."

The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Doyle & Barber, and J. P. Hoge, for Appellants.

The decree is simply a decree of specific performance of the contract of April 4th, 1856, making the company liable, in the place of Gordon and Bond, who contracted for it. That was the whole object of the complaint, and is the whole scope of the decree.

The respective rights of the parties being thus declared by the interlocutory decree, the taking of two accounts became necessary, viz.: an account of what dividends, profits, gains, or advantages of any kind the stockholders in the company had derived from the ownership of their shares, in order that the like might be decreed to the plaintiff or his stock; and second, a debtor and credit account between the plaintiff and the company, in order that the balance due by the one to the other, whichever way it was, might be decreed. So far all seems plain enough, and the decree provided accordingly. It is clear enough, too, that so far as the dividends due the plaintiff on his shares of stock consisted of cash, they were to be credited to him in the second account above mentioned, because such application of them had been expressly contracted for, and was provided in the decree.

Now, on carrying this decree into the master's office, what account was he required first to take? In other words, what were the profits, increase, and dividends on the three hundred and thirty-three and one third original shares of stock belonging to the plaintiff, whereof he was to take an account? Obviously, the dividends declared by the company from time to time on that number of shares, and which he would have received had they been issued to him at first, as contracted for. The only share of profits which a stockholder is entitled to receive from a corporation is the dividends declared from time to time on the stock he holds. All shares in the same company are of equal rank and right. Whatever advantage or profit the holder of one share derives from its ownership, the holder of another is entitled to the like; and neither is entitled to participate in the company's profits, except to the extent of the dividends declared on the stock. For such dividends he can maintain assumpsit against the company, and, of course, they form the subject of set-off against any money demand the company may seek to enforce against him.

It was suggested to the Court, however (and truly), at the time of pronouncing the interlocutory decree, that this company had, pending the suit, enlarged its capital stock, augmented the number of its shares, and declared a stock dividend; and that suggestion, or even the possibility that profits or advantages might have been divided to its stockholders in stock, or in some form other than cash, led the parties in drawing their decree, and the Court in adopting it, to introduce in it the words "profits," "increase," "duplications," "dividends," etc., in order to express in the fullest manner that the plaintiff being entitled to have his stock, as of the date of its original creation, was entitled to have with it all the fruits, of every kind, it would have borne him had it been issued and delivered to him at that time. Such is the whole meaning of those pleonasms in the decree.

The master or referee, however, on considering the decree, fell into the error of attributing to these words of amplification—"profits," "duplications," etc.—a significance entirely beyond their import, or the sense intended to be given them. He construed them to mean that he was to take an account of the profits which the company had gained in the course of its business, and credit the plaintiff with one third thereof, just as if he had been a copartner instead of a stockholder. The interlocutory decree established the plaintiff's right to the stock and its profits, on paying for it the agreed purchase money and interest. The dividends due the plaintiff on the stock were to be applied on the sums due by him on the purchase money, and the balance, whatever it might be, was to be paid by the one party to the other. This operation involved a debtor and creditor account between the parties, the result of which was necessary for the information of the Court, to enable it to render its final judgment.

The reference to Mr. Thornton, directed in the decree, was under the second subdivision of section one hundred and eighty-three of the Practice Act. It was to take an account which was necessary for the information of the Court before judgment.

The report on such a reference is strictly analogous to a master's report on a reference to take an account; when filed it is open to objection by either party, and before further proceedings can be founded on it, requires the assent or confirmation of the Court. In this case, all further directions were expressly reserved in the interlocutory decree till the coming in of the report.

The proper mode of objecting to a report on such a reference is, and always has been, not by motion for a new trial, but by exceptions to the report. On the argument of those exceptions, the Court examines the proceedings of the referee, and corrects any errors into which he may have fallen. It may confirm or overrule the report, in whole or in part; send it back to the referee for further evidence; or if that be unnecessary, make the necessary corrections in it, and confirm it as corrected. For the purpose of examining the referee's conclusions, the Court must have the same light in all respects that he had. The evidence taken before him is deemed to be taken before the Court itself for that purpose.

Argument for Respondent.

The precise manner of bringing the testimony taken before the referee, in such cases, to the knowledge of the Chancellor, in connection with exceptions to the report, is matter of practice, and discretionary; it is usually regulated by general rule. There being no general rule for such cases in the Court below, it properly adopted the practice which the circumstances of the case suggested as most convenient, by its order of December 19th, 1864, under which the referee reported the substance of all the testimony taken before him.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

The statute not only fails to countenance the theory adopted by the appellant as to the effect of a reference, but the decisions of the Court upon this subject have been uniformly against this theory. As early as 1852 the Supreme Court of this State said: "Upon the report of a referee under the statute, if it contain sufficient on which to base a judgment, it is the duty of the Court to enter judgment; and it has no right to entertain any objections whatever. After the rendition of the judgment the Court may order a new trial, and set aside the report. (Headley v. Reed, 2 Cal. 325.) Here the referee reported that Chater was entitled to a certain sum of money. Manifestly, upon its face it contained sufficient matter whereon to base a judgment, and was, therefore, directly within the spirit and text of the foregoing decision. In Grayson v. Guild, 4 Cal. 125, the doctrine of Headley v. Reed was affirmed, the Court holding in that case, which was a bill in equity for an accounting, that when an action is referred to a referee, who files a report upon the face of which there is either no error of law or fact, or, if any, no exceptions taken before him, it was error to grant a new trial in the Court below.

(Tyson v. Wells, 2 Cal. 131.) The report of the referee upon the facts must be considered like the verdict of a jury. (Walton v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 362.) And, like a verdict, where the testimony is conflicting, will not be disturbed. (Ritchie v. Bradshaw, 5 Cal. 228; Peck v. Vanderberg, 30 Cal. 11.) The presumption is in favor of the findings. (Donahue v. Cromartie, 21 Cal. 80.)

To adopt the remedy of exceptions in equity cases is to hopelessly unsettle this system of practice, and in effect bring us back to the old chancery rules. From the able and ingenious argument of the appellants' counsel, one would suppose that our code not only sanctions this result, but adopts the practice laid down by Mitford, Tidd, Daniel, and Norbury. (Allen v. Hill, 16 Cal. 113; Hutchinson v. Bours, 13 Cal. 50; Casement v. Ringgold, 28 Cal. 340; and Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 287.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

This is a bill to obtain specific performance of a contract between Chater, Bond, and Gordon, whereby they agreed to incorporate for the business of refining sugar in San Francisco, with a nominal capital of one hundred thousand dollars, divided into one thousand shares. Each party was to take three hundred and thirty-three and one third shares, and pay twelve thousand five hundred dollars. Chater, having no means, was to give his notes for the amount, drawing interest at two per cent. per month, and Gordon and Bond were to receive his stock as collateral, and thereupon raise or advance his share. The dividends on Chater's stock were to be applied to paying the interest and principal on his notes. The plaintiff asks a decree for one third of the stock, and the profits and dividends upon the stock.

An interlocutory decree was entered, adjudging that Chater was entitled to recover one third of the stock, and all “duplications, increase, profits, and dividends made or accrued upon said one third since the organization of said company.” That the plaintiff should pay twelve thousand five hundred dollars, with interest at two per cent. per month, from the 1st day of September, 1856, and that an account be taken between Chater and the company, to ascertain the balance which might be due to either, and, thereupon, a referee was appointed “to take the account of the profits, increase, and dividends of said stock belonging to plaintiff under his decree, and to state an account between the San Francisco Sugar Refining Company and plaintiff.”

And it is further ordered that all further “directions be reserved until after said referee makes his report, when either party is at liberty to apply to the Court, as occasion may require.”

The referee filed his report November 3d, 1864, which he stated on account, and ascertained a balance due plaintiff of eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-five dollars and fifty cents. No motion for a new trial was made upon the filing of this report, but within ten days after notice of the filing the defendants filed exceptions to the report, and on the nineteenth of December following obtained an order requiring the referee to file a statement of the evidence before him. This additional report was filed July 1st, 1865. On the 21st of August, 1865, the exceptions to the report were overruled and the report confirmed. On the thirty-first of the same month notice of motion for a new trial was given. Upon this motion a statement was prepared and filed, and the motion denied on the 8th of February, 1868. An appeal was taken from this order, and is the first appeal in this case.

Afterwards, on the 26th of October, 1868, a final decree was entered, and thereupon defendants made another motion for a new trial, which was also denied, and the last appeal is taken from this order, and also from the judgment.

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

Objection was made in the Court below to the consideration of the exceptions, on the ground that the action of the referee can only be reviewed on motion for a new trial under the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act. This position was sustained, and the Court refused to consider the exceptions. The Court also, acting upon the suggestion in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304, overruled both motions for a new trial, on the ground that notice of motion was not given in time, holding that the notice should have been given within ten days after notice of filing the report of the referee.

The interesting question of practice presented is to be decided entirely by the provisions of the Practice Act, unless that act is silent as to the mode of proceeding in this particular case. It is thoroughly settled in this state that the mode of reviewing the action of the Court upon an issue of fact is the same, whether the case is at law or in equity — there must be a motion for a new trial; and the only question upon this point is, whether the proceeding before the referee was a trial within the meaning of the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act. That section, as it stood when these proceedings were had, provided that notice of intention to move for a new trial should be given, when the action has been tried by a jury, within five days after verdict; when tried by the Court, a Commissioner, or referee, within ten days after the notice of the decision of the Judge, or of the filing of the report of the Commissioner or referee. A trial may be said to be an examination and determination of an issue of law or fact. An issue arises when a fact or conclusion of law is maintained by one party, and is controverted by the other in the pleadings. (Sec. 153, Practice Act.) A determination of an issue of fact is the verdict or decision, which is sought to be set aside when a new trial is asked under the code. There must have been a trial of an issue raised by the pleadings, or the provisions of the Practice Act, in regard to new trials, do not apply to the report of the referee. Evidently, therefore, if a collateral matter not raised by the pleadings be sent to a referee for the information of the Court, under the second and third subdivisions of section one hundred and eighty-three of the Practice Act, a motion for a new trial is not necessary to bring the action of the referee before the Court for review. In case, for instance, of an action by the vendor to compel the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, all the issues might be tried before the Court; and, in case the performance of the contract be adjudged, a referee might be appointed to ascertain if the property had been incumbered. The referee might be called to try a contested question; but it would not be the trial of an issue, and the decision of the referee would not be binding upon the Court until adopted by it. It would not be such a decision as would necessitate a motion for a new trial by the aggrieved party, within ten days after notice of the filing of the report. So of the numerous cases cited by the counsel for appellant, where a collateral matter is sent to a referee or Commissioner for trial. The finding of a referee in such a case is not the finding of the facts, which takes the place of a special verdict, as indicated in section one hundred and eighty-seven of the code. That section distinctly provides for a different practice, where the issue is upon the whole case, and where the referee reports the facts. In the former case the report stands as the decision of the Court; in the latter it has the effect of a special verdict. The necessary inference is, that in other cases, not mentioned in the section, the report has neither the effect of the decision of the Court nor of a special verdict. The provision in that section, that the decision of the referee may be excepted to and revised in like manner as if made by the Court, has reference to what immediately precedes it, and is confined to those cases where the report stands as the decision of the Court.

The only difficulty in this case is in determining whether the matter referred was the trial of an issue made by the pleadings. It may be argued, with plausibility, that the taking of an account, and the ascertainment of a balance due, was within the issues made by the pleadings, and that when the case had been partially tried by the Court, and the interlocutory decree entered, it was sent to the referee to complete the trial; that upon the filing of the referee's report all the issues of fact had been tried, and the findings of facts made, upon which a judgment could be entered. Under the ruling of Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376, then was the time when proceedings for a new trial should have been commenced, dated from the notice of filing the report.

It is very true that an accounting was contemplated by the plaintiff, and is a portion of the relief sought by him. Still the issue raised by the pleadings upon this subject was his right to have an account taken, and the principles upon which the account should be taken, if at all, was not settled by the pleadings, but the accounting ordered may have been very different from that claimed. In this case the plaintiff might have claimed an account of the profits made by the company, while the accounts ordered may have been the dividends made. The referee, in taking the account and stating a balance, was not governed by the pleadings, but by the interlocutory decree. The question as to the correctness of his report was not, whether he had correctly tried the issue made by the parties, but whether he had correctly tried the question referred to him by the Court. His guidance was not the pleadings, but the order of reference. The issue had not been sent to him to try, but he examined a certain matter of fact under the instructions of the Court, and for the information of the Court before whom the trial was being had. If his report furnished the information sought, the Court could act upon it; otherwise a new reference might have been made, and so on, until the desired information was had. I think, therefore, the proceedings before the referee in this case was not a trial within the meaning of the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act. The motion for a new trial, therefore, made upon the confirmation of the report, was in time. If the report of the referee required confirmation, there was no irregularity in interposing objections to its confirmation. No method is provided for bringing the facts before the Court upon the hearing of such objections, and in the absence of any legislation upon the subject, the Court can, by its rules, provide the mode of doing so. It is not necessary to pass upon this question, however, in this case, as all the questions necessary for the determination of this appeal arise upon the motion for a new trial and upon the appeal from the judgment.

The confirmation of the report and the order that judgment be entered for the plaintiff was not the rendition of the judgment within the meaning of the three hundred and thirty-sixth section of the Practice Act, and of the decision in Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416. Something more remained to be done than the mere clerical duty of entering judgment. The Court had not pronounced judgment upon the facts found, or determined the particular relief to which they entitled the plaintiff.

The final decree, taken in connection with the report of the referee, plainly shows that the relief granted is inconsistent with the pleadings and with the interlocutory decree. The referee committed a palpable error in crediting the plaintiff with the undivided profits of the company. The plaintiff only asks to be placed in the position he would have been in had the stock been issued to him as provided in the agreement between Chater, Bond, and Gordon. In that case he would have received only one third of the dividends, while his share of the undivided profits would be represented by his stock. So now, if he receives his share of the stock, he, by virtue of that stock, acquires his due interest in the undivided profits. The referee, however, has taken a profit and loss account of the transactions of the company, and credited the plaintiff with one third of the profits, irrespective of the question as to whether they have been divided, or are still retained by the company. The report shows that a small amount of profits only have been divided. Much the larger portion are still retained by the company, and is claimed to have been expended in improvements and in adding to the capital of the company. It is true the interlocutory decree speaks of "duplications, increase, profits, and dividends" made or accrued upon said one third of the stock. The words "duplication and increase" may have been intended to refer to the addition to the capital stock of the company, but still it refers to the duplications, increase, profits, and dividends of the one third of the stock, which should have been issued to Chater. There is a manifest difference between profits upon certain shares of stock and the profits of the company. If the language of the decree, however, were doubtful, the relief asked in the pleadings and the nature of the action should remove all question as to what was intended.

The alternative report of the referee is also manifestly erroneous. I cannot comprehend upon what principle it can be claimed that a dividend of stock can be charged as so much money, especially when the plaintiff recovers in this very action his share of the stock divided.

The final decree is reversed, the report of the referee is set aside, and the case remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA EX
REL. J. T. THOMPSON AND J. S. DOWNES, v. J. B.
HOLLOWAY, JUDGE OF LAKE COUNTY, ET AL.

MANDAMUS — MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.— In a suit for mandamus brought in the Supreme Court, where questions of fact are referred to a District Court, a motion for a new trial must be made in the Supreme Court.

THE relators filed a petition in the Supreme Court, in which they allege that, at an election held in accordance with an Act of the Legislature for the purpose of determining the location of the county seat of Lake County, the officers of the election in certain precincts and the Board of Canvassers were guilty of fraudulent conduct, whereby it was made to appear that Lower Lake had received a majority of votes over Lakeport, when in fact the latter town had received a majority of twenty-one votes; and that the Board of Supervisors, acting upon returns so made, had issued an order removing the county seat from Lakeport to Lower Lake. They asked the Court to set aside the order of the Board of Supervisors, to decree that Lakeport be the county seat, and to issue a writ of mandamus requiring the county business to be transacted at Lakeport. After issue joined the questions of fact were referred to the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, and upon trial a verdict was rendered in favor of Lakeport.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, R. McGarvey, and Bayle & Pendegast, for Relators.

J. McM. Shafter, for Defendants.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The issues in this cause having been referred to the District Court for Napa County for trial, and the jury in that Court having rendered a verdict, which was thereafter duly certified to this Court, the respondents moved in the District Court for a new trial, and the petitioner moved in this Court for judgment, ordering the writ of mandate to issue as prayed for in the petition.

We are of the opinion that the motion for a new trial should have been made in this Court, and not in the District Court. The petitioner is therefore entitled to judgment on the verdict. Since the verdict was rendered, the Act of March 29th, 1870, to locate the county seat for the County of Lake, was passed, by which another election was ordered to be held in that county, to determine whether the county seat should be at Lakeport, or at Lower Lake. The decision of the case is of no moment, except that thereby the liability of the parties for the costs of the action may be determined. The petitioner was entitled to judgment on the verdict, and will therefore recover his costs.

Mandate ordered; and it is further ordered that the service of the writ be stayed until the further order of this Court and that the petitioners recover their costs.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Charles G. Scott and the plaintiff Jane Scott were husband and wife, and the plaintiffs Charles E. Scott and Indiana Scott were their only children. Charles G. Scott purchased the land and took the conveyance in the name of his wife. In June, 1856, the wife, who was in the State of New York, executed an instrument, making the husband her agent to sell or lease and collect the rents. Under this instrument the husband substituted Frederick D. Kohler as agent, and Kohler took possession. In 1857, Scott left California, to join his family in New York, and died intestate in Nicaragua. Kohler became administrator in November, 1858. Kohler obtained an order to sell the land for a debt he alleged the deceased owed him. Kohler sold the land to Umbarger in April, 1863, and Umbarger conveyed one half of it to the other defendants in May, 1863. This suit was commenced November 25th, 1863. That part of the cross complaint, setting up title in the City of San José, was as follows:

"That heretofore, to wit: on the 21st day of April, A. D. 1858, and for a long time prior thereto, the City of San José, a municipal corporation, by virtue of an Act of the Legislature of the State of California, were the owners in fee (as successors to the former Pueblo de San José) of a large tract of land lying and being in the County of Santa Clara, and State of California, and which said larger tract of land includes within its boundaries the premises hereinafter mentioned and described, and being the land sued for. That on the 21st day of April, A. D. 1858, the Legislature of the State of California passed an Act entitled an Act to authorize the funding of the unfunded debt of the City of San José, and to provide for the payment of the same, passed April 21st, 1858, and which said act is referred to, and made a part of this answer. That afterwards, to wit: on the 4th day of August, A. D. 1858, in accordance and pursuance of the provisions of said Act, the said City of San José did sell and transfer the tract of land, and the whole thereof, to Lawrence Archer, Sherman O. Houghton, and James C. Cobb, as the Board of Commissioners of the Funded Debt of the City of San José."

The answer then averred that on the 27th day of June, 1864, the Commissioners of the Funded Debt sold the land to them.

The answer to the cross complaint admitted those allegations, and then proceeded as follows:

"But these plaintiffs deny that they acquired the same, otherwise than in trust for these plaintiffs; and they allege that at the said several dates, when said defendants acquired the said title, they were the trustees, as to these plaintiffs, of the premises in the complaint herein, and in said answer described, by reason of the facts alleged in the complaint herein; and that the title so acquired by said defendants was acquired for the benefit and to the use of these plaintiffs; and that said defendants are, and were at said dates, by reason of their said position as trustees of these plaintiffs, estopped from buying or setting up any outstanding title adverse to the title of these plaintiffs."

The Court below adjudged that the defendants held the legal title in trust for the plaintiffs, and that they convey the same. The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

S. O. Houghton, for Appellants.

The order of sale of the Probate Court having been made without authority and without notice to plaintiffs, the sale by Kohler was void, and neither the title of the estate nor of the heirs was affected thereby. The legal title is in the heirs, and they may recover possession in an action at law. A Court of chancery has no jurisdiction where the complaint shows that the plaintiff has a complete remedy at law. (Van Doren v. The Mayor, etc., of New York, 9 Paige, 388.) The complaint, therefore, does not state a cause of action. After the estate has been fairly divested of its title to real estate through a legal, bona fide sale and conveyance to a stranger, the administrator may as freely purchase such property as any other property. The general equitable rule is, that a trustee shall not deal with the trust estate for his own profit; that he shall not place himself in a position in which his interest conflicts with his duty; but he may purchase trust property, subject to the right of the cestui que trust to avoid the sale at his election, such a sale not being void, but voidable. (Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Sec. 322; Giddings v. Eastman, 5 Paige, 561; Devone v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. R.

Argument for Respondents.

252.) Even though the interest in the land acquired by the defendants under the deed from Kohler should be considered as held by them under a constructive trust, such trust must be limited to the interest so acquired. Neither Jane Scott nor Charles G. Scott ever had any title, legal or equitable, to the premises. Where a trustee owes any duty toward the property of the beneficiary, or there is any special trust or confidence reposed in the trustee, he cannot buy in an outstanding title to the property which is the subject of the trust, and hold it against the claims of the beneficiary. But that rule does not extend to a bare trustee, or to cases where the trust is purely constructive. The admitted nullity of the sale made by the administrator precludes the possibility of the defendants being chargeable as trustees; for if the sale was without authority, and void, they hold nothing acquired from the estate of Scott, and there is nothing in their hands which can be the subject of a trust in favor of his heirs.

William M. Pierson, for Respondents.

The sale by Kohler was voidable, if not absolutely void. (Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19.) The burden of the defense of being a bona fide purchaser without notice rests upon the purchaser. He should also aver, in his pleading, want of notice, and deny all knowledge of the facts charged from which notice could be inferred. (Woodruff v. Cook, 2 Edw. Ch. 264; Galatian v. Erwin, Hopk. Ch. Rep. 55, 56, citing Mitf. 215, 216, and cases cited; 2 Maddock Ch. 322-324, and cases; 1 Johns. Ch. 302, 575; 2 id. 157; 3 id. 345; see, also, Galatian v. Erwin, 8 Cow. 374; Tompkins v. Naish, 3 Pr. Wms. 307; Tiffany and Bullard on Trustees, 199.) If Kohler could not buy an outstanding title and set it up against the heirs, neither can his vendees, with notice; and that he could not is elementary law. (Leading Cases in Equity, 56; McClanahan v. Henderson, 2 A. K. Marsh. 388, 389; Morrison v. Caldwell, 5 Monroe, 426, 435; Kellogg v. Wood, 4 Paige, 578, 621; Wilson v. Castro, 31 Cal. 435, 436; Page v. Naglee, 6 Cal. 245; Salmon v. Symonds, 30 id. 306; Bludworth v. Lake, 33 id. 263.) It is alleged in the complaint that the defendants claim under the sale, and entered into possession under it, and have received the rents and profits of the land. Now, admit the sale to be absolutely void. The complaint charges a conspiracy between Kohler, Bodley, and Hosmer to cheat the heirs out of their property, and that the defendants had notice of it. It alleges the success of that conspiracy, and that the defendants enjoy the possession of the land as the result of it. If it was done by imposition on a Court, and without giving the heirs an opportunity to defeat the fraud, it strikes us it places the defendants in a much worse position, and makes their liability to the plaintiffs the more emphatic.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The complaint shows that Jane Scott, while a married woman, the wife of Charles G. Scott — purchased for a valuable consideration the premises in controversy and received a conveyance therefor; that Charles G. Scott took immediate possession of the premises, which he retained until his death, in 1856; that at the time of and immediately before his death he was a resident of San Francisco, in this State, and plaintiffs are his only heirs at law. In 1860, one Frederick D. Kohler, designing to defraud plaintiffs out of the described premises, procured letters of administration upon the estate of Charles G. Scott, deceased, in Santa Clara County, and in pursuance of such fraudulent design made several unsuccessful efforts to procure an order of sale of the property for pretended debts and expenses of administration, and finally succeeded in obtaining such order in December, 1861; that the order was made without legal notice to plaintiffs, and without authority on the part of the Court; that a pretended sale was made under this order, without notice given, at which Thomas Bodley was the purchaser, in February, 1862, which sale was afterward confirmed by the Probate Court, and conveyance made by the administrator; that the sale was wholly fictitious and for the benefit of Kohler, no money being paid; that Bodley took the conveyance for Kohler, and at his instance and request, and agreeing to hold the title for Kohler; that Bodley had notice of the fraud contemplated by Kohler, and that the land was then worth nine thousand dollars — the purchase money being one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars. On the 19th day of April, 1862, Kohler being still administrator, with the view of further concealing his designs, caused a conveyance to be made by Bodley to one Charles Hosmer, for a nominal consideration of one thousand five hundred dollars, although no consideration was paid. Hosmer also took the conveyance at the instance and request of Kohler, agreeing to hold the same for him, with full notice of all the acts of fraud on his part. On the 21st day of June, 1862, Kohler caused the property to be conveyed to himself for a nominal consideration of one thousand five hundred dollars; that this conveyance was wholly fictitious — no money being in fact paid — Kohler at the time being and acting as administrator of Charles G. Scott, deceased. Kohler afterwards conveyed to defendant Umbarger, who was then in possession as his tenant in his capacity of administrator, and who had full notice of all the acts of fraud on the part of Kohler, Bodley, and Hosmer. Umbarger afterward conveyed to the other defendants portions of the premises, who also took with full notice.

The answer fails to deny the fraud on the part of Kohler, Bodley, and Hosmer. In effect it admits that the pretended sale was purely fictitious, and made for the purposes mentioned in the complaint. It denies, however, that Umbarger confederated with Kohler to conceal the fraud perpetrated by him, or to defraud the plaintiff in any way; and avers that he purchased in good faith, and for a valuable consideration, without any knowledge or suspicion that there had been any unfair, illegal, wrongful, or unlawful acts on the part of Kohler or any one else connected therewith, and denies that the property was at the time of any greater value than one thousand five hundred dollars, the price paid by him.

The answer also contains a cross complaint, in which it is averred that in 1858 the City of San José was the owner of the premises in controversy, and then sold and conveyed them to the defendants, who now claim to be the owners by virtue of the title derived from the City of San José. They ask to have their title quieted against the plaintiffs.

The answer to the cross-complaint admits that defendants acquired the title from San José, but claims that it was acquired in trust for plaintiffs — the trust arising from the facts alleged in the complaint. Plaintiffs offer to repay the amount paid for the title from the city, and ask that defendants be required to convey to them.

I have been thus particular in stating the pleadings, because, as I think, all the questions involved in the case arise upon them, the evidence not tending, so far as I can see, either to establish or rebut the presumption of notice on the part of Umbarger at the time he purchased or received his deed, except, perhaps, that it shows that Umbarger was in possession under Kohler, as administrator, and knew that Kohler was administrator.

The first question that arises from the pleadings is, whether Umbarger has sufficiently denied notice of the fraud in the title of Kohler.

Opinion of the Court—Temple, J.

He admits, by failing to deny, the fact that Bodley did, in fact, purchase as the agent of Kohler, with full knowledge of his fraudulent designs. That the conveyance to Hosmer was also merely colorable. That Kohler was, in fact, the purchaser at the administrator's sale, made by himself as administrator. The sale was, then, a fraud upon the heirs, and the defendants can only be protected upon the hypothesis that Umbarger was a purchaser for a valuable consideration, in good faith, without notice. The fact of notice is clearly charged in the bill, and is not specifically denied in the answer, but there is an affirmative averment that for "valuable consideration, to wit: one thousand dollars, and in good faith, and without any knowledge or suspicion on his part that there had been any unfair, illegal, or wrongful acts on the part of said F. D. Kohler, or any one else connected therewith, he made a purchase of the interest of the said F. D. Kohler in and to the lands set forth in said complaint; and he denies that he had any knowledge whatever of any illegal or wrongful act of said Kohler." He also denies knowledge that the property was held in trust by Kohler, and denies notice of any fraudulent or wrongful acts on the part of Kohler or any other person, or that they are or ever were the trustees. The defendants do not deny that Bodley purchased at the instance of Kohler, and for his benefit, or that Hosmer took the title for Kohler, as charged in the complaint. The most these denials can be held to amount to is, that neither Bodley, Hosmer, nor Kohler, in taking the title as alleged, did thereby become the trustee of plaintiffs, and that there was nothing unfair, illegal, wrongful, or fraudulent in Kohler's purchasing the property in that way. They admit the fact that Kohler did purchase at his own sale, per interpositam personam; that they knew of these facts, but were not aware that there was anything unfair, illegal, wrongful, or fraudulent about it, and deny that Kohler thereby became trustee for plaintiffs. Under the circumstances it was incumbent upon the defendants to deny specifically knowledge of the alleged facts, or of any facts which would have put them upon inquiry, not only at the time of the purchase but at any time before they paid the purchase money or received their deeds. I, therefore, agree with the learned Judge before whom the case was tried, that notice of the frauds perpetrated by Kohler is not sufficiently denied.

A more important question arising in the case is, whether the facts admitted in the pleadings constituted the defendants the trustees of plaintiffs, and whether they can be compelled to convey to plaintiffs the title acquired from the City of San José.

Although it is alleged in the complaint that Jane Scott, while the wife of Charles G. Scott, acquired title in fee simple, yet it is admitted in the answer to the cross-complaint that the title was afterwards acquired by the defendant from the City of San José; in other words, that Scott had no title whatever, and it does not, therefore, appear that he had any equities with reference to the land.

It is also alleged in the complaint that the order of sale was unauthorized and the sale illegal and of course void. From this it appears that even the rights which Scott had, arising from possession, did not pass under the pretended probate sale. Kohler remained in possession, as administrator, and at least as soon as the administration was closed the heirs could have recovered the possession in an action at law. Therefore the defendants have never taken the legal title or any rights to the premises in trust for plaintiffs.

Were the trust fully established, it would constitute a constructive trust, and unless by reason of the position thus obtained they were enabled to acquire the outstanding title, I do not see how it would be a fraud upon the rights of the plaintiffs. No relation of confidence existed between them which imposed duties upon defendants in defending the rights of the plaintiffs or tended to induce plaintiffs to rely upon them. Defendants, by the sale, acquired no equity which was afterwards ripened into a title, nor does it appear that the possession of the property aided in any way the acquisition of the title. A party in possession without right, legal or equitable, is fraudulently deprived of the possession, without, however, depriving him of any right of possession at law resulting from his actual prior possession, and then the wrongdoer purchases the title from the lawful owner. I know of no principle upon which he can be compelled to convey it. I therefore think the title acquired did not inure to the benefit of plaintiffs, and that the defendants cannot be compelled to convey to them.

OBLIGATIONS OF PARTIES TO CONTRACT.—The obligations of the parties to an agreement for the sale of land are mutual and dependent, where one is to convey, and the other at the same time to pay the purchase money; and neither can put the other in default, except by tendering a performance on his part, unless the other party waives the tender, or by his conduct renders it unnecessary.

CONTRACT — AVERMENT IN COMPLAINT.—If a party pay a sum as part of the purchase money for land, under an agreement that the sum paid shall be retained by the vendor in case he shall convey a good title to the vendee, the latter, in order to maintain an action to recover the amount paid, must aver in his complaint a tender of the unpaid portion of the purchase money, or give some sufficient excuse for the omission to tender it.

according to the agreement, and to pay the balance of the purchase money, is not an averment that he tendered the purchase money.

VALID TENDER OF PURCHASE MONEY.—To constitute a valid tender, the party must have the money at hand, immediately under his control, and must then and there not only be ready and willing, but produce and offer to pay it to the other party, on the performance by him of the requisite condition.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, on the 9th of May, 1867, entered into an agreement with the defendant to purchase from him a lot of land in San Francisco, for two thousand two hundred dollars, and paid him four hundred and eighty-one dollars and eighty-five cents as part of the purchase money, to be retained by the defendant if he should convey a good title to the plaintiff, but to be returned if the defendant should fail to make such a conveyance; that the defendant failed to convey the premises according to the agreement, although the plaintiff had waited a reasonable time — six months — and had been “ready and willing during all the time aforesaid, and offered to accept and take said conveyance, pursuant to said agreement, and to pay the balance of said purchase money;” and that on the 21st of November, 1867, the plaintiff demanded a return of the amount paid to defendant, but the defendant refused to return it. The complaint demands judgment for the four hundred and eighty-one dollars and eighty-five cents. The defendant demurred to the complaint that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and specified as one of the particulars of insufficiency that it failed to show the plaintiff had, prior to the bringing of the action, tendered to the defendant the portion of the purchase money remaining unpaid. The demurrer was overruled, and the plaintiff had judgment. From the judgment and an order denying a new trial the defendant appealed.

James B. Townsend, for Appellant.

The complaint is insufficient, because it does not show that the plaintiff ever, prior to the commencement of this action, tendered to the defendant the balance of the purchase money, demanding such conveyance. (Dart. on Vend. and Purch. *449, *450, note 2, and cases therein cited, and *451.)

James C. Carey and Julius George, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The demurrer to the complaint ought to have been sustained. On the facts averred in the complaint, the payment of the remainder of the purchase money by the plaintiff, and the execution and delivery of a proper deed of conveyance by the defendant, were concurrent acts, to be simultaneously performed. The covenants of the vendor and vendee were mutual and dependent, and neither could put the other in default, except by tendering a performance on his own part, unless the other party either waived the tender, or, by his conduct, rendered it unnecessary. To entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action on the contract set out in the complaint, he should have averred a tender of the unpaid portion of the purchase money, or some sufficient excuse for the omission to tender it. The only allegation of the complaint on this point is that the plaintiff "has been ready and willing during all the time aforesaid, and has offered to accept and take said conveyance, pursuant to said agreement, and to pay the balance of said purchase money." This is not an averment that he tendered the purchase money. To constitute a valid tender in such a case, the party must have the money at hand, immediately under his control, and must then and there not only be ready and willing, but produce and offer to pay it to the other party, on the performance by him of the requisite condition. (15 Wend. 637; 6 id. 22, n. a. 35;

Argument for Appellant.

Strong v. Blake, 46 Barb. 227.) There is in this complaint no sufficient averment of a tender, nor of any excuse for the omission, and the demurrer ought to have been sustained on this ground.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

DAVID MAHONEY v. THOMAS I. BERGIN.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CLIENT AND ATTORNEY.—An agreement made by an attorney with a client to render his professional services "in the Courts of this State," in actions to test the validity of the client's title to certain real estate, in consideration of a conveyance by the client to the attorney of a portion of the land, does not bind the attorney to render his services in an action brought to test the validity of the same title in the Circuit Court of the United States for this State.

ISSUE.—If such agreement was fair and free from fraud, and the land conveyed by the client a reasonable fee for the services agreed to be rendered, the attorney will not be compelled to reconvey the land, upon the payment of a reasonable fee for his services rendered, because, by reason of the suit in the Circuit Court, the client compromised with the opposing parties, and paid a large sum of money to acquire opposing claims; and the attorney was not compelled to render the full amount of services expected.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The Court below rendered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

point, that the agreement did not express his understanding of the agreement he had made with his attorney, and on the faith of which he made his deed of the land. And if the defendant's construction of it was an afterthought with him, occurring only when the "Galindo title" was set up in the United States Circuit Court, it speaks unmistakably the language of exaction, and strongly manifests the intention to shirk a fair and professional discharge of the duty of an attorney to his client. It is, moreover, evidence of an original intent, and, taken in connection with the tenor of his testimony on the point, is conclusive that he intended, by the writing, to restrict his services to the State Courts; and we have a right to infer, as a just inference, that, so intending, he employed language ("in the Courts of this State") which, at least to the ordinary and unprofessional mind, would embrace all the Courts within this State in which the "Galindo title" could be asserted or attacked, but which he intended should bear the construction which he subsequently gave it, when the necessity arose for his services. The rule that obtains between contracting parties occupying the same relative positions toward each other is not that by which attorney and client are bound; but, as between the latter, the rule is reversed. It lies with the attorney, in all cases to show affirmatively that his dealings with his client are fair, just, and reasonable — the presumption being against the fairness of the transaction. (Evans v. Ellis, N. Y. Court of Errors, 5 Denio, 640; affirming Sup. Ct. in 11 Paige Ch. 467; Poillon v. Martin, 1 Sand. Ch. 569; Howell v. Bansom, 11 Paige Ch. 538; *Kisling v. T. I. Bergin, for himself.

It will be borne in mind that all the instruments out of which the present action grows, were executed years ago—the land conveyed and professional services rendered on the faith thereof, that the referee finds that these were reasonably worth the fee agreed upon, i. e., four thousand dollars in coin, and therefore, the case falls within the rule of equity in reference to executed contracts.

In Nace v. Boyer, 30 Pa. St. 109, the Court again says: "The grounds upon which Courts of equity proceed in rescinding or canceling executed contracts, is much more narrow and to be more carefully trodden than that upon which they refuse specific performance of unexecuted contracts, or even decree their cancellation. Nothing but fraud or palpable mistake is ground for rescinding an executed conveyance."

The evidence of fraud or mistake must be clear and convincing, making it out to the entire satisfaction of the Court, and not leaving it open to doubt. (1 Story Eq., Secs. 152, 157, 176.) Had the agreed fee been paid in cash, would any one have pretended an action would lie for recovery thereof after the performance of the services, and especially where the services performed were reasonably worth as much as had been paid?

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

In November, 1866, the plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of the "Rancho Laguna de la Merced," against which there was an adverse claim called the Galindo claim, employed the defendant, who is an attorney and counselor at law, to test the validity of the Galindo title, and also to defend the plaintiff against a certain action then pending against him, brought by one Nuttman. This contract was reduced to writing, and is in the words and figures following:.

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

“In consideration of David Mahoney conveying in fee twenty acres of land in the Rancho Laguna de la Merced to me, Thomas I. Bergin, I, Thomas I. Bergin, an attorney and counselor at law, do undertake and agree with said Mahoney to render my professional services in the courts of this State, in an action to test and determine the validity of the so-called Galindo deed, and also to defend the action of James E. Nuttman v. David Mahoney and Richard O'Neill, Twelfth District Court of this State.

“In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, this 21st day of November, 1866.

“THOMAS I. BERGIN.”

At the same time, in pursuance of the terms of the agreement, plaintiff executed to defendant a deed for twenty acres of land, valued at two hundred dollars per acre. Thereupon the defendant took charge of the Nuttman case for plaintiff, and shortly after brought a suit in the Twelfth District Court to quiet the title of plaintiff against the claimants under the Galindo title. This action was diligently prosecuted by defendant, but demurrers were interposed, and the case thereby delayed. This action was commenced on the 28th of December, 1866, but no trial on the merits has ever been had. Some time afterwards an action was commenced in the Circuit Court of the United States, at San Francisco, by the claimants under the Galindo title, against Mahoney and others, to obtain a decree that the confirmation of the title under which Mahoney claimed should inure to the benefit of Marks—the claimant under the Galindo title—and that the patent should issue to him instead of Mahoney; and also to enjoin the prosecution of the action brought by Mahoney in the Twelfth District Court to quiet his title. When this action was brought, Mahoney requested the defendant to appear and defend it, as his counsel; but this the defendant refused to do, alleging that his contract only required him to render his professional services in an action to test the validity of that title in the Courts of this State. Afterwards compromises were made in all these cases. Mahoney acquired by purchase whatever rights Nuttman had, and also the claim under the Galindo title. For all these compromises Mahoney paid, it is alleged, some sixty thousand dollars, thereby terminating the suits and rendering the services of defendant no longer necessary.

This suit is brought to compel the defendant to reconvey the twenty acres of land, upon being paid a reasonable sum for his services, and is based upon two propositions: First—That the deed was unfairly obtained; that is, that defendant took advantage of the relation of attorney and client; and while plaintiff supposed he had a contract which would compel defendant to defend his title against the Galindo claim, the contract was so worded by defendant as to require very little labor for him, and afford little benefit to the plaintiff. In other words, that the contract was obtained by fraud. Second—That the defendant has not performed his contract. It is also contended that the agreement, if properly construed by the defendant, did not express the intentions of the plaintiff, and was executed through a mistake, and ought, therefore, to be set aside or reformed.

The case was referred to a referee to find the facts, and he has found on all the issues for the defendant. He finds that the agreement was fair, and free from fraud; that the land conveyed was a reasonable fee for the services agreed to be rendered, and that the agreement was correctly reduced to writing, and correctly expressed the intention of the parties at the time. In this finding I think the referee is fully justified by the evidence. There is no evidence tending to show that the least advantage was taken of Mahoney in the matter; but the contrary clearly appears.

Opinion of the Court—Temple, J.

His own evidence shows plainly that he knew what he was about, and indicates both the ability and disposition to take care of his own interests, and no inclination to repose unusual confidence in any one.

Nor do I think the evidence clearly shows a mistake in the terms of the contract. The undertaking was not to defend the plaintiff's title against the Galindo claim, even in the State Courts, but to render his services in an action to test the validity of the Galindo deed. It was probably supposed by both parties at the time that this could be done in a suit to quiet title in the State Courts, and both seem to have spoken with reference to such a suit, and probably neither contemplated the possibility of such a suit as was brought. They failed to provide for such a contingency; and had it been considered, we cannot know that the contract would have been executed by Bergin.

I do not understand that it is charged that the defendant failed to perform his contract, except by refusing to defend the suit brought in the United States Circuit Court.

The suit in the Circuit Court, although intimately connected with the subject-matter of the contract, and having a direct bearing upon the suit brought by Bergin in pursuance of it, was not within the terms of the contract, or contemplated by either of the parties at the time. The contract was not obtained through fraud or mistake, and plaintiff cannot complain if the defendant declines more than a literal compliance with it.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
EDWARD MCGUNGILL.

CHALLENGE OF JUROR FOR IMPLIED BIAS.—A challenge of a juror for implied bias must state some one of the causes enumerated in section three hundred and forty-seven of the Criminal Practice Act. To say a juror is challenged for implied bias is no challenge.

DISALLOWANCE OF CHALLENGE AS PREJUDICE.—If a party attempt to challenge a juror for implied bias, and, the challenge being disallowed, he then challenge peremptorily, and if it does not appear affirmatively that he had exhausted his peremptory challenges at the time a full panel was sworn, he is not prejudiced by the disallowance of his attempted challenge.

DEFENDANT AS A WITNESS FOR HIMSELF.—The fact that a defendant offers himself as a witness in his own behalf does not change or modify the rules of practice, with reference to the proper limits of a cross-examination, and does not make him a witness for the State against himself.

COMMENTS OF COUNSEL TO JURY.—In such a case, it is irregular for the counsel for the prosecution, against the objections of the defendant's counsel, to comment, in his argument to the jury, upon the refusal of the defendant to be cross-examined to the whole case; and for the Court to permit a continuation of such comments, against such objection, is erroneous, and prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

PRINCIPAL AND ACCESSORY.—Under an indictment which charges a defendant as principal, he cannot be found guilty, if the evidence shows him to have been an accessory before the fact.

APPEAL from the County Court of Mendocino County.

"for implied bias," cannot be considered upon the record as presented. Neither challenge appears to have been made for any specific cause authorized by statute. To simply state that "the juror is challenged for implied bias" is no challenge. A challenge for implied bias must state some one of the nine causes enumerated in section three hundred and forty-seven of the Criminal Practice Act. (People v. Hardin, 37 Cal. 258; People v. Dick, id. 379.)

Again, it appears that neither of the persons so attempted to be challenged served on the trial, having been peremptorily challenged by defendant; and it does not affirmatively appear that defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges at the time the full panel was accepted and sworn; hence he was not prejudiced by the action of the Court in disallowing his attempted challenge for implied bias.

The bill of exceptions does not purport to contain all, or any considerable portion, of the evidence presented on the trial; hence it is impossible for this Court to determine as to the competency of the evidence relative to the cattle of J. J. Thomas and J. Farley, not included in the indictment, but which seem to have been found with those described in the indictment, on their first discovery after the alleged larceny.

It appears from the bill of exceptions that "one Yates was called and sworn as a witness for the prosecution, and, among other things, stated that he had a certain conversation with the prisoner." This closed the evidence for the prosecution. The defendant was then placed upon the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and was asked if he had the conversation with Yates spoken of by Yates, and answered he did not, and was examined no further by his counsel than concerning said conversation, nor was he examined on any other point, but answered all questions required of him by the Court; that upon the argument of the case the counsel for the prosecution commented upon the fact before the jury; that the defendant refused to be cross-examined to the whole case; that defendant's counsel protested against such comments, but they were continued by permission of the Court. This conduct of counsel for the prosecution, under sanction of the Court, and against objections of the defendant's counsel, was irregular, and its permission by the Court erroneous, and manifestly prejudicial to the rights of defendant. (People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522.)

The fact that defendant offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, did not, as to him, change or modify the rules of practice with reference to the proper limits of a cross-examination of a witness; and, clearly, the prosecution could not legally claim that defendant should be made a witness for the State against himself. To attempt such an outrage of defendant's rights, and then, with the sanction of the Court, in argument to the jury, to comment upon the failure of such attempt as a circumstance tending to establish the guilt of defendant, cannot be justified or sanctioned.

The second, fifth, and eighth instructions, given by the Court at request of the prosecution, are obnoxious to the objection, of substantially asserting that under the indictment, which charges the defendant as principal, he should be found guilty, if the evidence shows him to have been an accessory before the fact, in "advising or encouraging" the commission of the offense. In this respect each of these instructions is erroneous. (People v. Trim, 39 Cal. 75; People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129.)

The judgment should, therefore, be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

Argument for Appellant.

MICHAEL O'CONNOR v. WILLIAM KELLY.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.— If the landlord sells and conveys the leased premises, and assigns the lease, the grantee must inform the tenant of the sale before demanding rent, and if the tenant refuse to pay rent to the grantee, when he does not know of the sale the refusal is not a forfeiture of the lease.

EJECTMENT AGAINST TENANT.— The grantee cannot maintain ejectment against the tenant of the landlord, because the tenant has refused to pay him rent, unless the tenant had been informed of the sale, before rent was demanded.

DEMAND FOR RENT.— A demand for rent should be of the amount due. If the amount due is not demanded a refusal to pay does not work a forfeiture of the lease.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The lease from Murphy to Kelly was dated August 25th, 1863, and was for a tract of land in San Francisco. Suit was brought before the termination of the lease, to wit: April 17th, 1868. The lease was not recorded. The deed from Murphy to O'Connor was dated April 16th, 1867, and was not recorded. The plaintiff recovered judgment in the Court below, and the defendant appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

M. G. Cobb, for Appellant.

O'Connor having thus shown the relation of landlord and tenant between himself and Kelly, he was bound to prove that that relation had ceased — that Kelly had become a trespasser — in order to maintain his action. The demand for rent was not sufficient to make a refusal to pay work a forfeiture. Taylor on Landlord and Tenant (Sec. 493) states the common law rule thus: "In every case, before a landlord could enter for the non-payment of rent he must have made a formal demand for the precise rent due for the last current quarter; and if the demand includes any portion of the rent of a previous quarter, it would have been bad. Kelly did not renounce his character of tenant either by setting up title in another or claiming title in himself. (Doe ex dem. Williams v. Cooper, 1 M. & G. 139 [39 E. C. L. R. 608].)

G. F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

If Kelly's refusal to pay rent was innocent, it behooved him to ascertain the true state of facts and then come into Court with a tender of his rent, thereby possibly averting the forfeiture, as was done in the case of Atkins v. Chilson, 11 Met. 112. (Sampson v. Schaeffer, 3 Cal. 203.) The law defines a disclaimer as any act of the lessee by which he disaffirms or impugns the title of his lessor. (1 Washburne on R. P. 362, and cases therein cited.) And, in consequence of such disclaimer, the lessee forfeits his estate, and the lessor may enter or bring ejectment or forcible detainer. (1 Washburne on R. P. 362, and cases therein cited; Wall v. Goodenough, 5 Ill. 415.)

The fact that the lessee was ignorant of his lessor's title is a circumstance which, while it does not prevent the forfeiture from attaching, might, if coupled with mistake or accident, be a ground for relief; but here the defendant, instead of making any such defense, and in entire harmony with his previous actions, comes into Court and contests our title, to the last extremity.

In 9 Carrington & Payne, 773 (38 E. C. L. R. 331), Doe ex dem. Bennett v. Long, the reply of a tenant to a demand for rent, "You are not my landlord—I am not your tenant," was held to be a disclaimer, and ejectment would lie without notice to quit. (See, also, Doe ex dem. Grubb v. Grubb, 10 Barn. & Cress. 816; Calvert v. Frowd, 4 Bing. 557.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The defendant was the tenant of one Murphy, from whom he had a lease of the premises sought to be recovered in this action for the term of five years, paying a rent of six dollars per annum. Before the expiration of the lease, Murphy conveyed to plaintiff, who sent his clerk to defendant to demand the payment of rent, which being refused, this action was commenced, being ejectment.

It does not appear that the defendant had notice of the conveyance of the premises to the plaintiff, or that, at the time he refused to pay rent, he had any knowledge of that fact whatever. From the evidence of Ryan, through whom the demand was made, the contrary is to be inferred.

By the terms of the lease, Murphy could put an end to the term before the expiration of five years, upon the payment of a certain sum of money to Kelly. The lease, also, contained the usual covenant for a forfeiture in case of non-payment of rent. Demand was not made for any particular sum, nor was there any other refusal than a statement that he did not acknowledge O'Connor in the matter, and did not wish to pay rent to him. In fact, he did not know him. He was not informed of the conveyance to O'Connor, nor did he deny the tenancy or set up any claim in himself. He did just what any tenant ought to do when called upon to acknowledge the title of a stranger and pay rent to him. If leases could be forfeited by making a secret assignment of the lease and demand made by the assignee, without making known the fact of assignment, no tenant would ever be safe. By doing just what appears to be his duty to his landlord he might forfeit his estate.

The failure to make demand of the amount due was also fatal to the plaintiff's case. (Guge v. Bates, 40 Cal. 384.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings

[No. 2816.]

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
EDWIN HUNT.

REPEAL OF REPEALING ACT.—The repeal of an Act repealing a former Act does not revive the former Act, or give it any force or effect. To revive such former Act it must be re-enacted.

OFFICE REVIVED BY REPEALING ACT.—If a general Act creates an office in all the counties of the State, to be filled by election once in two years, and a special Act, passed afterwards, takes one county away from the provisions of the Act, and this special Act is afterwards repealed by an Act which restores the office as to that county, the provisions of the general Act are revived as to the office.

CASE AFFIRMED.—Trout v. Gardiner, 39 Cal. 386.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The County of Alameda contains six townships. At the general election held in September, 1867, an Assessor was elected for each township. At the general election held in September, 1869, Edwin Hunt was elected County Assessor; but no Township Assessors were elected. Hunt received his certificate, qualified, and, on the first Monday in March, 1870, entered upon the discharge of his duties. No Township Assessors were elected to succeed those of 1867. The Act of 1864, referred to in the opinion, provided "that Township Assessors should be elected in 1865, and every two years thereafter, for Alameda County, to hold their offices two years from the first Monday in March succeeding such election, and until their successors should be elected and qualified."

The Attorney General filed his complaint, by way of information of quo warranto, against the respondent, Edwin Hunt, setting up the above matters of fact, and the facts stated in the opinion, and asked judgment of ouster against him.

Argument for Appellant.

The defendant demurred to the complaint, and had final judgment on the demurrer. The plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Clarke & Carpentier, for Appellant.

The Act of 1863 (Laws 1863-4, p. 243) abolished the office of County Assessor, and provided for District Assessors. The Act of 1868 did not abolish the office of Township Assessor, unless it was done by section twenty-four:

“SECTION 24. All Acts, and parts of Acts, in conflict with the provisions of this Act, are repealed, so far as they affect the provisions of this Act, to take effect from the first Monday in March, 1870, when this Act shall go into operation.”

From the language of this section twenty-four, two things are clear:

1. That the Act of 1868 was not to go into operation until the first Monday of March, 1870, nearly two years after its passage; and,

2. That none of the Acts, or parts of Acts, in conflict with its provisions, should be repealed until the first Monday of March, 1870.

Now, the first Monday of March, 1870, fell on the seventh day of that month. There can, therefore, be no question but that, up to the 7th of March, 1870, the “Acts, and parts of Acts,” within the purview of said section twenty-four, remained unaffected by its provisions. If, therefore, the Act of 1863, which abolished the office of “County Assessor for the County of Alameda,” be one of the Acts embraced within the provisions of said section twenty-four, it was not repealed by said section prior to the 7th day of March, 1870, but continued to be the law up to that date, and, as a consequence, the only Assessors known to the law, up to that date, were the Township Assessors, and the only election in 1869 for Assessors, warranted by law, was an election for Township Assessors, under the law of 1863. There can be no pretense, then, that Edwin Hunt ever became, or was, County Assessor prior to March 7th, 1870.

John W. Dwinelle, for Respondent.

The Act of 1863 was repealed in 1868, and the office of County Assessor of Alameda County restored, and the respondent, Edwin Hunt, lawfully elected to that office in 1869. Applying to the Act of 1868 the received principle of interpretation — that it must all be construed together — we find that by section three Township Assessors are established and County Assessors restored; the election of a County Assessor ordered for the Autumn of 1869; and, by section twenty-four, all other conflicting Acts repealed, “to take effect from the first Monday of March, 1870, when the new Act was to go into operation.” We interpret this to mean that no Township Assessors were to be elected in the Autumn of 1869, for the office was abolished; that a County Assessor was to be elected in the Autumn of 1869 to fill the office of County Assessor, which was created to succeed that of the Township Assessor from and after the first Monday of March, 1870; that until the first Monday of March, 1870, the Township Assessors were to continue in office, and act as such, and the Township Assessor system, meanwhile, continue “in effect;” but that after the first Monday of March, 1870, the County Assessor system was to “go into operation.” (City of San Francisco v. Kelsey, 5 Cal. 169; City of Sacramento v. Bird, 15 Cal. 294; Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 115; Cleaves v. Hays, 3 Cal. 471; Preble v. Waterman, 31 Cal. 412; Sartin v. The Sea Witch, 1 Cal. 162; Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47; Seabury v. Arthur, 28 Cal. 142; Appeal of N. B. & M. R. R. Co., 32 Cal. 499; Burr v. Dana, 22 Cal. 11.) Even granting that the law of 1868 does not provide for its own execution, still it does provide for the restoration of the office of County Assessor on and after the first Monday of March, 1870. Suppose it has only this effect: "Township Assessors are abolished, and the office of County Assessor restored, on and after the first Monday of March, 1870." Then here was an office created, an office to be filled, and to be filled in the first instance, only by election. (People v. Kelsey, 34 Cal. 470.) And how thus filled? Under the law of 1861, above cited, and never repealed, requiring all County Assessors to be elected every two years at the general election. (Laws 1861, p. 422, Sec. 6; 2 Hittell, 6,155.)

Opinion of the Court — RHODES, C. J.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The question for determination is whether the defendant is the County Assessor of Alameda County. The Revenue Act of 1861 provided that County Assessors should be elected in 1861, and every two years thereafter, in each county. (Stats. 1861, p. 422.) In 1864 a special Act was passed for Alameda County, by which it was provided that Township Assessors should be elected in that county. (Stats. 1863-4, p. 243.) The Act of March 28th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 448), contained a provision, in section three, that assessments should be made in all the counties by County Assessors, and that in counties wherein there were Township or District Assessors, County Assessors should be elected at the general election in 1869. The defendant was elected in 1869 as the County Assessor of Alameda County.

The Act of 1868 was expressly repealed by the Act of March 5th, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 198, Sec. 98), which took effect upon its approval. It is contended by the plaintiffs that the effect of the repeal was to leave in force the Act of 1864, providing for the election of Township Assessors in Alameda County.

It was held in Trout v. Gardiner, 39 Cal. 386, that the Act of March 28th, 1868, took effect for certain purposes before the first Monday — the seventh day — of March, 1870; and, among other things, that it authorized and required the officers to be elected as therein provided, which might be necessary in order that the Act might have full force and effect. It was provided by the Act that County Assessors should be elected at the general election in 1869, and for that purpose the Act took effect sixty days after its passage. That provision repealed the Act of 1864, providing for the election of Township Assessors for Alameda County. The repeal of the Act of 1868, two days before it took effect, for all purposes, by the Act of March 5th, 1870, did not revive the special Act of 1864. The repeal of an Act repealing a former Act does not revive the former Act, or give it any force and effect. This result can be accomplished only by the reenactment of the former Act. The repeal of the Act of 1864, by section three of the Act of 1868, worked the same result as would an Act directly repealing the Act of 1864; that is to say, the special Act having been repealed, a County Assessor was required to be elected for Alameda County in 1869, as provided by the general Revenue Act of 1861. The defendant was elected as such Assessor, and he was authorized and required to perform all the duties of County Assessor, as provided by the revenue laws.

Points decided.

Judgment affirmed, and remittitur ordered to issue forthwith.

M. J. DOOLY v. T. B. NORTON AND HENRICH UMLAUFF.

APPEAL FROM ORDER RETAKING COSTS.—An order on a motion to retax costs, if made after the entry of judgment, is a special order made after final judgment, from which an appeal lies.

REVIEW.—If such order is made before the entry of judgment, it may be reviewed by an appeal from the judgment, with a statement annexed to the record.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. H. Budd, for Appellant.

There is no provision in the Practice Act in regard to a retaxation of costs, but the recognized practice has been to move the Court, on notice, to retax the cost, if deemed erroneous. (Burnham v. Hays, 3 Cal. 115; Chapin v. Broder, 16 Cal. 419; Gay v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 416.) The decisions are silent as to the time when the motion to retax should be made. There is nothing to indicate that it should be necessarily made during the term of the rendition of the judgment. In fact, should the judgment be rendered on the last day of the term, then a motion to retax could not in many cases be made at the term of the rendition of the judgment. A mistake or willful wrong in the memorandum of costs would be no ground for a new trial. (Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 105.) And unless the aggrieved party be allowed a reasonable time, even after the term of the Court had passed, to move to retax the costs, he would, in many cases, be without remedy.

Terry & Carr, for Respondent.

The motion to retax costs was properly refused; costs are included in and form a part of the judgment, and a motion to retax is in legal effect a motion to modify or amend the judgment. (Lasky v. Davis, 33 Cal. 677.) After the adjournment of the term at which a judgment is entered, the Court has no power to amend it, except to correct an error disclosed by the record itself. (Hegeler v. Henkell, 27 Cal. 491.) Except in the cases provided for in the sixty-eighth section of the Practice Act, a Court has no power to set aside or modify a judgment after the lapse of the term at which it was rendered, unless some step was taken during the term to preserve its jurisdiction over the case. (Carpentier v. Hart, 5 Cal. 406; Bell v. Thompson, 19 Cal. 706; Casement v. Ringold, 28 Cal. 338; De Castro v. Richardson, 25 Cal. 49.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The judgment was rendered February 21st, 1870; and on the twenty-third of the same month the plaintiff filed his memorandum of costs, etc. At the next term of the Court, defendant Norton moved that the costs be retaxed. The motion was dismissed on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction of the motion, as the judgment had been entered at a former term of the Court. The defendant appeals from the judgment and the order dismissing the motion.

Had the order dismissing the motion been made before the rendition of the judgment, it might have been reviewed under an appeal from the judgment, and might have been presented by a statement on such appeal. But the question here presented is, whether an appeal lies from the order, as a special order made after final judgment. In Levy v. Getleson, 27 Cal. 688, the order denying the motion to retax the costs was made before the judgment was entered, and it was held that the order was not appealable, as it was not made after the final judgment, and that the question of its correctness might be raised by a statement annexed to the judgment roll. It was also held in Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 105, that an error in the taxation of costs must be reviewed and corrected on an appeal from the judgment. In that case the motion and order were made before the entry of the judgment. In Lasky v. Davis, 33 Cal. 677, the costs were retaxed on the motion of the defendant. The order was made more than three months after the entry of the judgment, and from the order the plaintiff appealed. The appeal was dismissed on the ground that the order was not an order, after final judgment, within the meaning of section three hundred and forty-three of the Practice Act, but amounted to a modification or amendment of the judgment; that the order, though made after, will be deemed in law to have been made before the entry of the judgment. The authorities which are cited by the Court are those above mentioned and Volan v. Reese, 20 Cal. 90. The last mentioned case merely decided that the costs could not be considered in determining whether the matter in dispute was sufficient to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the appeal from the judgment.

The order made on the motion to retax the costs in an action is a proper subject for review, in some mode, in this Court. If made before the judgment is rendered, it may be reached by an appeal from the judgment; but if made more than twenty days after the entry of judgment, how is the question to be presented for review? It is very clear, upon the authorities in this Court, that it can be presented only by means of a statement on appeal. The statement cannot be annexed to the judgment, because more than twenty days have elapsed since the entry of the judgment. (Sec. 338.) If it is not annexed to the order it has no place in the record and cannot be brought before the appellate Court.

The motion to retax the costs is in effect a motion to modify the judgment, and however the order may be considered, when it is made before the entry of the judgment, it seems clear to me that when it is made after the entry of the judgment it is an order after final judgment as fully in every sense as an order modifying the judgment in any other respect. If this be not the true construction the party complaining of the order would, in many instances, be without redress.

No error appears in the judgment, and it is affirmed; the order appealed from reversed and cause remanded; and it is ordered that this judgment be entered as of the 25th day of February, 1871.

RHODES, C. J., dissenting:

The defendant appeals from the judgment which was entered at the February term of the District Court, and from an order made at the ensuing May term, dismissing his motion to retax the costs. The order is not appealable; but a review of the action of the Court, on a motion to tax or retax the costs, may be had upon an appeal from the judgment. (Levy v. Getleson, 27 Cal. 688; Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 105; Lasky v. Davis, 33 Cal. 677.) In Lasky v. Davis it was considered that the order retaxing the costs was not a special order, made after final judgment, within the meaning of section three hundred and forty-three of the Practice Act, though made after the judgment, in point of time.

It necessarily follows, from the doctrine of those cases, that if the order be made after the rendition of the judgment, the time for the filing of the statement on appeal, so far as respects the proceedings on the motion to tax or retax costs, will commence running from the entry of the order. The statement in this case was filed in due time.

The plaintiff's memorandum of costs was filed ten days before the adjournment of the February term; and the defendant, at the May term, moved that the costs be retaxed. The defendant did not show, as required by section sixty-eight of the Practice Act, that he had been unable to apply for a retaxation of the costs during the February term. The Court should, on that ground, have denied the motion. The dismissal of the motion may be accepted in this case as amounting to a denial of the motion; and although the decision was placed on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction of the motion, because it was made after the adjournment of the term at which the judgment was rendered, yet, as the order was right, it should not be disturbed.

I am of opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and the appeal from the order dismissed.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not express an opinion.

C. L. PURDY AND C. MILLIKIN v. W. P. BULLARD AND M. SULLIVAN.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.—A party to a contract is not entitled to a judgment rescinding the same, on the ground of fraudulent representations, unless he has been injured by reason of his reliance on such representations.

COMPLAINT IN ACTION TO RESCIND CONTRACT.—In an action to rescind a sale of real estate, on the ground of fraudulent representations, security, averred in the complaint to have been given for the purchase money, will be presumed to be adequate unless the contrary is expressly averred.

RESCINDING PART OF A CONTRACT.—Where a contract is not severable, and there are good grounds for its rescission, one party is not at liberty to rescind one part of it, and leave the residue in full force. P. proposed to sell to B. a hotel, and to effect the sale, P. deeded the property to C., who paid him part of the purchase money, and C. contracted with B. to give him a deed when he was repaid the money thus advanced. B. then gave P. security for the remainder of the purchase money, and assigned his contract with C. to S. Held, that the whole matter constituted one entire contract.

MORTGAGE IN EQUITY—OFFER TO REFUND MONEY.—Where P. contracts with B. to sell him his hotel, and, to effect the sale, executes to C. a conveyance thereof, upon C. advancing to P. part of the purchase money, and C. gives B. a contract for a deed when the money he has advanced is repaid, and B. gives P. security for the balance, as between the parties, the sale and conveyance will be deemed, in equity, a mortgage to secure the payment by B. to C. of the sum advanced; and in such case a complaint, to set aside the contract for fraudulent representations to B., must aver an offer to refund C. his money.

Argument for Respondents

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Sonoma.

The plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

F. D. Colton, for Appellants.

Bullard's representations were fraudulently made. The plaintiffs believed and relied on them. They now ask that the contract be rescinded so far as Bullard and his assignee with notice, Sullivan, is concerned. (Gifford v. Carvill, 29 Cal. 589.)

George Pearce, for Respondents.

An action cannot be maintained on a false representation as to the bare fact of title. (Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213.) For aught that appears in the complaint, the cows and farming implements may have been worth more than four thousand dollars. If the deed and bill of sale to Millikin were taken as security, there can be no pretense for setting aside the contract of the parties, thus solemnly made, without some charge or allegations of misrepresentations as to the title, value, or condition of the cows or farming implements. (2 Parsons on Contracts, 60, 61.) The cows and farming implements may have been worth, and may now be worth, more than the sum of four thousand dollars, the complaint being entirely silent as to the value of either, and the complaint must be construed against the appellants.

F. D. Colton, in reply:

The point that the complaint does not aver that the cows and farming utensils were worth less than four thousand dollars, was not made below. Taking, however, the whole complaint together, we think it sufficiently appears they were worth less than that sum.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

Nathaniel Bennett, also for Appellants.

As to contracts voidable on the ground of fraudulent representations, we refer the Court to Chitty on Contracts, in the third subdivision of the section headed "Of Contracts Illegal at Common Law," commencing at page 678 of ed. 1844, and notes; and Sec. 12, entitled "Of Fraud," of Chap. 3 of 2d vol. of Parsons on Contracts, p. 265 of ed. 1860. The principles laid down and elucidated by these authors appear to us most clearly to sustain the principle on which our complaint is founded.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The leading facts stated in the complaint are as follows: The plaintiffs proposed to sell, and Bullard, one of the defendants, to buy, the New York Hotel, at Petaluma, with the furniture, bedding, etc., for nine thousand dollars, to be paid in the following manner: The plaintiffs were to convey to one Cobb the hotel and furniture, and Cobb was to pay the plaintiffs five thousand dollars, and to execute to Bullard a contract to convey to him the property on his paying to Cobb the five thousand dollars, with interest. The agreements, up to this point, were executed by the respective parties. The remaining four thousand dollars were to be paid as follows: Bullard represented that he was the owner of a certain farm, which was of the value of four thousand dollars; that he had bargained the farm to one Barlow for over three thousand dollars; that Barlow was to pay him in hand three thousand dollars, or give him his (Barlow's) note for that sum, with one Denman as surety; and that he was expecting Barlow daily to come to Petaluma to pay the money or give the note. This sum of money was to be paid to the plaintiffs, or the note last mentioned was to be assigned to them. Bullard was also to execute to them his promissory note, with one Hill as surety, for the sum of one thousand dollars. Bullard represented that Barlow was prevented by the rain from coming to Petaluma, and Bullard, in order to secure to the plaintiffs the payment of the sum of three thousand dollars, to be paid by Barlow, or the assignment of the note of Barlow and Denman, conveyed to one of the plaintiffs the farm, and gave him a bill of sale of seven cows and all the farming utensils on the farm. It is alleged that Bullard neither paid the three thousand dollars, nor assigned the note of Barlow and Denman, nor made the note for one thousand dollars, nor paid that sum of money.

It is alleged that Bullard's representations, that he owned the farm, that the farm was of the value of four thousand dollars, that he had bargained the same to Barlow for a sum exceeding three thousand dollars, were false, and were made for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs believed those representations, and, relying on them, entered into the agreements above mentioned. The contract which was executed by Cobb to Bullard was assigned to Sullivan, who took it, with notice of all the facts relating to the whole transaction.

The plaintiffs seek to rescind the sale of the hotel property, on the ground of the false and fraudulent representations of Bullard. General demurrers to the complaint were interposed by the defendants; and the demurrers being sustained, and the plaintiffs declining to amend the complaint, judgment was rendered for the defendants. The fraudulent representations of Bullard, assuming that they are actionable, bear only on the matter of the payment of the sum of three thousand dollars. The plaintiffs are not entitled to rescind the contract, unless they have been injured by reason of their reliance on those representations. They accepted a conveyance of the farm, and a sale of the cows and farming utensils, as security for the performance of Bullard's agreement to pay that sum, or assign the note of Barlow and

Denman. It does not appear from the complaint that the security was inadequate. The value of the personal property is not stated; nor is it averred that it is not ample to secure the payment of the sum of three thousand dollars. The Court is not at liberty to indulge in speculations as to its probable value. The statement as to its value should have been direct, or, at least, it should have been averred that its value, together with the value, if any, of Bullard's interest in the farm, was insufficient to secure the performance of his agreement in respect to the payment of the sum of three thousand dollars. The security will be presumed to be adequate until the contrary is shown; and if it is adequate, the plaintiffs have suffered no injury by their reliance upon Bullard's false and fraudulent representation.

There is another point in the case which, I think, deserves notice. The general rule is that a contract cannot be rescinded in part. Where the contract is not severable, and there are good grounds for its rescission, one party is not at liberty to rescind one part of it, and leave the residue in full force.

The sale and conveyance of the hotel property, and the agreements in respect to the payment of the purchase money, constituted one entire contract. As between the parties to the contract, the sale and conveyance of the hotel property will be deemed, in equity, a mortgage to secure the payment by Bullard to Cobb of the sum of five thousand dollars, with interest. The complaint does not aver an offer on the part of the plaintiffs to pay to Cobb the money so advanced by him. Their offer to Bullard "to free him from or amply secure him against said contract with Cobb" is not an offer to rescind that portion of the contract. The offer to rescind, to be effectual, should have extended to the whole contract.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAM ARAM, TRUSTEE OF THE ORCHARD STREET DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOL, JAMES MURPHY, BERNARD S. FOX, MARK FARNEY, AND JOHN R. MERRITT v. MOSES SCHALLENBERGER, HENRY ROBINSON, AND SAMUEL Q. BROUGHTON.

OBSTRUCTION TO PUBLIC ROAD.—A private individual cannot maintain an action to prevent or abate a nuisance, caused by obstructing a public highway, unless he shows some special damage to him, in addition to that received by the public.

WHO MAY SUE FOR OBSTRUCTING PUBLIC ROAD.—The facts that the parties who bring an action to prevent or abate a nuisance, caused by obstructing a public road, own land fronting on the road, and have no other means of access to their lands except over and along the road, do not show such special damage to the plaintiffs, in addition to that sustained by the public, as enables them to maintain the action.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Santa Clara County.

The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants were about to obstruct a public road by building a fence across the same, and asked for a preliminary injunction, and that, on the trial the injunction be made perpetual. The defendants demurred to the complaint, and the Court overruled the demurrer. A preliminary injunction was granted, and, the defendants having answered, on the trial a perpetual injunction was decreed. The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Moore, Laine & Silent, for Appellants.

The Court erred in overruling the demurrer. The rule is universal that an injunction will not be granted to prevent a public nuisance, on the application of a private individual, unless the apprehended nuisance would be specially dangerous to the person making the application, or injurious to his property; and it must be an injury distinct from that which he suffers in common with the rest of the public. The injury must be peculiar to the plaintiff, and not common to him and many others. If it operates equally or in the same manner upon many individuals, constituting a particular class, though a very small portion, of the community, it is not a special damage to each, within the rule. (Thompson on Highways, 256; Hilliard on Torts, vol. 1, pp. 637, 638; Yolo County v. City of Sacramento, 36 Cal. 193; Proprietors of Quincy Canal v. Newcomb, 7 Metcalf, 283.)

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

Alexander Yoel, for Respondents.

Any inhabitant has the right to forbid the erection of an obstruction on public places. (New Orleans v. Garcia, Lou. Cd. Rpt. 253.) An individual who complains of an obstruction to a highway may maintain an action for it. (Angell on Corp. 191, Sec. 206; 2 La. Con. Rep. 66.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

I think the demurrer to the complaint ought to have been sustained, on the ground that it shows no special damage to the plaintiffs. The road is alleged to be a public highway, and the action is to prevent an obstruction. No doubt a private individual may sue to prevent or abate a public nuisance; but he must always show some special damage to him in addition to that received by the public. The rule is plain, and has always, so far as I know, been adhered to; the questions most usually raised are as to the character of injury which will be considered a special injury to private individuals. In this case the only allegations which can be claimed to show special damage are, that plaintiffs each own tracts of land adjoining the alleged road, and have no other means of access to their lands except over and along said road. No special injury to their property is averred, and although, from the facts stated, we may conclude that the inconvenience to them will be greater than to the general public, it results simply from the more frequent occasion they may have to travel the road, and is of the same nature as would occur to any other person who might have occasion to use it.

In the case of The Proprietors of Quincy Canal v. Newcomb, 7 Metc. 276, the defendant being sued for toll for the use of plaintiff's canal, set up that the canal had not been built according to the charter, and defendant was greatly damaged thereby, and could not have the same advantageous use of the canal which he might have had if it had been constructed as required by the Act of incorporation. Chief Justice SHAW says, in deciding the case, that even admitting the right to set up damages in mitigation, evidence to support this defense was properly refused; for, if he suffered damage from the failure to construct the canal as required, or from its filling up, it was damage in common with all the members of the community, and therefore redress must be sought in a public prosecution; that "where one suffers in common with all the public, although from his proximity to the obstructed way, or otherwise from his more frequent occasion to use it, he may suffer in a greater degree than others, still he cannot have an action, because it would cause such a multiplicity of suits as to be itself an intolerable evil." To the same effect is the case of Sully v. Bishop, 19 Conn. 128. O'Brien v. Norwich and Worcester R. R., 17 Conn. 372, was a case in which a private individual attempted to enjoin the defendant from constructing its railroad across an arm of the sea, which is alleged to have been navigable and to have been used by the plaintiff and others, at their pleasure, for the purpose of passing up and down the cove connected by it with the River Thames, a navigable river; that by means of the road so constructed the navigation of the cove would be greatly obstructed and rendered almost wholly useless. The relief was denied, on the ground that the injury was the same that might occur to any one having occasion to pass up and down the cove. He showed no damage which was special to himself. (See, also, Hilliard on Torts, 686.)

These authorities are directly in point, and none have been cited to a contrary effect, although there are some where a very slight damage peculiar to the plaintiff has been held sufficient to enable him to maintain the action.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
ANDREW JOHNSON AND GUNRALL OMEUS.

CONFESSION AS EVIDENCE.—The confession of a party, made to a Sheriff arresting him for grand larceny, after being told by the officer that it was useless to deny taking the property, that there was evidence to convict him, and that it would go lighter with him to confess, is not a voluntary confession, and cannot be properly given in evidence.

IDEM.—If such a confession be, in substance, repeated before an examining magistrate a few days after the arrest, and reduced to the form of a written statement, the statement is inadmissible as evidence, by reason of its having been originally made under such inducements as to exclude the first confession.

IDEM — PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW.—The law presumes the subsequent confession to have been made and influenced by the same hopes and fears as the first, and this presumption continues until it be affirmatively established by the prosecution that the influences under which the original confession was made had ceased to operate before the subsequent confession was made.

APPEAL from the County Court of the County of Contra Costa.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

James Voorhees, for the Appellants, argued that the statement made before the magistrate was inadmissible as evidence, because made under inducements held out to the defendants by the Sheriff immediately before their examination. (1 Greenl. Ev., Secs. 219, 222, 225; People v. Ah How, 34 Cal. 218; 1 Wharton Cr. Law, Sec. 698; The State v. Phelps, 11 Vermont, 116; Hector v. The State, 2 Wis. 165; 2 Hawk. 595.)

Attorney General Jo Hamilton argued that there was no evidence that the statement was obtained by undue influence.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The defendants being on trial for grand larceny, the prosecution called as a witness the Justice of the Peace before whom the prisoners had had a preliminary examination upon the charge, and by whom they had been committed to answer before indictment. The witness having stated that the prisoners were brought before him, as a magistrate, for preliminary examination, "acknowledged that they took the property charged to have been taken," and made a statement, which he reduced to writing, and which they each signed, after it had been carefully read over to them, that "no inducements were held out to said defendants, then or at any time, to his knowledge, to get the confession of defendants, or to induce them to make a statement." The prosecution offered and proposed to read in evidence against the prisoners their statement so taken and reduced to writing by the examining magistrate, to which their counsel objected, until he should have an opportunity to show by other evidence that such statement was made under such influences as to render the same inadmissible as confessions. The Court overruled the objection, and the statement was read in evidence after the Court had further ruled that the defendants might thereafter introduce any testimony they might have touching the matter of inducements held out to them to make such statement. After the testimony for the prosecution was closed, defendants called Warren Brown, who testified that he was the Sheriff of Contra Costa County, and received the prisoners about six months ago from the Deputy Sheriff, and locked them up; that he had a conversation with them before their examination; Deputy Sheriff Cameron was with them when they made the statement; I did not caution them; there appeared to be three other parties; they did not deny that they took the grain; I told them it was no use to deny the charge; I might have told them it would be better to admit it; this was a few days before their examination; there was a day intervening; I think I told them there was no use fooling about it; they may as well confess, as there was evidence enough to convict them; I think I told them that if they would come in and confess that it would be lighter with them; I made the proposition before they told me about the grain.

This evidence conclusively shows that inducements were held out to defendants by the Sheriff having them in custody, two days before their preliminary examination, to confess. They were told by the Sheriff that it was no use for them to deny taking the property; that there was evidence enough to convict them; that it would go lighter with them to confess. And the evidence of the Sheriff sufficiently shows that, after he had thus threatened and advised the prisoners, they did confess to him; but the purport of such confession does not appear, further than they told him about the grain, and did not deny taking it.

It is very clear that any statements or confessions they may have then made to the Sheriff were not voluntary, and could not properly have been given in evidence against them on the trial. And is equally clear that if their confession or statement, made before the examining magistrate two days thereafter, was a repetition of the statement made to the Sheriff, or any material portion of such previous statement, the entire statement or confession made to and before the examining magistrate should have been excluded as evidence, by reason of the same having been originally made under such inducements held out to them as to exclude the first confession. The law presumes the subsequent confessions to have been made and influenced by the same hopes and fears as the first, and this presumption continues until it be affirmatively established by the prosecution that the influences under which the original confession was made had ceased to operate before the subsequent confession was made. (State v. Roberts, 1 Dev. 259; Peter v. State, 4 Sm. & Marsh. 3; State v. Gould, 5 Halstead, 163 Deathridge v. State, 1 Sneed, 75; 2 Russ. on Cr. 834; 1 Wharton Am. Cr. Law, Sec. 694.)

I am, therefore, of opinion that the statement of the prisoners, made before the examining magistrate, under the circumstances disclosed in this case, was erroneously admitted in evidence on the trial, and that the judgment should, on this ground, be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial. So ordered.

Mr. Justice WALLACE dissented.

A. KOHLER v. T. R. HAYES.

SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—If the owner of a piano deliver the same to another person, under an agreement in writing, stating its value, and that such person agrees to pay a specified sum monthly for the use of it, and that it is to be sold for a price therein mentioned, and that a specified sum is to be paid each month until the agreed price is paid, when a bill of sale will be given, the agreement does not constitute an absolute sale of the piano.

Argument for Respondent.

IDEM.—Under such agreement the title does not pass, and the party receiving the piano cannot sell the same until the purchase price is paid.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff delivered the piano to Dowling on the 18th day of April, 1866. Dowling used the piano in his family; and on the 28th of July, 1866, and after he had paid the one hundred dollars, sold the same to Main & Winchester, of which firm the defendant was a member. The firm made the purchase in good faith, and had no notice of the terms of the agreement under which the piano was delivered to Dowling. As soon as Kohler knew of the sale to Main & Winchester, and in August, 1866, he demanded the piano from them, and, on their refusal to deliver it, he brought this action to recover possession of the same.

The Court below rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Whiting & Naphtaly, for Appellant.

Dowling was not dealing in pianos, and was not intrusted with it for sale; and he could not transfer to a bona fide purchaser a title which he had not acquired. (Wright v. Solomon, 19 Cal. 64; Putnam v. Lamphier, 36 Cal. 151; Coghill et al. v. Hartford & New Haven R. R. Co., 3 Gray, 545; Piser v. Stearns & Marvin, 1 Hilton, 86; Andrews v. Dietrich, 14 Wend. 32; and Salters v. Everett, 20 Wend. 373.)

A. J. Gunnison, for Respondent.

The instrument, taken as a whole, shows that Kohler sold absolutely the piano to Dowling for the sum of four hundred and eighty-five dollars, to be paid in installments of forty dollars per month. (Miller v. Stein, 30 Cal. 406; Helm v. Dumars, 3 Cal. 454.)

Purchasers without notice are not bound by the conditions of sale between vendor and vendee. (Chapman v. Lathrop, 6 Cowen, 114, note a; Mowry v. Walsh, 8 Cowen, 238; McCarty v. Vickey, 12 John. 348; Hussy v. Thornton, 4 Mass. 405; Carleton v. Sumner, 4 Pick. 516; and Smith v. Dennis, 6 Pick. 262.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

It appears, from the agreed statement of facts, that the plaintiff delivered to Dowling a piano under the following agreement:

"Received from Andrew Kohler, on rent, a certain piano-forte, which I agree to return in good order, and to be responsible for the value thereof, the same being of the value of five hundred dollars; and for the use of which I agree to pay said Andrew Kohler, or to his order, the monthly rent of thirty-five dollars or forty dollars, strictly in advance * * * This piano and stool to be sold for four hundred and eighty-five dollars, on the following terms: Forty dollars to be paid each month till the above sum is paid, when a bill of sale will be given; interest at one per cent per month, to be paid on the amount unpaid after ninety days.

"RICHARD DOWLING."

It also appears that "Dowling never paid the plaintiff upon or under said agreement, or in any way, any money, except the sum of one hundred dollars, which sum of one hundred dollars said plaintiff received thereon." But it does not appear whether that sum was paid as rent, or as a part of the purchase money. The question for solution is whether that instrument is evidence of an absolute sale of the piano. If the agreement fell short of an absolute sale, Dowling had not the capacity to transfer the title to the piano. The first portion of the written instrument, if it amounts to anything, shows that the parties intended to make a lease. The term is not stated, nor is the rent specified with certainty. It is unnecessary, however, to determine whether, for those reasons, it is void as a lease; for, whether void or valid, it does not constitute a sale, nor does it contribute to that purpose. The remaining portion of the instrument specifies the price and terms of sale; but it recites neither that the plaintiff had sold, nor that Dowling had purchased, the piano. It is either a specification of the terms of the sale, should Dowling elect to purchase, or, at most, a conditional sale. The provision for the giving of a bill of sale, upon the payment of the price of the piano, indicated that it was not the intention of the parties that the title should pass upon the making of the agreement.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

tion, or ignorantly, and mainly from the hope that the punishment to which the accused would otherwise be exposed may thereby be mitigated, the Court should be indulgent in permitting the plea to be withdrawn. JUDICIAL DISCRETION.—In such cases the Court must necessarily exercise a sound discretion, and such discretion will not be interfered with, except when abused.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, County of Tulare.

The defendant was indicted for murder at the January term of the Court, 1871, and a motion for a continuance until the first day of the succeeding May term, on account of the absence of material witnesses, was granted. A few days subsequently, at the same term, on motion of the District Attorney, the Court vacated the order of continuance, and set the case for trial on the twentieth of February following, the defendant excepting. When the case came on for trial, the defendant moved for a continuance until the May term, upon an affidavit as to the absence of witnesses by which he expected to show that he committed the homicide in self-defense. The Court overruled the motion, and set the case for trial on the twenty-third of February. On that day, the defendant's witnesses being still absent, his attorneys obtained leave to withdraw his plea of not guilty, and entered a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree. Before entering this plea, the Court, turning to the side of the room where the defendant and his attorneys were seated, asked if the defendant consented to it. The attorneys for the defendant replied that he did. The defendant himself, however, said nothing, but inclined his head in a manner indicating his consent. The Court set the twenty-fifth of February for pronouncing judgment. When that day arrived the defendant asked leave to withdraw the plea of guilty. The Court refused the request, and proceeded to sentence him to fifteen years imprisonment in the penitentiary. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

Coffroth & Spaulding and A. J. Atwell, for Appellant.

The motion for a continuance for the term should have been granted, because the witnesses were shown upon affidavit to be material. There was no laches in the effort to procure their attendance, and it was probable that the witnesses could be had at the time to which the trial was sought to be deferred. (1 Bl. Rep. 510; 3 Burroughs, 1,513; 2 Tidd, 208; 2 Chit. Cr. Law, 492.) When these ingredients are incorporated in an affidavit, it is the duty of the Court to continue the cause. (People v. Dodge, 28 Cal. 445; People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cowen, 383; Foy v. The State, 9 Geo. 373; Gross v. The State, 5 Ind. 533.) A plea of guilty can in no place be put in, except by the defendant himself, in open Court. (Cr. Pr. Act, Sec. 301; People v. Thompson, 4 Cal. 241; Douglass v. The State, 3 Wis. 820; McQuillen v. The State, 8 S. & M. 587; 1 Wharton Cr. Law, Sec. 530, and authorities quoted; Ch. Cr. Law, 416, 436, 472.) The Court should have permitted the defendant to withdraw his counsel's plea of guilty before judgment was rendered. The statute says the privilege may be granted, and we are inclined to think the word "may" should be construed to be "shall." (Cr. Pr. Act, Sec. 302.)

Attorney General Hamilton, for Respondent.

Defendant's motion for a continuance until the next term was made on the twentieth of February, and a continuance was ordered until the twenty-third of February. When the latter day arrived, the defendant did not ask a further continuance, but entered a plea of guilty. The Court, therefore, did not err in not granting that which was not asked for. The defendant, being present in Court, with full knowledge of the proceedings, and indicating his assent to the action of his attorneys, must be considered to have consented to the plea of guilty. The Court, having permitted the defendant to change his plea once, did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow another change.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The Court erred in denying the motion made by the defendant on the 20th February, 1871, to continue the cause for the term. There was a sufficient showing as to the materiality of the absent witnesses, and there was apparently no lack of diligence in the effort to procure their attendance. The Attorney General has failed to point out any particular wherein the affidavit was defective, and I discover none. I think the showing was sufficient, and the motion should have been granted; particularly, as this was the first application for a continuance. Nor can it be said that this error of the Court worked no injury to the defendant, inasmuch as he, thereupon, withdrew his plea of "not guilty" and entered a plea of "guilty of murder in the second degree." It may be, that finding himself forced into a trial in the absence of his witnesses, he deemed it politic to confess himself guilty of the lesser offense rather than incur the hazard of a conviction for the greater in the absence of his witnesses.

But I think the Court also erred in permitting the plea of "guilty of murder in the second degree" to be entered, and in refusing to allow it to be afterwards withdrawn, on the facts disclosed in this record. A plea confessing himself to be guilty of crime should not be entered except with the express consent of the defendant, given by him personally, in direct terms, in open Court. Nothing should be left to implication, and his confession of guilt should be explicitly made by himself in person in the presence of the Court. Assuming, however, that it sufficiently appears from the record in this case that the plea was entered with the consent of the defendant, given in open Court, he should have been permitted, under all the circumstances, to withdraw it when he applied for leave to do so. There is nothing to show that the application was not made in good faith, or that the entry of the plea and motion to withdraw it was a mere artifice, intended for delay. A party should not be allowed to trifle with the Court by deliberately entering a plea of "guilty" one day and capriciously withdrawing it the next. But when there is reason to believe that the plea has been entered through inadvertence, and without due deliberation, or ignorantly, and mainly from the hope that the punishment, to which the accused would otherwise be exposed, may thereby be mitigated, the Court should be indulgent in permitting the plea to be withdrawn. It must necessarily exercise a sound discretion in such matters; and this Court will not interfere except in a case of abuse of discretion. But, inasmuch as the Court had improperly denied the defendant's motion for a continuance and forced him to trial in the absence of his witnesses, and particularly as it is not altogether clear that the defendant consented to the entry of the plea of "guilty of murder in the second degree," he should have been allowed to withdraw it, and in denying his motion for leave to do so the Court abused its discretion.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial, with leave to the defendant to withdraw his plea of "guilty of murder in the second degree."

Mr. Justice WALLACE did not express an opinion.

THOMAS J. CRANMER v. JAMES PORTER AND MARY A. PORTER, HIS WIFE.

DESTRUCTION OR CANCELLATION OF DEED.—The destruction or cancellation of a deed, after it has been delivered, does not revert the title in the grantor, even if destroyed or canceled with the consent of all the parties for the express purpose of restoring the title to the grantor. The title cannot be restored to the grantor otherwise than by a reconveyance in writing.

Statement of Facts.

DEFENSE IN EJECTMENT.—If the plaintiff in ejectment relies on a paper title, the defendant may show the true title to be outstanding in a third person, without connecting himself with it.

NEW TRIAL ON NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.—If the plaintiff in ejectment relies on a paper title, and recovers judgment, and after the trial the defendant discovers that prior to the commencement of the action the plaintiff had conveyed the title to a third person, a new trial should be granted.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff, on the trial, introduced a deed of the demanded premises from the defendants to Elizabeth Osborn, their sister, dated December 15th, 1863, giving, granting, and conveying the premises to said Elizabeth, in consideration of love and affection. The habendum clause of the deed was as follows:

“To have and to hold all and singular the above mentioned and described premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said Elizabeth Osborn, during the term of her natural life as aforesaid, for her own personal, separate, and independent use and behoof; and at her decease the said premises are to revert back to the said Mary A. Porter, who was the lawful and separate owner thereof at the time of the writing of these presents, or to her heirs or assigns.”

The plaintiff then introduced a deed of the premises from said Elizabeth to himself, dated November 18th, 1867.

The plaintiff was sworn as a witness on his own behalf, and, on cross examination, testified as follows:

“In the latter part of January, 1868 (January 27th), I sold the premises in controversy to Mrs. Julia Scheo for five hundred and fifty dollars, made and acknowledged a conveyance to her; did not deliver it to her; received no money. A man by the name of Mackin or MacMackin negotiated the sale for me. I never received Mrs. Scheo's promissory note for five hundred dollars, as part of the purchase money.

Argument for Appellants.

Both deed and note remained in my said agent's hands, Mackin, with instructions not to exchange them unless the money was paid. He afterward gave me back the deed, and I destroyed it. I do not know Mackin's Christian name or where he lives. Did not deliver the possession of the premises to Mrs. Scheo."

The defendants contended on the trial that the deed to said Elizabeth only had the effect of giving her the use of the premises during her life, for a home, and that she had no interest which she could convey. The case was tried December 2d, 1868. The defendants, on motion for new trial, presented the affidavits of defendant Mary A. Porter, L. Mackin, and others, showing that the plaintiff made and delivered a deed of the premises to Julia Scheo and received a part of the purchase money and her promissory note for the balance, to wit: five hundred dollars, and that Mackin did not act as the plaintiff's agent in making the sale, and that the deed was dated January 27th, 1868. This action was commenced March 11th, 1868. The affidavit of Mackin stated that about the 1st of March, 1868, the plaintiff requested him to ascertain if Mrs. Scheo had put her deed on record, and if she had not, to induce her to give up the deed to plaintiff, and he would give up her note, and that Mackin declined. The affidavit of Catherine Turner showed that she accomplished for plaintiff what he had requested Mackin to do. The affidavit of Mrs. Scheo was not obtained, but it was shown that she was dangerously ill. The Court below denied a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Wm. P. Daingerfield and Warren Olney, for Appellants.

It is an elementary doctrine, that the surrender of a deed and its destruction, do not revest the title in the grantor. In ejectment, the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and if he has none, of course he cannot recover. It is not necessary for the defendant to connect himself with an outstanding title, to defeat the plaintiff's recovery. (Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 6; Moore v. Tice, 22 Cal. 513; Dyson v. Bradshaw, 23 Cal. 528; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 165; Simson v. Eckstein, 22 Cal. 580.)

Henry J. Howe, for Respondent.

The defendants having called out, on cross-examination of Cranmer, the new matter, are bound by it. The newly discovered evidence could not be introduced on a new trial. (Carleton v. Townsend, 28 Cal. 219.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action is ejectment, and at the trial the plaintiff relied upon a paper title, which was put in evidence. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendant moved for a new trial, partly on the ground of newly discovered evidence, to the effect that prior to the commencement of the action the plaintiff had sold, and by deed in due form, properly acknowledged, certified, and delivered, had conveyed the premises in controversy to another person, and at the time of the conveyance had received a portion of the purchase money, and had taken the promissory note of the purchaser for the remainder; that the purchaser retained the deed for about one month, when it was verbally agreed to cancel the contract of sale; and thereupon the plaintiff surrendered the promissory note, and the purchaser returned the deed to the plaintiff to be canceled; but no reconveyance was made by the purchaser. These facts are fully and satisfactorily established by affidavit, read in support of the motion, and clearly show that the legal title to the premises was not in the plaintiff at the commencement of the action.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

By his deed he had divested himself of whatever title or right of possession he previously had; and it is a familiar rule of law that the destruction or cancellation of a deed, after delivery, even though it be done with the consent of all the parties to it, and for the express purpose of restoring the title to the grantor, cannot work that result. The title had vested in the grantee, and could not be divested by a parol agreement, nor otherwise than by a reconveyance in writing. If the facts stated in the affidavits be true, the plaintiff, at the commencement of the action, had not either the legal title or the right of possession, and therefore could not maintain ejectment, even as against an intruder, without title. It is equally clear that when a plaintiff in ejectment relies upon a paper title the defendant may show the true title to be outstanding in a third person without connecting himself with it. It will be a sufficient defense, in such a case, that the title is not in the plaintiff. This rule of law is too familiar to require the citation of authorities. The newly discovered evidence was, therefore, material and competent, and I think the affidavits disclose sufficient diligence on the part of the defendants to bring them within the rule on that subject. The motion for a new trial ought to have been granted on this ground. We deem it unnecessary, on this appeal, to express any opinion as to the proper construction of the deed from the defendant to Mrs. Osborn, or whether the Court ought to have reformed it on the proofs and pleadings in the case.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

MANUEL LORENZANA, AND JOSEFA G. LORENZANA, HIS WIFE, v. JUAN CAMARILLO.

GRANTING NEW TRIAL.—The granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict of the jury was against the admissions of the defendant, who was called as a witness, is a decision of the Court that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict.

REVERSING ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL.—If the Court below grants a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, the Appellate Court will not reverse the order, except in case of an evident abuse of discretion.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, Santa Barbara County.

This was an action to be allowed to redeem about four hundred and sixty-seven acres of land, the separate property of Josefa G. de Lorenzana, one of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs had made a loan of money from the defendant, and, to secure the same, had given him a mortgage on the land. When the mortgage fell due it was canceled, and the plaintiffs executed to the defendant a deed of the land. It was alleged that the deed was intended as a mortgage to secure the old debt.

The question was submitted to the jury in this form: "Was the deed intended between the parties to be a mortgage, or an absolute conveyance?" The verdict of the jury was: "We, the jury, find the deed between the parties to be an absolute deed." The verdict, it will be observed, does not answer the question put to the jury, so far as the intention of the parties was concerned.

The defendant appealed from the order granting a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Haymond & Stratton, and A. Packard, for Appellant, argued, that the Judge had not disturbed the verdict because it was against the weight of evidence, but because the verdict was not responsive to the issues submitted, in this: that it had not found what was the intention of the parties to the deed; and that as the Court below had in effect held that the testimony justified the verdict, but had granted a new trial upon grounds not assigned in the statement, the order should be reversed.

Pringle & Pringle, and Fernald & Richards, for Respondents.

One of the grounds on which a new trial was granted was the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. The only inaccuracy of the Court below, if indeed it be an inaccuracy, is that instead of stating broadly the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, it specifies the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The question at issue in this cause was whether a deed made by the plaintiffs to the defendant was intended as a mortgage, or as an absolute conveyance in fee. At the trial the Court submitted this question to a jury. The verdict was: "We, the jury, find the deed between the parties to be an absolute deed." The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, assigning as one of the grounds therefor that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict, and specifying in the statement the particulars wherein it was insufficient. On the hearing of the motion the Court granted a new trial, assigning as one of the reasons therefor that the verdict is defective and not responsive to the issue, "and against the admissions of the defendant, who was called as a witness."

It is too plain to admit of debate that the motion was granted partly on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. In holding that the verdict was

Statement of Facts.

“against the admissions of the defendant, who was called as a witness,” the Court clearly intended to say that these admissions furnished strong, if not conclusive evidence, that the verdict was erroneous; or in other words, that it was not justified by the evidence; and in this opinion we fully agree with the Court below. But if we did not, we would not disturb the order of the Court granting a new trial on this ground, except in the case of an evident abuse by the Court of its discretion.

Order granting a new trial affirmed.

FRANCISCO VILLA v. FRANCISCO PICO AND FRANCISCA PICO.

NOTICE TO SHERIFF AS TO SALE OF HOMESTEAD.—A notice to a Sheriff, before he makes a sale, that the premises he is about to sell are the homestead of the party giving such notice, does not render the sale void. Such notice does not create a homestead, nor is it evidence of the existence of a homestead.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, County of Santa Barbara.

Ejectment to recover a lot in Santa Barbara, described in the complaint as a “piece or parcel of land situated in the Town and County of Santa Barbara, California, commencing on the westerly line of Carrillo street, at the northeasterly corner of the lot of Rafael Valdez; thence running northeasterly on the line of Carrillo street one hundred and twenty feet; thence at right angles northwesterly one hundred and twenty feet; thence southwesterly parallel to Carrillo street one hundred and twenty feet; thence one hundred and twenty feet to the place of beginning.”

The plaintiff, to show title to the demanded premises,

Statement of Facts.

offered in evidence the record of a grant made by the Ayuntamiento of the Pueblo of Santa Barbara August 9th, 1849, of which the following is a translation:

"By a resolution of the Ayuntamiento, there was granted to Candelaria Canizares a lot of land forty yards square, adjoining the house of Manuel Cota. The Recorder gave her possession of it, and received the customary price for it."

The plaintiff also introduced a judgment in said Court in favor of the plaintiff and against Francisco Pico, and an execution issued on the judgment, and a sale thereunder of the premises and a deed of the Sheriff to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff also offered in evidence a deed from Candelaria to herself, dated June 17th, 1864, of a lot of land described as follows:

"All the right, title, and interest of the party of the first part in all that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the Town and County of Santa Barbara, State of California, bounded in front by Carrillo street; on the north by the land of Francisco Espinosa and others; on the west by open land of the Town of Santa Barbara, and on the south by the land of Rafael Valdez, being the same lot of land whereon is erected a dwelling house occupied by Francisco Pico, and the same lot of land which was granted to the party of the first part by the Ayuntamiento of Santa Barbara County, and the same piece or parcel of land which was regranted to the party of the first part, by deed from the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Santa Barbara, dated February 16th, 1858, and recorded in the office of the Recorder of Santa Barbara County, in Book "B" of Deeds, on pages seven hundred and sixty-seven and seven hundred and sixty-eight, to which record reference is hereby made for a fuller description of boundaries."

The defendant, Francisco Pico, then introduced in evidence a notice served by him on the Sheriff, before the sale, that he claimed the property as a homestead. The Court rendered judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

Charles E. Huse, for Appellant.

The Court erred in holding that it had no other guide for the location of the grant except its contents. The Sheriff's deed alone is sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover. It nowhere appears that Pico was the head of a family or was entitled to a homestead. Nor does it appear, nor was it pretended, that Pico had ever recorded a homestead claim.

A. Packard and Haymond & Stratton, for Respondent.

The grant of the Ayuntamiento to Candelaria Canizares for a lot of land adjoining the house of Manuel Cota does not show that the lot granted was the one in dispute, and there is no proof that it was the same lot. The deed of the Sheriff to Villa was "rendered a nullity by the notification of defendant Francisco Pico's claim of the premises as a homestead." It is admitted by respondent that Pico occupied the lot. "Occupancy by the family is presumptive evidence of the appropriation of a place as a homestead." (Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 268.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

A short time previous to the Sheriff's sale of the premises in controversy, under the execution issued upon the judgment in favor of Villa, and against Pico, a notice was served on the Sheriff by Pico, stating that he claimed the premises as his homestead. The Court below regarded that notice as having the effect to render the sale void. The notice alone could not have the effect which was attributed to it. Unless the premises were in fact his homestead, the notice or claim that they constituted his homestead was utterly nugatory. There is no evidence in this case, showing that the premises were his homestead, at the time of the Sheriff's sale.

For the guidance of the parties on the new trial, it is proper to say that the plaintiff failed to show title to the premises in controversy, derived from Candelaria Canizares, because he did not show that the grant made in 1849, or the deed of the Mayor and Common Council, executed in 1858, included the premises in controversy.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not express an opinion.

EDWIN P. CLARKE v. GEORGE K. FITCH AND J. W. SIMONTON.

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES — NEW TRIAL.—The appellate Court will not review the judgment, as to whether the damages are excessive, unless a motion is made in the Court below for a new trial, and an appeal is taken from an order denying the same.

WORDS NOT LIBELOUS OF THEMSELVES.—The words "Clarke is a carpenter by trade, is interested in the Moore title, and has figured quite prominently in some of the squatter riots which have occurred in the Western Addition," are not libelous of themselves, as usually understood and received in this State.

A COLLOQUIUM IN COMPLAINT FOR LIBEL.—If it is intended to charge in a complaint that such words were used in an offensive sense, such as engaging in a riot to unlawfully invade the possessions of another, and were so understood by those who read them, there must be a colloquium in the complaint to show in what sense the words were libelous.

COLLOQUIUM AND INNUENDO.—A colloquium in a complaint for a libel cannot be supplied by an innuendo. The colloquium states the extrinsic facts to show the libelous meaning of the words, and the innuendo applies the words to these facts.

POPULAR SENSE IN WHICH WORDS ARE USED.—Whether a publication is libelous per se is to be determined wholly by the sense in which the same is usually understood and received in this State; and when words have a general and notorious signification in this State, Courts will take judicial notice of it.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The defendants were the publishers of a daily paper in San Francisco called the Evening Bulletin. One Moses Frank was indicted for forgery, and on the trial the plaintiff was a juror. The jury failed to agree, and the said paper published articles concerning the jury, of which the words quoted in the opinion formed a part.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Pixley & Smith, for Appellants.

There are two objections to this charge, but leaving the first to be discussed hereafter, we shall at present show: that the words, "Clarke is a carpenter," etc., will admit of an inoffensive interpretation, are not of themselves libelous, and that the Court erred in charging them so to be. Judge CAMPBELL, of the Superior Court, lays down the rule of libel (Bennett v. Williamson, 4 Sand. 66), in the absence of special damages claimed and proved, thus: "Then does the publication in question charge the plaintiff with any offense which renders him amenable to punishment? or does it necessarily tend to hold him up to ridicule, hatred, contempt, or infamy? In Stone v. Cooper, 2 Denio, 293, Chancellor WALWORTH defines a libel per se, to be the charge of an offense "that the Court can legally presume he has been degraded by, in the estimation of his acquaintances or the public." Holt, in his Law of Libel, page 223, says: "Everything written of another, which holds him up to scorn and ridicule, that might reasonably be considered as provoking him to a breach of the peace, is a libel." And, again: "All such written abuse as may fairly be intended to impair him in the enjoyment of society, or throw a contempt upon him, which might affect his general fortune and comfort, is a positive injury, and, therefore, the subject of an action on the case."

To publish of Clarke that he "is interested in the Moore title," was to give him financial credit. But assuming the "Moore title" to be a fraud, then it is necessary that the publication should have also charged Clarke with a knowledge of that fraud. The words, "that thief A. hath stolen my goods and delivered them to Bacon," held not to give any right of action to Bacon, it not being alleged that he knew the goods were stolen. (Bacon's Case, Dal. 41, pl. 21.) "You have passed counterfeit money," non-actionable for the same reason. (Pike v. Van Wormer, 6 How. P. R. 171; Church v. Bridgman, 6 Miss. 190.) So of the words, "he received goods that were stolen and will be hanged for them." Ratcliff v. Long, Palm. 67; Miller v. Miller, 8 Johns. 74; Lampkins v. Justice, 1 Smith, Ind. 322; Griggs v. Vickroy, 12 Ind. 549.)

To publish of E. P. Clarke that he "has figured quite prominently in some of the squatter riots, which have occurred in the Western Addition," is certainly an inoffensive, if not creditable announcement. He may have been a policeman. He may have "figured" in those riots as a conservator of the peace. He may have been a Sheriff's officer. He may have "figured" there in support of judicial mandates and writs; or, as a good citizen, he may have sought to sustain municipal authority. He may have been enlisted as one of the posse comitatus. The expression is ambiguous, but not offensive, and the Court must have understood something not expressed in its direct words, upon which to base his interpretation of its libelous character. We have a right to claim that where the meaning of the words used is doubtful, they are not necessarily to be subjected to the most objectionable interpretation. "Libelous words are to be construed according to their most obvious meaning." (Hogg v. Wilson, 1 N. & M. 216; Hawkinson v. Bilby, 18 M. & W. 442; Dorland v. Patterson, 23 Wend. 424.) If one man says of another, "he once killed a man," is that per se a charge of murder. Lord Ellenborough (in Rex v. Lambert, 2 Camp. N. P. Cases, 298) said: "Words are not to be taken in the more lenient, or the more severe sense, but in the sense which fairly belong to them, and which they were intended to convey." But putting the very worst interpretation upon the sentence, of what offense does it accuse Clarke? Of being a squatter and concerned in fights and affrays in the Western Addition, for, or in defense of, the possession of certain lands, perhaps his "interest in the Moore title" (as the phrases are so intimately associated).. "The office of the innuendo is to direct to its object the charge made. It can neither enlarge nor restrain the natural sense and meaning. When the application is explained the innuendo cannot aid them." (Tappan v. Wilson, 7 Ham. 193.)

Elisha Cook and William H. Patterson, for Respondent.

The counsel has very ingeniously dissected the language made use of in the publication of those words, and thus attempted to prove that the same was not actionable. It is libelous of itself. One who indulges in such writing is not entitled to exercise of ingenious specifications to see if some sense cannot be discovered which would screen him from legal animadversion; but (2 Denio, 305) for the purpose of determining this question, it is necessary and proper to consider the whole a context, including everything said in the article. We submit, therefore, that such words were construed by the Court, according to their most obvious meaning. (Hogg v. Wilson, 1 N. & M. 216; Hawkins v. Bilby, 16 M. & W. 442; Dorland v. Patterson, 23 Wend. 424.)

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action is for libel; and the jury returned a general verdict for the plaintiff for six thousand dollars. There was no motion for a new trial; and the appeal by the defendants is from the judgment.

So much of the evidence as is necessary to explain the exceptions taken to the rulings of the Court, in the progress of the trial, is brought up by a statement on appeal.

In the absence of a motion for a new trial, the question whether the damages are excessive does not arise on this appeal. If the defendants intended to assail the verdict on this ground, they should have moved for a new trial, assigning this as one of the reasons why it should be granted, and should have supported the motion by a proper statement. Having failed to do this, they have waived all objection to the verdict on this ground.

One of the alleged libels contains a sentence in these words, to wit: "Clarke is a carpenter by trade, is interested in the Moore title, and has figured quite prominently in some of the squatter riots, which have occurred in the Western Addition."

The Court charged the jury that this portion of the publication "is libelous in and of itself; and it is a comment by the writer uncalled for by anything which appears in the affidavit published in the same article; and the defendant has given no evidence whatever, even tending to establish its truth, or that they had reason to believe it was true. It must, therefore, be considered by you to have been maliciously published, provided you find that it refers to the plaintiff in this cause, it having been published as a fact within the defendant's own personal knowledge." This charge was excepted to by the defendants, and is assigned as error. It certainly is not libelous to publish of a person that he is a carpenter by trade; nor is it claimed to be so by the plaintiff. There is nothing in the record to explain what the "Moore title" is, or that these words were used, or understood in any peculiar sense. On their face, and without explanation, the words, "is interested in the Moore title," import nothing derogatory to the plaintiff's character, and are not libelous. But the plaintiff insists, with earnestness, that the remainder of the paragraph, which alleges that he has figured "quite prominently in some of the squatter riots, which have occurred in the Western Addition," is libelous per se, and imputes to the plaintiff the offense of having been "wrongfully and wantonly engaged in committing breaches of the peace and riots." This is to be tested wholly by the sense in which the words "squatter riots" are usually understood and received in this State. Whatever the phrase "squatter riot" may elsewhere mean, in its popular sense, it has a well understood meaning in this State, which is so general and notorious that we will take judicial notice of it. Indeed, after the very numerous cases which we have been called upon to adjudicate, arising out of what are termed "squatter riots," we could not well affect to be ignorant of the popular meaning of the phrase. It is one of the most deplorable facts connected with the occupation and settlement of this State by the emigrants who came in 1849, and afterwards, that, owing to the very large tracts in which lands were claimed and held in private ownership, and to the vague and uncertain boundaries by which they were defined, and the doubtful tenures under which they were often claimed, contests for the actual possession of land commenced at an early period, and have ever since continued; but latterly have been, fortunately, of less frequent occurrence, since titles have become better settled, and the boundaries of lands more accurately defined by official surveys. These struggles for the possession were often bitter and fierce, and but too frequently resulted in violence and bloodshed. In these fierce contests one side or the other was, of course, in the wrong, as both could not be right. Nevertheless, it frequently happened that both supposed, in good faith, they were in the right. For example, a claimant under a Mexican grant, asserting a title to many square leagues of land, of a very small portion of which he was in the actual possession, would insist that a particular body of land was within the grant; whilst a "settler," in search of a preëmption claim, may have believed, in perfect good faith, either that the grant was fraudulent or that the particular tract which he desired to preëempt was not within it. In this belief he would enter on the land, erect his cabin, and proceed to define his boundaries. On discovering this fact, the claimant under the grant, acting in the full belief that his grant was valid and included the land, would insist that the settler should vacate the premises. Angry words, followed by blows, would quickly succeed, and if each of the parties happened to be attended by several of his friends or sympathizers, this would be termed a "squatter riot." The "Western Addition" to the City of San Francisco is a large body of valuable lands at present included within the corporate limits. In 1852 the city filed a claim before the United States Land Commission for four square leagues of land, to which it claimed to be entitled as the successor of the former Pueblo of San Francisco or Yerba Buena. This claim was fiercely contested, both in and out of the Courts; but after many years of litigation was finally confirmed. In the meantime, however, a very large number of persons had settled upon these lands and defined their boundaries, generally by vague landmarks, often of the most transient and unsubstantial character. Ultimately it was deemed the better policy by the city authorities to donate these lands to the persons actually in possession of them at a given date. This policy was approved by the Legislature, and the Congress of the United States, by a special Act, finally released the fee to the city in trust for the actual occupants in the manner defined in the Act. As the city grew and extended its streets, these lands rapidly enhanced in value; and the "Western Addition" soon became one of the most important sections of the metropolis. It is apparent from this brief recital that in numerous instances there must have arisen grave contests as to the possession. The title depended upon the fact of possession at a particular period, and the evidence of possession was often as vague as the boundaries. However much to be deplored, it was, perhaps, unavoidable, whilst human nature is constituted as it is, that serious struggles would arise for the possession of these valuable lands; and the records of our Courts attest the frequency and fierceness of these contests. In many instances, doubtless, unscrupulous persons, without a color or shadow of right, have wantonly invaded the possessions of others, trusting to force to maintain a possession acquired by violence or fraud; and if resisted in their unlawful purpose, a scene of violence and perhaps bloodshed would ensue. In other cases a contest would arise between the claimants of adjoining tracts as to the proper location of the division line, and a quarrel would ensue, ending, probably, in blows. It is unnecessary, however, to enter into a further detail of the various circumstances under which these contests have arisen, all of which are classed under the general head of "squatter riots," as that term is usually understood and applied in this State. In some of these cases one of the parties is a wanton aggressor, without excuse or palliation; whilst the other is simply defending his property against an unwarrantable invasion. In other cases the conflict arises from an honest difference of opinion as to their respective rights; and this has led to angry words and, perhaps, blows. It is evident, therefore, that there are contests for the possession of land, in some of which one party is the aggressor wholly without excuse, whilst the other is justly defending his possession; and there are other cases in which both parties are acting in good faith, and have become involved in a quarrel and personal conflict arising wholly from an honest difference of opinion. We are not to be understood as in any degree justifying or excusing this latter mode of settling a disputed question of title or boundary. But if it were published of a person that he had "figured prominently" in a "squatter riot" of this description (and many such have occurred in the Western Addition), it would not be actionable. It would not be more libelous than to say of him that he had "figured prominently" in a street fight or any other personal conflict arising from a sudden heat of passion, without stating how the quarrel arose, or which party was in the wrong. The publication in the Bulletin does not state in what kind of "squatter riots" the plaintiff had "figured prominently," nor on which side he "figured;" whether as a lawless aggressor, wantonly invading the possession of another, or on the side of law and order in repelling an aggressor. If it was intended to charge that the words were used in the alleged libel in the offensive sense, and as importing a charge that the plaintiff had been engaged in a squatter riot, or in wantonly and unlawfully invading the possessions of others, and that the words were so understood by those who read them, there should have been a colloquium to explain the subject matter, and by proper averments to show in what sense the words were libelous, and that they were used and understood in that sense. (Wilson v. Fitch, decided at the present term.) But the want of a colloquium cannot be supplied by an innuendo. The extrinsic facts necessary to be stated in order to show the libelous meaning of the words, must be set forth in the colloquium, and when these facts are stated the office of the innuendo is to apply the words to these facts but the innuendo cannot supply the place of the colloquium. (Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 83; Brown v. Brown, 2 Shepley Me. R. 317; Harris v. Burley, 8 N. H. 256; Linville v. Earlywine, 4 Blackf. 169; Tappan v. Wilson, 7 Ohio R. 190.)

Points decided.

There being no colloquium in this case to explain in what kind of "squatter riots" nor on which side of them it was intended in the libel to charge the plaintiff with having "figured prominently," the Court erred in charging the jury that the words are libelous per se. Nor is there anything in the other portions of the alleged libel to show that these words were used in the injurious sense here claimed for them by the plaintiff. The more rational inference is that they were used to identify the plaintiff first, as a carpenter by trade; second, as being one of those interested in the Moore title; and, third, as the same Clark who had figured prominently in some of the squatter riots in the Western Addition.

I think the Court obviously erred in this portion of the charge.

chose in action, and is broken, if broken at all, as soon as made, and the mere fact that there was no proof till long after it was made, by which the breach of it could be established, might possibly prevent the statute of limitations from running — but this point not decided.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff alleged in his complaint, that in 1845 the Mexican nation granted to Juan Nepomoceno Padilla a tract of land in the Department of Upper California, in what is now the County of Sonoma, called in the grant the Rancho Roblar de la Miseria, and that the grant belonged to the class called inchoate or imperfect grants, in this, that judicial possession was not given, nor was the grant segregated from the national domain until January 18th, 1858, when the same was segregated from the public domain of the United States, and the extent thereof for the first time ascertained, by a survey thereof by the United States, after a confirmation of the grant made in 1856. That, on the 1st day of April, 1850, the defendants, claiming to own the said rancho, sold the same to Daniel Wright and others, whose names are given, and executed a deed, in which they covenanted that the rancho contained four square leagues of land. That Wright and the other grantees had sold and conveyed the land to the plaintiffs, who, by virtue of the conveyances, had succeeded to the covenant, and were entitled to enforce the same. That, when the rancho was segregated from the public domain by the United States, it was for the first time ascertained, and the fact was and is, that it did not contain four square leagues, but only sixteen thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven and forty-five one hundredths acres, thereby falling short of the amount covenanted eight hundred and sixty-four and fifty-seven one hundredths acres, and that the value of the land was fifteen dollars per acre. Judgment was asked for the breach. The suit was commenced September 16th, 1871. The Court below sustained the demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiffs declining to amend, final judgment was rendered for the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

John W. Dwinelle and James M. Seawell, for Appellants.

The grant was an inchoate and imperfect grant. The lands were not segregated from the public domain. It could not be determined, until they were so segregated, what the quantity of land was. Statutes of limitations do not begin to run until a party is in a condition to sue. But until a final survey had been made, the plaintiffs were in no condition to sue, because it was the final, confirmed survey which not only established but created the fact that the covenanted amount of land fell short. Until the final, confirmed survey, not only could the plaintiff not establish the fact that a deficiency existed, but no deficiency did in fact exist, for the deficiency was the creature of the survey. The plaintiffs must therefore have failed in their action if they had brought it before the final, confirmed survey was made.

Every contract must be interpreted in reference to the condition of the subject matter. The subject matter here was the quantity of land. This was to be determined by the final location under a confirmed survey. The controlling event was therefore a finally confirmed survey. Until this final survey existed, no right of action accrued, and the statute of limitations did not begin to run. (Angel on Limitations, Sec. 115 [Day's edition, 1869]; Johns v. Gilfillan, 8 Minn. 395.)

Wm. H. Patterson, for Respondents.

The covenant for quantity is strictly analogous to a covenant of seizin, and of good right to convey, and was broken, if at all, the moment it was delivered. The quantity was contained in the grant made by the Mexican nation, or it was not. If that quantity was lawfully granted under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the United States was bound to confirm, protect, and segregate it to the successors in interest (plaintiffs), unless they failed to present their claim to the Land Commission. (11 East. 641; Rawle, 52, 82; 13 Missouri, 527; Platt on Cov. 135, 305.) The covenant, after it was broken, did not run with the land, and was not transferred by a deed of the land. (Rawle on Cov. 349; Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 597; 1 Pike. 322.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

One of the grounds of demurrer to the complaint was that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and in support of this ground it is urged that the covenant sued upon was a personal covenant, and does not run with the land. This point is well taken. A covenant of seisin, or that the grantor has lawful right to convey, or that the land is free from incumbrances, is a personal covenant, and when broken is broken as soon as made. The right of action upon it is a mere chose in action, and does not run with the land. (Lawrence v. Montgomery, 37 Cal. 188.) A covenant that the tract conveyed, or that the grant under which it is held includes a specified quantity, stands on the same footing, and is broken as soon as made. It either did or did not contain the stipulated quantity, and the fact could not be changed by anything which subsequently transpired. The difficulty of ascertaining the fact does not touch the question of the nature of the covenant. If the deficiency could not be ascertained except by a final official survey under the decree of confirmation, that fact might possibly prevent the statute of limitations from running until the survey was made, though on this point I express no opinion. But the nature of the covenant remains the same and is not affected by the fact that there was no proof by which the breach of it could be established until the final survey was made. The breach existed as soon as the covenant was made; but the proof to establish it may not have been attainable until the final survey. The same difficulty might arise under a covenant of seizin, or against incumbrances, which, it is well settled, are personal covenants not running with the land. (Lawrence v. Montgomery, supra, and cases there cited.) For precisely the same reasons, the covenant in this case was a personal covenant, and the cause of action for a breach of it did not pass to the plaintiffs under the deeds to them from the original grantees.

Judgment affirmed.

[No. 2,270.]BERNARDINO SANCHEZ v. MICHAEL NEARY*ET ALA.

DEED FROM SUTTER TO SUTTER, JR.—The deed of the 14th day of October, 1848, from John A. Sutter to his son John A. Sutter, Jr., and recorded in Book "C" of deeds, in the office of the County Recorder of the County of Sacramento, includes the site of the City of Sacramento.

MOTION FOR NONSUET.—If the defendant in ejectment moves for a nonsuit, and intends to rely on the point, that a deed offered in evidence by the plaintiff, and which was admitted without objection, does not include the demanded premises, he should distinctly so state in his motion.

PRESUMPTION THAT A DEED CONTAINS DEMANDED PREMISES.—In ejectment to recover lot number five, in the square bounded by L and M and Fourth and Fifth streets, in the City of Sacramento, if the plaintiff offers in evidence a deed, conveying the south half of sixteen blocks, between Fourth and Eighth and M and I streets, in the City of Sacramento, excepting lots six and eight, between Fourth and Fifth streets and J and K streets, and lots five and eight, between Fourth and Fifth and K and L streets, and lot eight, between Fourth and Fifth and L and M streets, and lots seven and eight, between Fourth and Fifth and I and J streets—the lots conveyed being fifty-eight in number—there is enough on the face of the deed to raise the presumption that it includes the lot sued for, without other evidence.

Argument for Respondents.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

This was an action of ejectment. The Court below granted a nonsuit, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

A. P. Catlin, for Appellant.

The grounds of the motion for nonsuit were, that the plaintiff had failed to show that the demanded premises were included in any of his deeds, or in the grant, or patent. The objection is, in substance, that neither the grant, the patent, nor the deed of 1848 embraced the City of Sacramento. The objection is too general to raise a point against any particular defect in the descriptive portion of any particular one of the mesne conveyances. "The party must lay his finger upon the point of his objection." (Kiler v. Kimball, 10 Cal. 267; McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 429.)

"A party moving for a nonsuit should state in his motion precisely the grounds upon which he relies, so that the attention of the Court and the opposite counsel may be particularly directed to the supposed defects in the plaintiff's case." (People v. Banvard, 27 Cal. 470.)

But, assuming that the objection is specific enough, we hold that the deed is not affected by it, for the reason that other parts of the description upon the face of the deed show, not only that lot number five is in the south half of the block, but also that the block bounded by Fourth and Fifth and L and M streets is within the exterior bounds of the description, namely: within Fourth and Eighth and M and I streets.

Henry Starr, for Respondents.

The appellant goes upon the presumption, without evidence, that there are eight lots in a block, and the deed purports to convey the south half of each block; yet in the blocks between Fourth and Eighth streets and I and M streets, it purports to except seven lots, and to sell fifty-eight. If there are but eight lots in a block this could not be, for there would be but fifty-seven left after excepting seven lots. Therefore, if fifty-eight were sold, there must be more than eight lots in a block, there being only the south half of the blocks sold. There is no extrinsic evidence in the case to show that lot five sued for lies in the south half of the block between L and M and Fourth and Fifth streets, which block lies in above described property, but whether in the south half or north half, or the east or west half, or whether there are eight or ten, or twelve or twenty lots in a block, does not appear, or whether the lot is in the deed or not. .

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The Court below erred in granting a nonsuit in this case. The action is to recover a lot in Sacramento City, and the plaintiff deraigns his title through mesne conveyances from John A. Sutter, to whom the premises were granted by the Mexican Government, and to whom they have been confirmed and patented by the Government of the United States. That the deed of the 14th October, 1848, from Sutter to his son, includes the site of the City of Sacramento, was decided by this Court in Mayo v. Mazeaux, 38 Cal. 442, and we see no reason to question the correctness of that decision. If the defendants intended to rely, in their motion for a nonsuit, on the ground that the deed from Sutter, Jr., to Brannan does not include the locus in quo, they should have distinctly so stated at the time. The grounds of the motion, as shown by the transcript, were: First, that the plaintiff had failed to show the title to the demanded premises to be in himself; second, that he had failed to show that said premises are included in any of the deeds offered in evidence, or in the grant or patent to Sutter. The deed from Sutter, Jr., to Brannan, was admitted in evidence without having been objected to on the ground that it did not include the premises in controversy; and there is nothing in the record to show that the attention of the Court or counsel was called to the point now relied upon, to wit: that this particular deed does not include this particular lot. On the contrary, it is quite apparent, I think, that the point really made and decided was that the grant to Sutter, and his deed of the 14th October, 1848, to his son, did not include the site of Sacramento City, and, therefore, did not include the demanded premises. But, there is enough on the face of the deed itself to raise a presumption that it includes these premises which are described in the complaint as lot number five, in the square bounded by L and M and Fourth and Fifth streets, in the City of Sacramento. The deed from Sutter, Jr., to Brannan, conveys the south half of each of sixteen blocks between Fourth and Eighth and M and I streets, in the City of Sacramento, excepting lots six and eight, between Fourth and Fifth streets and J and K streets, and lots five and eight, between Fourth and Fifth and K and L streets, and lot eight, between Fourth and Fifth and L and M streets, and lots seven and eight, between Fourth and Fifth and I and J streets—the lots conveyed being fifty-eight in number. From these recitals, the presumption is that the south half of each of the blocks contained lots numbered five, six, seven, and eight, inasmuch as lots thus numbered are excepted from the conveyance, which purports to include only the south half of the blocks. The deed certainly furnishes some evidence that the lot in contest is situate in the south half of the block bounded by Fourth and Fifth and L and M streets, and is, therefore, included in the conveyance.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY v.
LLOYD TEVIS AND GEORGE H. KERR.

RIGHT OF WAY OF CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.—PRE-EMPTIONERS.—The right of way granted to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, over the public lands of the United States, for its road, became perfect upon the filing of the plat of the location of the railroad in the proper land office, as against preemptioners who had not perfected their preemption right by payment of the price of the land.

POWER OF CONGRESS OVER PRE-EMPTIONERS.—Congress has the power to grant a right of way for a railroad over public lands which are occupied by persons who have the right to preempt, but have not yet perfected that right by proving up and making payment for the land.

A PRE-EMPTIONER NOT A CLAIMANT OF PUBLIC LAND.—A claimant of public land, within the meaning of the third section of the Act of Congress granting a right of way over the public lands to the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, is one who has an interest in the land recognised by the laws of the United States. One who is a pre-emptioner, but has not paid for the land, is not such claimant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

On the 1st day of July, 1862, Congress passed an Act granting to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California the right of way over the public lands of the United States for their respective roads. On the 1st day of October, 1864, the said Central Pacific Company assigned this right, from Sacramento to San Francisco, to the Western Pacific Railroad Company. On the 3d day of March, 1865, Congress ratified this assignment. The respondent Kerr was living on the northwest quarter of section six, township number six north, of range number six east, Mount Diablo base and meridian. When the Western Pacific Company was about to build its road over this land, it commenced an action to condemn a portion of it for its track, and Commissioners were appointed, who assessed the value of the land to be taken, and the money was paid into Court. Afterward, the Western Pacific Railroad Company and George H. Kerr each filed a petition for leave to withdraw the money. The Court below ordered the money (four hundred and ninety-nine dollars and eighty-five cents) to be paid to Kerr, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company appealed from the order.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Robert Robinson and Lewis Ramage, for Appellant.

Nothing passes the title to public land, but a patent or grant by Act of Congress. (Wilcoxson v. Jackson, 13 Peters, 498.) An imperfect title cannot be set up against a grant from the Government. (United States v. King, 3 Howard, 773.) Title from the United States is superior to an entry with the Register and Receiver. (Hooper v. Scheinmer, 23 How. U. S. 225; Griffith v. Duffitt, 17 Missouri, 31; Dickerson v. Brown, 9 S. & M. 130; Wiggins v. Lusk, 12 Illinois, 132; Landers v. Brant, 10 How. U. S. 348.) The grant of the right of way over Government land is, without reserving any benefit, right, or privilege to settlers or preëmptors; but the grant of the alternate odd sections, reserves or excepts from the operation of lands granted, valid preëmption claims, etc. (Third and fourth sections of the Act as amended July 2d, 1864.) We refer to these sections to show that the right of way was granted over all Government lands, whether the same had been settled upon, or preëmpted, or not; but the rights of preëmption claimants are reserved from operation of the grant of the alternate odd sections of the land.

Henry Starr, for Respondent.

The third and fourth sections of the Act of Congress, passed July 1st, 1862, provide for and exempt lands to which a preëmption claim or homestead claim may have attached.

If the title to the land did not pass to Kerr by virtue of the payment of the purchase money and the proving up of his preëmption claim, which I claim it did, I think he had an equitable inchoate vested right which Congress could not divest him of by the grant to the railroad. In The United States v. Fitzgerald, 15 Pet. 407, it was decided that no reservation or appropriation of public land can be made after the citizen has acquired the right of preëmption. The doctrine is thus broadly laid down in the opinion of the Court in that case. If Congress may override and disregard the rights acquired by actual settlers, and the expenditure of labor and money in erecting improvements upon the land, and subduing it by cultivation, it must possess an equal right to refuse its patent to the preëmptioner after the payment of the purchase money.

In Lytle v. The State of Arkansas, 9 How. 333, the Court say: "The claim of preëmption is not that shadowy right which by some it is considered to be. Until sanctioned by law it has no existence as a substantive right; but when covered by the law it becomes a legal right, subject to be defeated only by a failure to perform the conditions annexed to it."

In Delassus v. The United States, 9 Pet. 133, Mr. Chief Justice MARSHALL says, that "no principle is better settled in this country than that an inchoate title to lands is property." And again he says: "The inquiry then is, whether this concession was legally made by the proper authorities, and might have been perfected into a complete title" — was property.

In The Northern Railway Co. v. Gould, 21 Cal. 260, Mr. Justice NORTON says: "It was doubtless the purpose of the Act of Congress merely to give a right to enter upon the public lands, assuming them to be vacant, and its effect is to relinquish to the plaintiffs any claim for compensation that might belong to the United States as proprietor under any proceeding under the State law to appropriate the land for public use. But does this confer upon the plaintiff the right to enter upon premises in the actual occupancy of a settler without compensating him for the damage done to his possession?

“The United States, upon ejecting such an occupant, might not be under any obligation to pay for his improvements, but they may give to him a preëmption privilege; and this is in consonance with the policy heretofore pursued by the General Government toward settlers upon the public lands. There is scarce a doubt but this defendant will ultimately become the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of the land he occupies, with all the improvements, upon paying the Government price of the unimproved land.”

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The respondent, Kerr, settled on the land in controversy in 1854, with the intention of preëempting it, and has ever since lived upon and improved it. In 1856 he filed his declaratory statement, but that was of no avail to him, as the township in which the land is situated was then unsurveyed. The township was afterward surveyed, and the township plat was filed in the Land Office at Sacramento, on the 20th of February, 1868. Kerr filed a declaratory statement in that Land Office on the 13th of May, 1868, and in due time proved up his preëmption claim, paid the purchase money, and received his certificate of purchase. The plat and location of the railroad was filed in the Land Office on the 30th of January, 1865. The question is whether the respondent, Kerr, or the petitioner, the railroad company, is entitled to the money which, in the proceedings to acquire the right of way for the railroad, was paid into Court on account of the right of way over this land.

The right of way over the public lands of the United States, became perfect upon the filing of the plat of the location of the railroad in the proper Land Office. This right did not extend to a parcel of land in or to which a private person had acquired a title or interest, which he could maintain as against the United States. At the time the plat of the location of the road was filed, Kerr had not filed his declaratory statement. It was held by this Court, in Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475, that Congress has the power, at any time after a settler has settled upon and taken steps to acquire a preëmption right to a tract of public land, but has not perfected his right by the payment of the price of the lands, to withdraw the lands from the operation of the preëmption laws, and confer a right of entry upon another. The same doctrine was laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in Whitney v. Frisbie, 9 Wall. 187. It follows that Congress has the power, under similar circumstances, to grant to another the right of way over the lands, or any other right which is of less magnitude than the entire title, or the right to acquire the title by purchase.

But it is contended by Kerr, that under the provisions of the third and fourth sections of the Act of Congress of July 2d, 1864 (13 U. S. Stats. 356), he is entitled to damages for the right of way for the railroad. The fourth section throws no light on the question. The lands therein mentioned are the alternate sections, which, with certain exceptions and reservations, were granted to the respective railroad companies. The third section provides that "in case the owner or claimant of such lands or premises and such company cannot agree as to the damages [for the right of way over such lands], the amount shall be determined by the appraisal of three disinterested Commissioners," etc. This section applies, in terms, to lands within the Territories; but conceding that the provision is applicable to lands within the States, so far as the matter of compensation is concerned, the question arises whether the respondent comes within the provision. He was not the owner of the land at the time when the grant of the right of way took effect, nor was he the claimant, within the meaning of the Act. A claimant is one having some interest in the land, which is recognized by the laws of the United States. One who has entered upon and improved a parcel of public land, without having taken a step toward the acquisition of the title, cannot be regarded as the claimant of the land. His position in this respect is not strengthened by the fact that, after the filing of the plat of the location of the railroad, he became the purchaser of the land, because if he was not at that time the claimant of the land, the grant of the right of way over that land then took effect, and his purchase was subject to the right of way for the railroad.

R. B. ARMSTRONG, J. P. SHELDON, AND W. H. DAVIS (TRADING AND DOING BUSINESS AS ARMSTRONG, SHELDON & Co.) v. CHARLES W. DAVIS.

SURPRISE AS GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL.—Where, in an action for goods sold and delivered, the defendant in his answer set up a promissory note as a counterclaim, which purported on its face to have been made for value received, and the plaintiffs, in an answer to defendant's cross-complaint, alleged that the note was given without consideration: held, that testimony on the trial by the defendant, in support of the averments of his answer as to the making of the note and the consideration therefor, did not constitute such a surprise to the plaintiffs as to entitle them to a new trial.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.—Sufficient to support a motion for new trial considered.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Statement of Facts.

This was an action brought for goods sold and delivered, amounting to three thousand and forty-two dollars. The defendant interposed several defenses in his answer to the complaint by way of counterclaim, one of which was the following:

"And the defendant, further answering the plaintiff's complaint, and for a further and other counterclaim against said plaintiffs, avers and shows to this Court that the above named plaintiffs, on the 23d day of December, 1867, by their promissory note in writing, for value received, promised to pay to this defendant or order the sum of two thousand dollars in gold coin of the United States, sixty days from the date thereof, with interest thereon at one and one quarter per cent. per month; and that plaintiffs have not paid the same nor any part thereof, but are justly indebted to the defendant therefor in the said sum of two thousand dollars and interest at said rate from December 23d, 1867. And defendant says that the following is a copy of the said promissory note made, executed, and delivered to defendant by plaintiffs (duly stamped) at said city and county, at the date thereof, viz:

"$2,000 00.

"SAN FRANCISCO, December 23d, 1867.

"Sixty days after date, without grace, we promise to pay to Chas. W. Davis or order the sum of two thousand dollars, payable only in gold coin of the Government of the United States, for value received, with interest thereon at the rate of 1½ per cent per month from date until paid.

"ARMSTRONG, SHELTON & Co.

"No. ——. Due.

"And defendant says that he is now the owner and holder of said note, and that the same is past due and no part thereof has been paid."

Statement of Facts.

The plaintiffs filed an answer to the defendant's cross-complaint, in which they reply to the matter in regard to the promissory note, as follows:

"And for answer to the second count or cause of action set forth in said answer or cross-complaint, plaintiffs admit the execution by them of the promissory note therein set forth, but deny that they executed the same for value received, and deny that the same was executed by them for a valuable or for any consideration; and allege the fact to be, that said note was executed and delivered by them to said defendant without any consideration whatsoever paid or given by said defendant therefor to them, or to any person for their use; and plaintiffs deny that they are now, or were at the time this action was commenced, or at the time said answer and cross-complaint was filed, indebted to said defendant in the sum of two thousand dollars, or any other sum of money whatsoever, upon said promissory note or in any amount of interest thereon; and plaintiffs allege the fact to be, that, at the request of said defendant and for his accommodation, and for no other purpose whatsoever, and without any consideration whatsoever by them received therefor, and for the purpose of enabling said defendant to borrow the sum of two thousand dollars, by discounting said note, they did, on the day of the date of said note, execute and deliver the same to said defendant, to be by him discounted for his accommodation, and that at the time of said execution and delivery said defendant promised to protect and pay the said note at its maturity; and that, at the same time with the execution of said note, and as a part of the same transaction, said defendant executed and delivered to these plaintiffs his promissory note of the same tenor and effect as that set forth in said answer, whereby he promised to pay to plaintiffs two thousand dollars in United States gold coin, sixty days after date thereof, with interest thereon from date thereof until paid, at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month, in like gold coin; that said note is long past due and payable, and that defendant has not paid the same or any part thereof. and that the whole of the principal sum and interest specified in said promissory note to be paid by defendant is now due, unpaid, and payable to plaintiffs from defendant."

Statement of Facts.

The case was tried by the Court with a jury. At the trial the defendant testified that the promissory note set out in the answer was executed and delivered on the day of its date, early in the morning, at the residence of the defendant, in consideration of two thousand dollars in gold coin, on that day loaned by him to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiff, Sheldon, testified that the defendant did not give him any money at that time or place: that he (Sheldon) was at that time at his own residence, two miles away; that he was not at the defendant's house on that day: that the note in question was given as an accommodation note, and was executed in the afternoon of that day at the plaintiffs' place of business. The defendant subsequently testified that he was not at the plaintiffs' place of business on that day, but remained in the vicinity of his own house throughout the entire day. Other evidence was introduced. The verdict and judgment were for the defendant. The plaintiffs moved for a new trial, on the ground of surprise and newly discovered evidence, and in support of the motion the plaintiff Sheldon filed an affidavit stating that he was surprised by the testimony of the defendant, and that he had no intimation, from the pleadings or otherwise, that such testimony would be given. He also filed affidavits by Charles Randall and William H. Davis, that they saw and talked with the defendant about the middle of the 23d of December, 1867, at the office of the plaintiffs. The motion was denied, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Jarboe & Harrison, for Appellants, argued that the testimony of the defendant operated as a surprise upon the plaintiffs; that it was a surprise against which ordinary prudence could not have guarded, and for which a new trial should have been granted; citing Daniel v. Rose, 1 Nott. McCord, 34; Dow v. Watson, 28 Miss. 383; McFarland v. Clark, 9 Dana, 134; Seely v. Chittenden, 4 How. Pr. 265; Sargent v. Dennison, 5 Cowen, 106; *Parshall v. By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground of surprise and newly discovered evidence, and, the motion having been denied, they have brought this appeal. The alleged surprise is founded on the fact that at the trial the defendant testified that a promissory note of the plaintiffs for two thousand dollars, held by him, was executed and delivered on the day of its date, at the residence of the defendant, in consideration of that sum in gold coin, on that day loaned by him to the plaintiffs; whereas the plaintiffs allege that no sum whatever was loaned to them by the defendant; that the note was an accommodation note made by them, without having received any valuable consideration therefor, and for the sole accommodation of the defendant, to enable him to raise money thereon for his own use, and on his promise to pay the note at maturity, in case he should procure the same to be discounted. The note on its face purports to have been made for value received; and the defendant, in his answer, sets out a copy of the note and relies upon it as a valid counterclaim. With this answer before them, it is difficult to understand how the plaintiffs could have been surprised when the defendant testified that the note was given for a valuable consideration, and was not made for his accommodation. After setting up in his answer as a counterclaim, and after the plaintiffs had distinctly taken issue upon the averment that the note was made for a valuable consideration, they could not well have been surprised that the defendant attempted to make good by proof a fact distinctly put in issue in the pleadings. The note itself was prima facie evidence that it was made for a valuable consideration, and the onus was on the plaintiffs to rebut this presumption. Under all the facts, the plaintiffs have shown no such surprise as entitled them to a new trial on that ground.

In respect to the newly discovered evidence, if it be conceded that the plaintiffs were guilty of no laches in failing to produce it at the trial, and that it is material and pertinent, it is, nevertheless, liable to the objection that it is only cumulative. But if it were not, we do not think it is so conclusive in its character as to raise a reasonable presumption that the result of a second trial would be different from the first.

PETITION for rehearing.

The appeal in this case having been decided at the January term, 1871, upon the authority of Chambers v. Satterlee, 40 Cal. 497, the defendant, Byrne, by his attorneys, S. H. Brodie, Byrne & Freelon, moved for a rehearing, upon the ground that the decision of the Court had not included the point that the Board did not cause notice to be published for five days nor cause the notice to be conspicuously posted in the Superintendent's office inviting sealed proposals for the work. His counsel argued that the order of the Board failed to comply with the requirements of the statute, and cited Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239; Heyman v. Babcock, 30 Cal. 367; *Himmelman v. the work." In Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239, relied upon by respondents, the words of the order were these: "and the Clerk of the Board is hereby directed to advertise for proposals for doing said work." The two orders are thus seen to be substantially — almost literally — identical. Neither of them mentions sealed proposals, nor gives time or place of giving notice. Yet it was not doubted in Meuser v. Risdon that the order was sufficient. It was, indeed, impliedly held good, for the point decided there was, that the order to give the notice should have been repeated by the Board before the Clerk could give notice of a reletting of the contract.

CHRISTY, C. BERGLE, AND J. BEISEL.

PARTY NOT AMENABLE TO WRIT OF RESTITUTION.—A party in the actual possession of land at the commencement of an action of ejectment, and holding adversely to the plaintiff, is not amenable to a writ of restitution issued in the action to which he was not a party.

COLORABLE POSSESSION OF LAND.—Where a defendant in ejectment has taken possession of land in collusion with the plaintiff, for no other purpose than to afford such plaintiff a pretext to take possession under a writ of restitution, such pretended possession will be disregarded.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION.—If a sheriff has wrongfully turned a person out of possession of land under a writ of restitution, he will be restored by the Court to the possession, on motion made for that purpose.

RECEPTION OF IRRELEVANT TESTIMONY.—An order will not be reversed by the appellate Court on account of the reception of irrelevant testimony if its reception does the appellant no harm.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

Argument for Appellants.

In 1870 the plaintiff obtained a judgment by default against Robert Christy, C. Bergle, and J. Beisel, in an action for the recovery of the possession of a tract of land on the Potrero Nuevo, in San Francisco, known as the Robinson tract. A writ of restitution was issued on the judgment, and the Sheriff, by virtue of the same, removed Rowland Chatham from the land. He moved the Court, on affidavits, to be restored to the possession. The affidavits showed his possession adversely to the plaintiff when the suit was commenced, and that the defendants colluded with the plaintiff to have the suit brought, and consented to the judgment, and that Christy pretended for a short time to be in possession of the land, in order to give the plaintiff a pretense to serve the writ of restitution on him and also to turn out Chatham.

The respondent, for the purpose of showing collusion, was allowed to put in evidence the pleadings in an action of ejectment for the same land by John Bensley and Frederick Mason v. Robert Christy and J. W. Farrington et al., brought in the Twelfth District Court, transferred to the Seventh District Court, and still pending. The Court below granted the motion, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Whiting & Naphtaly, for Appellants.

The order setting aside the execution of the writ of possession in this cause, as to Rowland Chatham, should be reversed, because the defendant in the writ was in possession at the time of the execution of the writ. The writ was executed regularly and in good faith. If Chatham has any rights, his remedy is by action.

The Court erred in admitting to be read, upon this motion, the papers in Bensley v. Christy et al., and in overruling the objections thereto, because appellant was not a party to that action—could be neither bound nor affected by the statements therein contained.

Argument for Respondent.

Wilson & Crittenden, for Respondent.

The Court finds that the respondent was in possession of the premises at the commencement of the action, and that he was wrongfully dispossessed; and this finding is in strict accordance with the facts. The respondent was not a party to the action, and was not holding under or in privity with any of the parties thereto. The proceedings by which the respondent was dispossessed, including the action and judgment, were concocted, carried on, and consummated by the plaintiff and defendants as a fraudulent and collusive scheme to get possession of the premises; and the papers in the case of Bensley & Mason v. Christy, Farrington, and others, tend to establish these facts, and were properly given in evidence. It appears from them that the attorneys for the plaintiff in this action are the attorneys for Christy and Farrington in that case; and that there they are making a strong and persistent defense. Here, however, the plaintiff has been allowed to take judgment by default; the action being commenced and the judgment rendered during the pendency of the other case. The inference of collusion is irresistible; but there is additional evidence of the fact. In order that the service of the writ should be easy and unobstructed, it was necessary that some preliminary arrangements should be made, and Christy appears as the man to make them. He found a person who was willing to serve him in the character of tenant, and this person, being surreptitiously introduced upon the premises, was found there when the Sheriff went to serve the writ; and on answering that he was the tenant of Christy, the Sheriff turned him out, together with several head of cattle belonging to the respondent. Comment is unnecessary. The whole matter was a fraudulent and collusive contrivance, of which the respondent was the unfortunate victim.

If the Court should hold that the papers in Bensley v.

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

Christy were inadmissible, we claim that the error could not have prejudiced the plaintiff, the case being fully made out by other evidence. The only question is, whether the respondent was properly dispossessed, and the facts show clearly that he was not. The law applicable to these facts has been laid down by the Court in numerous cases. (Watson v. Dowling, 26 Cal. 125; Tevis v. Ellis, 25 Cal. 515; Rogers v. Parish, 35 Cal. 128.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This appeal is from an order, restoring the respondent to the possession of a piece of land, from which he was removed under a writ of restitution issued in an action to which he was not a party. The proof shows satisfactorily that he was in the actual possession at the commencement of the action, holding adversely to the plaintiff, and of course was not bound by the judgment or amenable to the writ of restitution issued thereon. It is equally plain on the proofs that the pretended and colorable possession of Christy was collusive, and that his nominal and temporary occupation, such as it was, had no other purpose than to afford a pretext to the plaintiff, on which the possession might be taken under the writ. If the Court improperly admitted in evidence the record in the case of Bensley v. Christy et als., it was an error which did the appellant no injury, inasmuch as there was ample evidence without this to justify the order restoring the respondent to the possession.

Order affirmed.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA ON RELATION OF TIMOTHY J. JENKINS v. GEORGE DUNCAN AND WILLIAM BLACKMORE.

TURNPIKE FRANCHISE NOT ASSIGNABLE EXCEPT WITH CONSENT OF GRANTOR.—A franchise to construct a turnpike road and collect tolls thereon is a personal trust reposed in the grantee, and is not assignable either at forced sale or by voluntary conveyance, except with the consent of the granting power.

A FRANCHISE DOES NOT PASS TO ASSIGNEE IN BANKRUPTCY.—A franchise to construct a turnpike road and collect tolls thereon, being a personal trust, not assignable without the consent of the granting power, does not pass, by virtue of an assignment under the United States bankrupt law, to the assignee in bankruptcy.

TRANSACTIONS CONSTITUTING VALID TRANSFER OF FRANCHISE.—Where the owner of a turnpike road franchise became a bankrupt and the assignee in bankruptcy sold the franchise to a third person, and the bankrupt acquiesced in the transfer, relinquished all his title, and delivered possession of the road and its appurtenances to the purchaser, and afterwards the Board of Supervisors—the grantors of the franchise—assented to the transfer and authorized the purchaser to collect the tolls; held, that, though the franchise, being a personal trust, did not pass by virtue of the assignment in bankruptcy, the whole transactions constituted a valid transfer of it by the owner, with the consent of the granting power.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, Mariposa County.

This was an action in the nature of quo warranto, brought in the name of the People by the Attorney General against the defendants, to oust them from the use and enjoyment of a certain turnpike road franchise from Ross' Ranch to Bear Valley, in Mariposa County. It appears that the franchise was granted by the Board of Supervisors of that county to the relator, Jenkins, on March 3d, 1862, for a period of ten years. In May, 1868, Jenkins filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court, and after proper proceedings had, all his estate was conveyed to Henry C. Hyde, as the assignee in bankruptcy. In March, 1869, Hyde, as such assignee, sold the franchise to the defendant, George Duncan, the chief creditor of the bankrupt; and afterwards, upon Duncan's demand, Jenkins surrendered to him full and complete possession of the road, the franchise, and all papers relating to them, and signed a paper to that effect; and also conveyed the land through which the road ran. Subsequently, but after this action was commenced, Duncan applied to the Board of Supervisors, setting forth the facts of his purchase and possession; and the Board, by an order entered on its minutes, assented to the sale, authorized him to collect the tolls for the balance of the term originally granted, and granted him a franchise to that extent, at the same time vacating the order granting such right to Jenkins.

In addition to the foregoing facts, the Court below found that the grant by the Supervisors to Duncan was with a reservation to vacate the same if it should eventually be established that Duncan was possessed of no rights in the road and improvements; that Jenkins had demanded possession of the road before suit and was refused; and that the deed from Hyde, as assignee, was never authorized by the United States District Court, nor made with its consent, nor was the sale ever ratified by it. As conclusions of law, the Court found that no rights passed to Duncan or Blackmore, his agent and employé, by virtue of the deed from Hyde; that they had usurped the right to collect tolls; and that Jenkins was entitled to the use and enjoyment of the franchise. Judgment for plaintiff was entered in accordance with the findings, and defendants appealed.

Alex. Deering, for Appellants.

It is not contended on the part of the appellants that a franchise is the subject of a forced sale; but we do insist that it, with the appurtenances — such as the road and improvements — is a species of property that passes into the hands of an assignee in bankruptcy, and would be capable of being devised. (3 Greenleaf's Cruise, Chap. III, Secs. 20-22; Stewart v. Hargrove, 23 Ala. 429.) But were the sale by the assignee valueless for any reason, that does not make the case better for Jenkins, for by his application in bankruptcy he became divested of every particle of property not exempt from execution. He surrendered all. He obeyed the assignee's order, and delivered up the road, and conveyed to Duncan the land claim "through which the road run." This was surely in itself an abandonment — a complete surrender of the charter or franchise — and was recognized by the Supervisors as such when they assented to the sale. A franchise may be conveyed with the consent of the granting power. This is a well settled principle of law, and is recognized in the case of Wood v. The Truckee Turnpike Co., 24 Cal. 487.

James C. Cary and P. D. Wigginton, for Respondent.

The present Bankrupt Act excepts from the operation of the assignment all property exempt from levy and sale upon execution. The road and franchise here were exempt from such a sale, and consequently did not pass to the assignee. (Monroe v. Thomas, 5 Cal. 471; Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 287; Woods v. Truckee Company, 24 Cal. 479.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

But even if the franchise passed to the assignee, the sale by him to Duncan was a nullity, being made without notice, at private sale, and without an order of Court. (Bank. Act, Sec. 20; In re Lewis F. Solomons, 1 Bank. Reg. 42; In re Taylor R. Stewart, 2 Bank. Reg. 19.)

The franchise, however, did not pass to the assignee, and he had no authority either to demand or receive it, much less to clothe Duncan with authority to demand or receive it. The surrender of the franchise could only be made to and accepted by the Board of Supervisors, and it does not appear that the relator at any time ever surrendered to the Board. It was not within his power to make a valid transfer of it, and it could not be made the subject matter of a voluntary assignment or sale.

The order of the Board of Supervisors assuming to vacate the franchise was void, because it was made without notice; because neither the pretended sale or surrender authorized the Board to make it; and because Jenkins held a vested right for the term, which could only be divested after due proceedings had according to law and for cause shown.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In Wood v. Truckee Turnpike Company, 24 Cal. 474, it was decided that a franchise to construct a turnpike road and collect tolls thereon is a personal trust reposed in the grantee, and is not assignable either at forced sale or by voluntary conveyance, except with the consent of the granting party. In Monroe v. Thomas, 5 Cal. 470, the same proposition was maintained in respect to a ferry franchise, and the principle was reaffirmed in Thomas v. Armstrong, 7 Cal. 289. Accepting this as a correct exposition of the law, the title of Jenkins to the franchise was not only exempt from execution, but was incapable of being made the subject of a voluntary conveyance by him, except with the consent of the granting power. Waiving any opinion on the point whether a franchise is property exempt from execution, in the sense of section fourteen of the bankrupt law of the United States, and which, for that reason, would not pass to the assignee, it is obvious that if it is a personal trust, not assignable without the consent of the granting power, the assignee in bankruptcy does not acquire it by virtue of the assignment. He can take nothing which the bankrupt could not voluntarily assign, unless it be property previously conveyed by him, in fraud of creditors or of the law. I am, therefore, of opinion that the title of Jenkins did not pass to his assignee in bankruptcy. If this were the whole case the defendant would be without title. But it appears from the findings, that after the conveyance from the assignee to the defendant (Duncan), Jenkins acquiesced in the transfer, and not only relinquished all his title, but delivered the possession of the road and its appurtenances to Duncan. Subsequently the Board of Supervisors (from which the franchise was originally obtained), not only assented to the transfer, but expressly authorized Duncan to collect the tolls. Under the authorities already cited, this must be deemed a valid transfer of the franchise by Jenkins, with the consent of the granting power from whom it was originally derived.

Judgment reversed, with an order to the Court below to enter judgment for the defendant on the findings.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

JOHN MATHEWS v. GEORGE B. KINSELL.

DAMAGES DONE TO LAND BY OVERFLOW OF WATER.—A party is not liable for damages done to another's land, by an overflow of water from his own land, if the overflow is caused by a heavy fall of rain, increased by the additional momentum given to the water before it reaches the defendant's land by ditches dug by a third person.

FINDINGS BY THE COURT.—Findings by the Court should be mere statements of the ultimate facts in controversy, and the legal consequences from the facts. They should not include probative facts, or the reasons given by the Judge for his decision.

REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT ON FINDINGS.—The mere fact that express findings do not support the judgment does not authorize a reversal of the judgment. The findings must be inconsistent with the judgment, or it will be allowed to stand.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

The defendant recovered judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

N. Hamilton, for Appellant.

The defendant had no right to relieve his own lands at the expense of the plaintiff's, either by the diversion of a running stream from its natural channel or bed, or to divert the watershed from the foothills from their accustomed flowage in finding an outlet to the bay. (Townsend v. McDonald, 2 Kernan, 391; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Penn. R. 154; Casebur v. Mowry, 55 Penn. R. 419, 423; Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. R. 520; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. R. 90; Angell on Water Courses, Sec. 108 d.)

Stephen G. Nye and A. M. Crane, for Respondent.

The findings do not show that the defendant relieved his own land at the expense of the plaintiff. Even admitting that he did, we contend that a land owner has the right to relieve his own land of surface water, although it might thereby flood his neighbor. (Angell on Water Courses, 6 ed. 122.) The facts found do not show in plaintiff an affirmative right to recover. They are not inconsistent with the judgment. (James v. Williams, 31 Cal. 211; Lucas v. San Francisco, 28 Cal. 591; Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 237.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

There having been no motion for a new trial, the only question involved in this appeal is whether the judgment can be sustained upon the findings, express or implied.

The action is to recover damages for an alleged diversion of water by the defendant, by which the lands of plaintiff were flooded, and one hundred acres washed to such an extent as to be rendered valueless.

The findings show that the parties occupy contiguous tracts of land in Alameda County; that the waters which fall upon the neighboring hills ordinarily collect upon the defendant's land, and were usually contained there in a natural basin, but, after heavy rains, have been accustomed to overflow and disperse themselves over the plaintiff's lands. The usual flow of the waters, when the natural basin was full, was over the plaintiff's land, along a channel or depression extending to the marsh or bay.

Prior to the injury complained of, a person occupying a farm higher than the defendant's land, and from which the water flowed upon the land of defendant, had dug several ditches, which had the effect of increasing the momentum of the water in the channels in times of heavy floods to such an extent as to flow down into the basin already mentioned in twelve hours as much water as formerly flowed in a week. A ditch had been constructed by the defendant, which diverted the water flowing from the natural basin through another channel to the bay.

After a heavy rain in the Spring of 1869, the water overflowed from this basin and over the banks of the ditch dug by the defendant upon the lands of the plaintiff, doing the damage to recover which this suit is brought. The waters of a certain creek called Yoakum Creek also overflowed the lands of plaintiff at the same time, contributing to the injury.

There is no finding to the effect that the overflow was caused by the ditch dug by the defendant, or any fact which tends to prove that the acts of the defendant contributed thereto. On the contrary, they clearly show that the Judge who tried the case was of the opinion that the overflow was the necessary result of a heavy fall of rain, increased by the additional momentum given to the waters by ditches dug by a person who is not a party to this suit.

The findings are not such as were intended by the Practice Act. They should be mere statements of the ultimate facts in controversy, and the legal consequences from the facts admitted and proven. In this case they are but a statement of the case, including probative as well as ultimate facts, with the reasons given by the Judge for his decision. They sufficiently show, however, that in the opinion of the Judge the injury was not caused by the act of the defendant. The mere fact, however, that the express findings do not support the judgment has been frequently held not to be sufficient to authorize a reversal. They must be inconsistent with the judgment, or it will be allowed to stand.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not express an opinion.

THOMAS CAMPBELL v. WILLIS JONES.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO FILE STATEMENT.—JUDGE'S PROMISE OF ORDER NOT ENOUGH.—Where a Judge, on being asked to extend the time for filing a statement on motion for new trial, said that he would have an order to that effect entered of record at the meeting of the Court, but failed, by oversight, to have it done; held, that the time was not extended.

ORDER EXTENDING TIME TO FILE STATEMENT.—An order extending the time for filing statement, on motion for new trial, should in all cases be in writing, and either entered on the minutes of the Court, in open session, or signed by the Judge, and filed within the time prescribed by section one hundred and ninety-five of the Practice Act.

WAIVER OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL BY FAILURE TO FILE STATEMENT.—A failure to file a statement, on motion for new trial, within time, amounts to a waiver of the motion.

OBJECTIONS TO FORM OF VERDICT AND EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.—Objections to the form of a verdict, or that excessive damages were thereby awarded, can only be made available on motion for a new trial, or on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

This action was for the return of certain iron pipe, and apparatus for hydraulic mining, alleged to be detained by defendant, and in default thereof, for its value, laid at the sum of two thousand nine hundred and ninety-three dollars and ninety cents, together with damages for wrongful detention. The defendant, on the other hand, set up that the property was worth only nine hundred and fifty dollars; that he had received it from the plaintiff by way of pledge to secure the repayment of money loaned and advanced; and that, as the loans and advances were not repaid, the right of property had become absolute in him.

The cause was tried before a jury, in May, 1870, and a verdict rendered as follows: "We, the jurors, find for the plaintiff; value of property, fourteen hundred dollars; damages for retaining said property, two hundred and sixty dollars." Upon the verdict a judgment was entered for a return of the property, or in default thereof, its value, assessed at one thousand four hundred dollars; and for two hundred and sixty dollars damages, and costs taxed at four hundred and six dollars and ten cents. The proceedings, on defendant's motion for new trial, are stated in the opinion of the Court. Defendant appealed.

Jo Hamilton, for Appellant.

Should respondent's motion to strike out the statement prevail, the judgment should be reversed on the judgment roll—because the judgment for detention of personal property should be the value of the property and legal interest. (Dorsey v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 563; Phelps v. Owens, 11 Cal. 22; Howe v. Hathaway, 33 Cal. 117; Nickerson v. Chatterton, 7 Cal. 568.) The action is detinue. (3 Black. 151; 1 Chitty Pl. 122.) And in detinue the verdict and judgment must fix the value of each parcel of property sued for. (1 Chitty Pl. 122; Higginbotham v. Rucker, 5 Call. Va. 813; Haynes v. Crutchfield, 7 Ala. 198; Bell v. Pharr, 7 Ala. 812; Baker v. Beasley, 4 Yerger, 570; Goodman v. Floyd, 2 Humph. 60; Buchner v. Haggin, 3 T. B. Monroe, 60; Thomas v. Tanner, 6 T. B. Monroe, 61.)

O. A. Tuttle, for Respondent.

The judgment was entered on May 18th, 1870, and on the same day defendant served his notice of motion for new trial. The statement was not filed until May twenty-eighth, ten days after the service of notice. This, in the absence of any stipulation or agreement, was too late, and the statement should be stricken out. When the motion for new trial came on to be heard before the District Judge, defendant objected to the statement on this ground, and moved to strike it out. There has, therefore, been no waiver of defendant's rights in this respect. The statement does not say or show that the Judge made any order out of Court. A Judge cannot make an order out of Court, unless it is in writing. His telling an attorney that he will have an order entered when the Court meets, is not making an order out of Court.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The verdict of the jury was rendered on the 17th day of May, 1870. On the 18th day of May, 1870, defendant duly served and filed his notice of motion for new trial, and on the same day requested the District Judge, out of Court, to grant an order for five days additional time to file statement on motion for new trial. The District Judge, on said request, said that at the meeting of Court he would have said order entered of record in said cause, but failed to have the order made of record by oversight. Thereupon defendant's attorney left Auburn, the county seat, before the opening of Court, and filed said statement within the ten days, to wit: on the 28th day of May, 1870. It does not appear that respondent proposed or offered any amendments to the statement thus filed, and the same was settled and certified as correct by the Judge on the 21st day of June, 1870. On the same day the motion for a new trial came on to be heard before the Judge; the respondent appeared by his counsel and "objected to the statement on file, upon the ground that the same had not been filed in time, and moved to strike it out," which motion was by the Court overruled, to which ruling respondent's counsel duly excepted. Thereupon the motion for a new trial was argued and submitted, and by the Court overruled, from which order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, as also from the judgment, defendant brings this appeal. And now, on appeal, respondent moves to strike out defendant's statement on motion for a new trial, on the ground that the same was not filed in proper time. Appellant, in response to this motion, insists that the mere oversight of the Judge, in not causing to be entered in the minutes of his Court in accordance with his promise and intention, an order extending the time for appellant to file his statement five days, should not be held a waiver of his right to file and have the benefit of his statement.

An order extending the minimum time fixed by statute for filing statement, on motion for a new trial, should in all cases be in writing, and either entered in the minutes of the Court, in open session, or signed by the Judge, and filed, with the papers in the case, within the time prescribed by the one hundred and ninety-fifth section of the Practice Act. To hold that a verbal promise of the Judge to cause an order to be entered, or that a verbal request for an order, verbally granted by the Judge, was sufficient to extend the time for filing the statement, would lead to great confusion and needless controversies. The statement in the present case was not filed by appellant within five days after the filing of the notice of his intention to move, and there was no order of the Court or Judge extending the time beyond the five days. The right of appellant to move for a new trial was, therefore, waived before his statement was filed, and the order of the Court denying his motion cannot be reviewed on this appeal. (Practice Act, Sec. 195; Caney v. Silverthorn, 9 Cal. 67; Munch v. Williamson, 24 Cal. 167; Easterby v. Larco, 24 Cal. 179; *The Bear River and Auburn W. & Mg. Co. v. The appeal is then left to rest upon the judgment roll, upon the face of which no error appears.

The points urged by appellant upon the judgment roll cannot be considered. The judgment conforms with the requirements of section two hundred of the Practice Act, and objections to the form of the verdict, or that excessive damages were thereby awarded, can only be made available on motion for new trial. Such objections cannot be raised for the first time in this Court. (Douglas v. Kraft, 9 Cal. 562; Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 380; Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 194.)

EDWIN F. CHILD AND CYRUS W. JONES v. HENRY HUGG.

CONFLICT OF EVIDENCE.—If the testimony is conflicting, the judgment will not be disturbed on the ground that it is not warranted by the evidence.

RATIFICATION OF A SALE MADE BY A PLEDGEE.—If a sale of mining stock, pledged as security for money, is made without notifying the pledgor to make his margin good, and without sufficient notice of time and place, still, if the pledgor knew of the time and place of sale, and made no objection, and after the sale approved of it, and promised to pay a balance claimed by the pledgee, he by these acts ratifies the sale.

SALE BY PLEDGEE AT AUCTION.—The question whether a sale of mining stock made in the Board of Brokers is not a sale at public auction, such as a pledgee is authorized to make upon default being made by the pledgor, not decided.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This action was brought to recover three thousand five hundred and fifty-one dollars and thirty-nine cents for stock purchased for defendant, and commissions and advances, and cash loaned to him by plaintiffs, as brokers. The defendant set up in his answer, by way of counter claim, that for the payment of the indebtedness he pledged as security one hundred shares of the stock of the Bullion Mining Company, and that the plaintiffs sold the same without his authority or permission, and that after the sale the shares were worth thirteen thousand dollars. The testimony showed that the plaintiffs had the stock in pledge, and sold the same in the Board of Brokers for one thousand one hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents, on the 14th or 15th of September, 1866. The testimony further tended to show that before the suit was brought the Bullion mining stock sold as high as one hundred and sixty dollars per share. The Court below gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the sum claimed, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Henry E. Highton, for Appellant.

The sale was invalid, because the appellant was not notified to make his margin good, nor of time or place of sale. (Markham v. Jaudon, 41 N. Y. [2 Hand.] 239.)

J. W. Winans, for Respondents.

The question of notice does not arise. The defendant ratified the sale after it was made.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

This appeal presents only a case of conflicting evidence. The testimony of the plaintiffs is sufficiently positive that the account presented to defendant was acceded to by him, and the finding of the Court supports that view. It may be admitted that defendant was entitled to notice to make his margin good before the stock which was pledged could be sold; also, that the notice of the time and place of sale was insufficient. Still, if the evidence of plaintiffs is to be taken as true, defendant did know in advance of the contemplated sale, and of the time and place, and made no objection, and that after the sale he was presented an account, in which he was credited the amount received at the sale; that, knowing all the facts, he admitted the correctness of the account, and even approved of the sale, and repeatedly afterward promised to pay the balance claimed to be due; that he never, on any occasion prior to the bringing of the suit, objected to the correctness of the account, or to the sale, on account of want of notice, or for any other reason. If this testimony be true, it is sufficient to sustain the finding that the sale had been ratified by the defendant, and we do not feel at liberty to disturb the finding of the Court on that point.

For the same reason, it is not necessary to consider the point made that a sale in the Board of Brokers, where the general public are not at liberty to bid, is not a sale at public auction, such as a pledgee of stock is authorized to make upon default being made by the pledgor.

PECK & TURNER v. W. E. LOVETT & CO., AND THOMAS FLINT.

TESTIMONY OF ABSENT WITNESS.—INSUFFICIENT ADMISSION ON MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE.—Lovett and Adams were partners, under the firm name of W. E. Lovett & Co.; Adams sold his interest to Flint, who received in part payment a promissory note signed by the firm name, and afterwards transferred it to other parties who, at maturity, sued for payment. On the trial the parties defendant moved for a continuance, to procure the attendance of Flint as a witness, and in support of the motion, an affidavit was filed stating, that if present, Flint would testify that he had nothing to do either with the execution or delivery of the note, or with the direction of the business of the firm. The plaintiffs admitted that, if present, Flint would testify that he did not sign the note nor authorize any one to sign it for him. On this the Court denied the motion for a continuance, and proceeding with the trial found, that as the note had been signed by Lovett in the firm name, in the presence of Flint, the latter held himself out to the world, by the transaction, as a partner. Held: first, that the testimony of Flint, as stated in the affidavit, was competent and material upon the question involved in the finding; second, that the admission of the plaintiffs was not broad enough to cover all the material facts to which defendants expected Flint would testify.

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The defendant Lovett and N. C. Adams were partners in a stage line from San José to Los Angeles, under the firm name of W. E. Lovett & Co. In 1867, Adams sold his interest in the business, with the consent of his partner, to defendant Flint, and received in part payment a promissory note from Lovett & Co., payable twelve months from date. Before the maturity of the note Adams indorsed it to the plaintiffs. When presented at maturity it was not paid, but was protested, and in October, 1869, this action was brought to enforce payment of it. The motion for continuance, to procure the attendance of an absent witness, supported by the affidavit noticed in the opinion of this Court, being overruled, the case was tried by the Court and a judgment rendered against defendants Flint and Lovett. Defendant Flint moved for a new trial, and the motion being denied, he appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

D. S. Gregory, for Appellant.

The plaintiffs at the trial admitted that the appellant Thomas Flint, if placed on the stand, would state that "he did not sign the note" in question, or authorize it to be signed by any one for him; but this admission did not embrace the matter to which the appellant was expected to testify. The affidavit of Bixby states that just upon the eve of the trial it was discovered that Adams could give testimony, not that Flint signed the note or authorized it to be signed, but that he negotiated the said note and delivered the same to the payee, and that Thomas Flint was the only person who could contradict this statement, and which the affiant stated was false. The affiant further declared that it was believed by affiant that Flint would testify, if an opportunity to examine him could be had, "that he had naught to do with" nor "was he concerned" in the execution "or delivery of the note."

Accordingly, the Court found, on the testimony of Adams, that Flint delivered the note to the plaintiff, and "by this testimony," held himself out to the world as Lovett's partner—showing how material to the issue the Court below regarded the testimony which Flint was not permitted to deny.

Bodley & Rankin, for Respondents.

There was no error in the Court by the refusal to continue the cause, especially so when plaintiffs admitted that the witness Flint (also one of the defendants), "would testify that he did not sign the note, in the complaint mentioned, or authorize the same to be signed by any one for him." It was a matter for the sound discretion of the Court—which will not be reviewed by this Court, except in cases of gross abuse, to the injury of the party. (Smith v. Billett, 15 Cal. 23.)

It is true that issue was only joined on the 4th and the trial had on the 6th day of October, 1869—but it is equally true that the amended complaint was filed November 2d, 1868; that personal service was had on Benjamin Flint, the admitted partner of appellant, on the 31st of December, 1868; that service on appellant was had by publication—which was commenced on April 24th, 1869—and defendant had from that time until the sixth of October to have been personally present at the trial, or to have had his deposition taken.

found by the Court that the promissory note was signed by Lovett in the firm name, in the presence of Flint, and that he and Lovett delivered it to Adams, the payee, in part payment for his interest in the partnership property, which was then sold by him to Flint; and it was also found that Flint held "himself out to the world as a partner of the defendant Lovett, by the transaction aforesaid." In the affidavit which was filed in support of the motion for a continuance of the cause, it is stated that Thomas Flint, if present, would testify, "that he had naught to do with and was wholly unconnected with either the execution or delivery of the promissory note, or with the direction of the business of the said firm of W. E. Lovett & Co." On the hearing of the motion, the plaintiffs admitted that Flint, if present as a witness, would testify "that he did not sign the note, in the complaint mentioned, or authorize the same to be signed by any one for him;" and thereupon the Court denied the motion for a continuance. The testimony of Flint, as stated in the affidavit above alluded to, was competent and material upon the question involved in the finding last above mentioned, as that finding was based upon the alleged participation of Flint in the transaction, in which the note was made and delivered. The admission of the plaintiffs did not extend to all the matters which the defendants expected to prove by Flint. They did not admit that he would testify that he was unconnected with the delivery of the note or with the direction of the business of the firm. The admission was not broad enough to cover all the facts, to which the defendants expected that Flint, if present at the trial, would testify, and the continuance should have been granted.

Judgment and order reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

POWER OF LEGISLATURE OVER AFFAIRS AND PROPERTY OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.—The Legislature has the constitutional power to direct and control the affairs and property of a municipal corporation for municipal purposes, and may, for such purposes, so control its affairs by appropriate legislation as ultimately to compel it, out of the funds in its treasury, or by taxation, to pay a demand which in good conscience it ought to pay, though there be no legal liability to pay it.

OPENING OF STREETS A LEGISLATIVE MUNICIPAL PURPOSE.—The opening of streets in a city is clearly a municipal purpose; and whether the cost of such enterprises should be borne by the contiguous property, or by all the property of the city, or a certain proportion by each, is a matter for legislative discretion.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACT TO PAY SAN FRANCISCO MONTGOMERY STREET EXTENSION COMMISSIONERS.—The Act of March 4th, 1870, requiring the City and County of San Francisco to advance out of its treasury a sufficient sum to pay for the services of the Commissioners and certain others employed on the proposed extension of Montgomery and Connecticut streets (Stats. 1869-70, p. 146): held, to be clearly constitutional.

ORIGINAL application in the Supreme Court for mandamus.

The grounds upon which the defendant attacked the Act of March 4th, 1870, and rested his defense to this application for mandamus, are thus stated in the affidavit of Mayor Selby, referred to in the opinion:

“That he is advised and believes, and hereby charges and states, that the validity of the proceedings for the extension of Montgomery street and Connecticut street is questioned and attacked, and that it is questionable and doubtful whether or not the proceedings for the extension of said streets will be sustained; that in the event the said proceedings heretofore had should be declared null and void and of no effect, the said streets will not be extended, and no assessment will be made for any damage, costs expenses, or charges, and none will or can be collected; and that the City and County of San Francisco would thereupon be entirely without any remedy to collect what the County Judge might compel it to pay to the applicants applying to him to fix their compensation and amount of expenses."

The amount allowed by the County Judge against the city was thirty-two thousand seven hundred and thirty dollars and ninety-six cents; but as anticipated by the Mayor, the streets were never extended; and no assessments were ever collected to reimburse the city and county treasury.

W. H. Patterson, for Relators.

When a person is clothed with power and has assumed the duties of a public officer, he has taken upon himself the obligation to perform those duties; and if he neglects or refuses to do so, any person, whose rights are thereby injuriously affected, is entitled to demand relief, and mandamus is the proper remedy. (Moses on Mandamus, 14.)

There is no constitutional question involved. The matter of the compensation of the relators, directed to be ascertained and paid by the Act of the Legislature, was peculiarly within its province and jurisdiction in the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation. (People v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 378; Litchfield v. Vernon, 41 N. Y. 123; People v. Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 Comstock, 419; Guildford v. Supervisors of Chenango Co., 3 Kernan, 133; *Brewster v. W. C. Burnett, for Respondent.

The Auditor must exercise his judgment and discretion in passing upon claims presented to him. Mandamus would not lie against him, but should have been brought, if at all, against the Supervisors. (Moses on Mandamus, 15; Tremond v. Crippen, 10 Cal. 211; Ludlum v. Judge Fourth District, 9 Cal. 7; People ex rel. S. F. Gas Co. v. Supervisors of San Francisco, 11 Cal. 42.)

There was no legal or moral obligation, on the part of the City and County of San Francisco, to compensate the relators, nor is the purpose of their payment a municipal one. The demand for payment does not arise from any act of the city and county as a municipal corporation, or as agent of the State Government, nor out of contract. The passing over of the money would be an advance for a time, without consideration, to relators, with a chance of receiving the same amount of money from another source than from relators. No municipal purpose moving to the payment, it cannot be compelled. (Atkins v. Town of Randolph, 31 Vt. 226; Bowdoinham v. Richmond, 6 Greenleaf, 112; Brunswick v. Litchfield, 2 Greenleaf, 28; Hampshire v. Franklin, 16 Mass. 88; Hasbronck v. Milwaukie; 13 Wis. 37; Tyson v. School Directors, 51 Penn. St. 9; Grogan v. San Francisco, 8 Cal. 590; Low v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 214; Hammet v. Philadelphia, 65 Penn. St. 146.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an application for a mandamus, to compel the Auditor of the City and County of San Francisco to issue his warrant on the General Fund of said city and county for the several amounts found to be due to the relators respectively, by the County Judge, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of March 4th, 1870. (Stats. 1869-70, p. 146.) The application is resisted chiefly on the ground that the Act is unconstitutional, and, therefore, void. It appears from the record that proceedings were commenced by the Board of Supervisors under the Act of April 4th, 1864 (Stats. 1863-4, p. 352), for the extension of Montgomery and Connecticut streets, in said city; and the relators were appointed Commissioners to assess the damages and benefits to the property to be affected by the proposed improvement. By the provisions of the last mentioned Act, all the expenses of the undertaking, including the compensation of the Commissioners, were to be borne by and assessed upon the property to be benefited by the improvement; and it was made the duty of the Board of Supervisors to ascertain and declare what property would be thus benefited, and would, therefore, be liable to assessment. This duty was performed, and the Commissioners proceeded to make the assessments as required by law. By the Act of March 4th, 1870, the County Judge was authorized to hear and determine, on the application of the Commissioners, the amount due to them for their services, and for counsel fees, clerk hire, office rent, and other necessary incidental expenses; and on ascertaining the amount due it is made the duty of the County Judge to file his decision or determination with the Auditor of the city and county, who shall, thereupon, draw his warrant on the General Fund in the treasury of the city and county for the amount so ascertained to be due, and the Treasurer is directed to pay the warrant. The amount so paid out of the treasury is to be refunded by assessments on the property benefited by the improvement. The Act further requires that notice of these proceedings be given to the Attorney for the city and county; and the County Judge is authorized to hear testimony and to examine the Commissioners under oath. It appears in the case that the County Judge heard the application of the Commissioners, after due notice to the City and County Attorney, and made his decision in writing, determining the amount due, and filed the same with the Auditor, who refuses to issue his warrant because he entertains a doubt whether the Act of March 4th, 1870, is a constitutional and valid enactment.

The argument, by which it is sought to impeach the validity of the Act is, that when the Commissioners were appointed, and rendered the services for which they now seek compensation, the city and county were not, and are not, under any legal or moral obligation to pay for such service, inasmuch as the Act of April 4th, 1864, under which the proceedings for extending the streets were commenced, expressly provides that the entire expense of the work shall be defrayed by assessments on the property benefited by the improvement. It is insisted that the Commissioners accepted their employment, and performed the service, with full knowledge that their services were to be paid for in this method, and not otherwise, and hence that the city and county were under neither legal nor moral obligation to pay for them; and it is denied that the Legislature has the power, under the Constitution, to appropriate the funds of a municipal corporation towards the liquidation of a demand, which the corporation was not under even a moral obligation to pay. It is stated that the funds in the treasury of the corporation were raised by taxation, for municipal purposes only, and can be applied to no other; and that to apply them in satisfaction of a demand, which the corporation was not bound, in good conscience, to pay, would be to appropriate them to a purely private purpose, having no connection whatever with municipal affairs; and the power of the Legislature to do this is denied.

But few branches of jurisprudence have been more fully discussed by American Courts than the extent to which municipal corporations and their property are subject to legislative control and disposition. But whilst it is conceded in nearly all the cases that a municipal corporation is a subordinate part of the State Government, organized for the more convenient administration of the local affairs of a particular district, and deriving its powers wholly from the Legislature, to whose general control and supervision it is subject, I am not aware that any case has gone so far as to hold that the Legislature may devote the funds of a municipal corporation to purposes confessedly private and having no relation to municipal affairs. But I deem it unnecessary for the purposes of this decision to review the authorities on this point, or to attempt to define with precision the limits of the legislative authority over the property and funds of a municipal corporation. It is established by an overwhelming weight of authority, and, I believe, is conceded on all sides, that the Legislature has the constitutional power to direct and control the affairs and property of a municipal corporation for municipal purposes, provided it does not impair the obligation of a contract, and by appropriate legislation may so control its affairs as ultimately to compel it, out of the funds in its treasury, or by taxation to be imposed for that purpose, to pay a demand when properly established, which in good conscience it ought to pay, even though there be no legal liability to pay it. (Beals v. Amador County, 35 Cal. 624; Blanding v. Burr, 13 Cal. 343; People v. Board of Supervisors of San Francisco, 11 Cal. 206; Sharp v. Contra Costa County, 34 Cal. 284; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 432; People v. Alameda County, 26 Cal. 641.)

It remains only to inquire whether the appropriation in this case was for a municipal or for a purely private purpose. The work in respect to which the services of the Commissioners were rendered was clearly one of great public importance. It related to the extension of the principal street of the city; and the enterprise was set on foot and ordered to be carried forward by the Board of Supervisors. The law, as it then stood, it is true, directed the compensation to the Commissioners to be paid by means of assessments on the property benefited; and it may be assumed that when they accepted this employment, and performed the service, it was with the distinct understanding that they were to look to this source only for their compensation. But it appears from the affidavit of Mayor Selby that grave doubts were entertained whether the whole enterprise for extending the streets might not ultimately fail, and no assessments be collected out of which to defray the expenses; and it was possibly in view of this contingency that the Legislature deemed it but just and equitable that the city and county should advance the money to the Commissioners, and take the chance of being reimbursed out of the assessments. The Board of Supervisors having set on foot a plan for extending the principal street of the city through many blocks, and caused private citizens to expend their time and labor in furtherance of the enterprise, it may well be that when doubts arose as to the success of the undertaking the Legislature deemed it equitable that the hazard of the contingency should be borne by the city and county, and not by the Commissioners. But the compensation to the Commissioners is only an inconsiderable portion of the expense which was expected to result from the extension of the streets; all of which is to be assessed on the contiguous property, which it is supposed will be chiefly benefited by the improvement. But if the Legislature should decide, even after the whole enterprise is completed, that it would not be just to assess upon the contiguous property the entire cost of opening a great artery for trade and travel through the heart of a populous city, and should require a portion of the cost to be defrayed out of the city treasury, or by taxation on all the inhabitants, I am not prepared to say it would exceed its constitutional power. The opening of streets is clearly a municipal purpose, and whether the cost of such enterprises shall be borne by the contiguous property, or by all the property of the city, or a certain proportion by each, is a matter for legislative discretion. It cannot, with propriety, be asserted that it is inequitable to compel all the property of a city to contribute toward opening and maintaining its principal highways. These views appear to be supported by the following authorities: Thomas v. Leland, 24 Wend. 65; Brewster v. Syracuse, 19 N. Y. 117; People v. McSpedon, 21 How. Pr. R. 178; People v. Pickney, 32 N. Y. 393; People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 395; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128; Police Commissioners v. County Court, 34 Mo. 546; Layton v. New Orleans, 12 La. An. R. 515.

In this case all that the Legislature has attempted to do is to compel the city and county to advance, out of its treasury, a small portion of the cost of opening one of its chief thoroughfares until the amount shall be reimbursed by means of assessments on the property to be principally benefited, and I think the Act is clearly constitutional.

It is therefore ordered that the writ issue as prayed for.

WALTER BOHALL v. D. N. DILLER.

CONSTRUCTION OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.—In a contract for the payment of money at different periods of time, with an extension of time, if needed, for the payment of an installment the extension is a privilege of which, if the party entitled to it desires to avail himself, he must notify the other party, on or before the day upon which the installment becomes due, that he needs the extension.

COMPLAINT IN ACTION FOR DAMAGES.—In an action for damages the plaintiff must allege, in his complaint, that he has sustained damages, in order to sustain a judgment for damages.

Argument for Appellant.

CONCURRENT COVENANTS.—A party who agrees to convey land upon payment of the purchase money, cannot recover the purchase money due upon the contract until he tenders a deed, if all the installments became due before the action was brought.

ALLEGATION OF TENDER.—In such a case the complaint must allege a tender of a conveyance.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.—VENDOR AND VENDEE.—When a vendee has so failed to perform the contract that the vendor may elect to treat the contract as rescinded, it is incumbent upon the vendor, in order to work that result, to restore to the vendee whatever he has paid on the contract.

IDEM.—MUST BE ENTIRE.—The rescission of a contract, to be effectual, must be a rescission in toto.

IDEM.—ALLEGATION IN COMPLAINT IN EJECTMENT.—In order to recover possession of premises on the ground of rescission of contract, the plaintiff must allege a repayment or tender of the amount paid by the defendant at the execution of the contract.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eighth Judicial District, County of Klamath.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

Bohall does not aver that he demanded payment, or that he tendered Diller a conveyance. On the last branch he says "he was prepared to do it on the 1st of April, 1866." This is not sufficient. (Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 656.) This suit was commenced twenty-six days before the needed extension of time for the April payment expired. The option of the extension was entirely with Diller. It was not necessary for him to ask Bohall for it; for the latter could not refuse it. This could not be damaging to Bohall; for with the extension to Diller went the interest or use of one per cent per month to Bohall. Look at the complaint in any aspect, and it declares no cause of action. The judgment of the Court seems to have an element in it entirely unwarranted by the complaint. We refer to the three hundred and fifty dollars damages. (Pittsburg Coal Co. v. Greenhood, 39 Cal. 71.)

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

Walter Van Dyke, for Respondent.

The plaintiff, in his complaint, alleges, in addition to what appellant's counsel quotes in his brief: "That at all times he has complied with the several obligations and agreements imposed upon him in any way by said instrument and said agreement; and he further alleges that said defendant has complied with none of the obligations, promises, and undertakings imposed upon him by said agreement." This is sufficiently pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract. (Pr. Act, Sec. 60; Cal. St. Nav. Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 268; People v. Jackson, 24 Cal. 632.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The complaint states that the plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the premises in controversy; and that he and the defendant entered into a contract in writing for the sale of the land by the plaintiff to the defendant. By the contract it appears that the price to be paid was six hundred dollars — fifty dollars paid in hand, one hundred dollars to be paid on the 1st of August, 1865, and four hundred and fifty dollars on the 1st of April, 1866, "with a continuance of time of payment, if needed, on the last mentioned amount, six months;" and that the plaintiff, upon the payment of the purchase money, was to convey the premises to the defendant. It is further stated that the plaintiff put the defendant into the possession of the premises, and that the defendant is now in possession; that the defendant has not paid any part of either of the last two mentioned sums; that the defendant has not made any application for an extension of time for the payment of the last mentioned sum; and that on the 1st of April, 1866, the plaintiff "was prepared to convey" the premises to the defendant. The prayer is that the defendant be decreed to surrender to the plaintiff the possession of the premises, and that the plaintiff have judgment for five hundred and fifty dollars, with interest, as damages for the breach of the contract, and for the use of the premises, and also for general relief. The plaintiff had judgment for the recovery of the possession of the premises, and for three hundred and fifty dollars damages. The appeal is from the judgment.

The "continuance of time of payment" for six months, mentioned in the contract, was a privilege granted to the defendant; and if he desired to avail himself of it, it was incumbent on him to notify the plaintiff, on or before the day mentioned for the payment of the last installment, that he "needed" such extension of time. It not appearing that such notice had been given, the last installment had become due before the commencement of the action.

The complaint is not sufficient to sustain the judgment. It is not alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff has sustained damages, and, therefore, he is not entitled to a judgment for damages.

He cannot recover the purchase money; for the agreement was that the conveyance should be executed upon the payment of the purchase money; and, as the last installment had become due before the action was commenced, it was necessary for him to tender a deed before suing for the purchase money. The covenants in such case are concurrent. The plaintiff has not alleged a tender of a conveyance of the premises.

The plaintiff having stated the contract of sale, and alleged that under it he placed the defendant in possession of the premises, it became necessary for him, if he desired to recover the possession, to show, that the contract was rescinded. When a vendee has so failed to perform the contract, that the vendor may elect to treat the contract as rescinded, it is incumbent on the vendor, in order to work that result, to restore to the vendee whatever he has paid on the contract.

Points decided.

A rescission of a contract, in order to be effectual, must be a rescission in toto. The plaintiff has failed to allege a repayment, or tender of the amount paid by the defendant, at the execution of the contract. He, therefore, cannot proceed to recover the possession of the premises on the ground of a rescission of the contract.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint.

THE MAYOR AND COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF SAN JOSE ET AL. v. JOHN TRIMBLE.

MEXICAN GRANT, INCLUDING PRIVATE CLAIM.—A Mexican grant was confirmed by the United States, excepting certain tracts included within its exterior boundaries, granted to private claimants. Land claimed as part of a tract thus excepted was excluded by an official survey of the tract; held, that the land thus excluded is a portion of the land confirmed in the larger grant.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.—LIMITATION TO RECOVERY UNDER MEXICAN GRANT.—An actual adverse possession of five years subsequent to the passage of the Act of 1863, relative to Spanish and Mexican grants, will, in certain cases, bar a recovery under a title derived from Spain or Mexico, even though the title was not confirmed until after the expiration of the five years.

ADVERSE POSSESSION AS BAR TO RECOVERY.—Adverse possession, in order to bar a recovery by the true owner, must have continued, without interruption, during the statutory period. If interrupted, even by force of fraud, and the possession be recovered by a peaceable or forcible entry, or by process of law, the continuity is broken, and the statute begins to run only from the time of the reentry.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, County of Santa Clara.

Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant appealed.
The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Argument for Appellant.

Moore, Laine & Silent, for Appellant.

The proofs show that the defendant Trimble entered into the possession of the premises under a paper title, 1857; that he in all things subjected it to his dominion and control; claimed it as his own against all the world; had it inclosed, and cultivated it, and continuously and uninterruptedly held it until at least as late as January, 1863. The complaint was not filed until the 14th of October, 1868. This gave the defendant title under the statutes of this State. The sixth section of our statute of limitations governs in ejectment. (24 Cal. 289.) The possession of the defendant was adverse, under sections ten, eleven, twelve, and thirteen of Acts of Limitations. (2 Hittell, 4352-4356.) The Court placed its instructions on the ground that, as the plaintiffs claimed title under a Spanish or Mexican grant, the statute did not run until final confirmation. Until the amendment of April 18th, 1863 (2 Hittell, 4348, and foot note), a party claiming under such grant had the special privilege of maintaining an action of this kind, if commenced within five years after final confirmation. (See 24 Cal. 114; 26 Cal. 23; 27 Cal. 57; 33 Cal. 448.) This was a special privilege, not really necessary to the protection of such titles, as ejectment could be maintained on such titles, without confirmation. (18 Cal. 198; 21 Cal. 552; 10 Cal. 589; 33 Cal. 102.) By Act of 18th April, 1863 (Stats. 1863, pp. 325, 327), this privilege was limited. All grants then not finally confirmed had to be sued on within five years, or be barred of their remedy where there was one adverse holding. This suit was not so brought; and the defendant's five years holding made him a perfect title. The Spanish grant claimants did not take advantage of the proviso, since they ask this special privilege. It was a mere proviso, and not an exception. The statute was against a Spanish title, as well as any other, unless the holders took advantage while it existed. Statutes conferring such privileges are strictly construed. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 393, 394, and authorities there cited.) The plaintiffs allowed their time to pass, and their title is governed by the general statute; and under the statute the defendant's long continued possession, before the pretended ouster of the Ogans, gave him a title that could not be divested, except by conveyance or a possession adverse to his own continuance for five years. (See Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 363; Stockmon v. Cannon, 36 Cal. 535.) The Court misdirected the jury as to this matter throughout the instructions.

J. Alexander Yoell, for Respondent.

The construction of section six of the Act of 1863, contended for by appellant, is that the plaintiff's remedy was barred before her right accrued. This is not a case of a grant of a specific quantity within large exterior boundaries, but it is a grant of all contained within the exterior boundaries, excepting a certain grant within said exterior boundaries, the quantity and boundaries of which said interior grant remained to be determined, and located, and segregated; and until that question was finally determined, the lands in dispute could not be affected by the statute of limitations. (Mayor, etc., v. Urridias, 37 Cal. 339.) Such a construction as is given by appellant, would only give a few months, or weeks, or days, within which to commence an action to a certain class of titles, to wit: such as were only confirmed a few months, or weeks, or days before five years after the passage of the Act, and all those confirmed after that date, would be barred before the right accrued. Can the Legislature, in defiance of the Constitution and the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, say: If your title is finally confirmed to you by the Courts of the United States within five years from this date (the passage of the Act), you may have your land, but if it is not, then you can't get it, although you could not sue for it before? I submit that it cannot, and that such an Act is clearly unconstitutional. (Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366; Lathrop v. Mills, 19 Cal. 513.) In this case the defendant did not show, nor did he have a five years' continuous adverse possession at the commencement of this action, and therefore could not claim the bar of the statute he contends for. (Hittell, Art. 4,351; San Francisco v. Fulde, 37 Cal. 349; Brooks v. Hyde, supra; Stevenson v. Bennett, 35 Cal. 424; Leese and Vallejo v. Clark, 3 Cal.; Maguire v. Tyler, 8 Wallace, 650; Jordon et al. v. Barrett et al., 4 How. 169; Lee v. Norris, Cro. Eliz. 331; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 365.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action is ejectment, and the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to recover, unless the defendant has established a valid defense under the statute of limitations. The plaintiffs claim under a final decree of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered in June, 1866, confirming to them a large tract, which includes the premises in controversy; but on the face of this decree there is excepted from its operation certain tracts granted by the Spanish or Mexican Governments to private claimants; and of these excepted tracts the "Rancho Milpitas" was one. This tract was granted by the Mexican Government to one Alviso, whose title was confirmed by a final decree of the proper tribunal of the United States prior to the year 1863; and an official survey thereof was made by one Thompson, a Deputy United States Surveyor, which survey included the premises in controversy as a part of said rancho. But in September, 1863, this survey was set aside by competent authority and a new survey ordered, which was accordingly made and became final in December, 1868. This survey excluded the premises in controversy from the Milpitas Rancho; and it results, as a necessary conclusion from these facts, that said premises are a portion of the lands finally confirmed to the plaintiffs by the decree of June, 1866.

But it appears in the case that as early as 1851, Alviso, claiming to be the owner of said premises as a portion of the Rancho Milpitas, sold and conveyed them; and the defendant derails title under this conveyance. It further appears that the defendant and his predecessors entered under this title, and had the actual and undisturbed possession from 1851 to 1863, in which last named year the defendant was forcibly evicted from the whole tract, or the greater portion thereof, by one Ogan, who had the actual possession until the early part of the year 1866, when the defendant regained the possession by process of law, and has ever since remained and is yet in possession. The present action was commenced in October, 1868, and the defense chiefly relied upon is the statute of limitations.

The title of the plaintiffs is derived from the Spanish and Mexican Governments, and under the amendment of 1855 to the statute of limitations, it is quite plain that if that amendment had remained in force the statute would not have commenced to run against the plaintiffs until after their claim was finally confirmed and had been located by a final, approved survey. But in 1863 the statute was again amended and materially modified, in respect to actions or defenses founded on titles derived from Spain or Mexico. The sixth section of the amendatory Act, after providing that time which had already run under the existing law, should be taken and computed as a part of the time limited in said amendatory Act, for the commencement of an action or making a defense thereto, proceeds as follows:

“Provided, further, that any person claiming real property, or the possession thereof, or any right or interest therein under title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government, or the authorities thereof, which shall not have been finally confirmed by the Government of the United States or its legally constituted authorities, more than five years before the passage of this Act, may have five years after the passage of this Act in which to commence his action for the recovery of such real property or the possession thereof, or any right or interest therein, or for the rents and profits out of the same, or to make his defense to an action founded upon the title thereto; and provided, further, that nothing in this Act contained shall be so construed as to extend or enlarge the time for commencing actions for the recovery of real estate or the possession thereof, under title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government, in a case where final confirmation has already been had, other than is now allowed under the Act to which this Act is amendatory."

This provision is by no means free from ambiguity; but as I interpret it, the substance of the enactment is that if a title derived from Spain or Mexico had been finally confirmed prior to the passage of said amendatory Act, an actual adverse possession for five years or more after the final confirmation will bar a recovery. But if the title had not been finally confirmed at the time of the passage of the amendatory Act, five years from the date of its passage is allowed within which to commence the action against one in the actual adverse possession, without reference to the date of the subsequent confirmation. In other words, an actual adverse possession of five years subsequent to the passage of the Act of 1863, or the time when it took effect, will bar a recovery under a title derived from Spain or Mexico, even though the title was not confirmed until after the expiration of five years.

Prior to the passage of this Act, an adverse possession, however long continued, would not defeat a recovery under this class of titles, unless it continued for five years after final confirmation, and before action brought. But in the Act of 1863, the Legislature saw fit to declare that no more than five years from that date should be allowed to holders of these titles, which were not then confirmed, within which to commence their actions against persons in the actual adverse possession. Nor is there anything unreasonable or unjust to the holders of these titles in this provision. A long period had already been allowed them within which to perfect their titles and to commence proceedings for the expulsion of intruders, and yet a further period of five years was allowed, by the Act of 1863, for that purpose. They were under no necessity to await a final confirmation before proceeding against intruders, inasmuch as it has been repeatedly decided by this Court that the holder of a Mexican or Spanish grant is entitled to the possession of the whole tract included within the exterior limits of his grant, pending the proceedings for the confirmation of his title, and may maintain ejectment therefor prior to the final confirmation. The holders of these titles, therefore, have no just cause to complain that the Legislature has not been sufficiently indulgent, or has not afforded them the most ample opportunity to protect their rights; and a just regard for the repose of titles demanded that this species of litigation should be speedily ended.

Applying these principles to the case in hand, the conclusion is inevitable that, if the defendant was in the actual adverse possession of the premises in controversy for five years after the Act of 1863 took effect, and prior to the commencement of the action, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. But it appears from the evidence that, from the latter part of 1863 to the early part of 1865, the defendant's possession was interrupted by the forcible intrusion of Ogan, who had the actual possession during that period. It is well settled that an adverse possession, in order to bar a recovery by the true owner, must have continued without interruption during the statutory period. It must have been continuous, and not at intervals only. (San Francisco v. Fulde, 37 Cal. 349, and cases there cited.) If interrupted, even by force or fraud and the possession be recovered by a peaceable or forcible entry, or by process of law, nevertheless the continuity of the possession was broken, and in such case the statute will begin to run only from the time of the reëntry. After the intrusion of Ogan, the defendant recovered the possession in 1865, and five years did not thereafter elapse before the commencement of the action. The defense under the statute was, therefore, not made out. The evidence was conflicting as to the value of the rents and profits, and in respect to the fact whether the possession of Ogan included the whole or only a portion of the premises in controversy, and we cannot disturb the verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

[The foregoing opinion was rendered at the December term, 1870. A rehearing was granted, and the following opinion was delivered at the July term, 1871.—REPORTER.]

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

We have carefully considered the question in this case, arising upon the construction of the sixth section of the Act of 1863, amendatory of the statute of limitations of 1850, and in our investigations we have had the aid of very elaborate arguments of several counsel who are interested in the question. The reëxamination of the question has strengthened our conviction, that the conclusion announced in our former opinion is correct. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the question at any length at this time. It is proper, however, to say that in our opinion, it is clear that the Act of 1855 was repealed by the Act of 1863. The principal purpose of the Act of 1863 was to place all title, all rights of entry, and all rights of action, on the same footing, so far as respects the statute of limitations; to require every person, whatever may be the source or nature of his title, to whom a cause of action accrues for the recovery of the possession of lands against a person in the adverse possession thereof, to commence his action within the period mentioned in the Act, or be forever barred of his remedy.

To avoid certain misapprehensions which, from the arguments of some of the counsel, seem to exist, it should be stated that we do not hold that where, for any cause, a party has no right of entry, or cannot maintain an action, the statute will run against him. Nor do we hold that if a party acquires a second right of entry, or right of action, that he may not maintain his action within the time limited by the Act, although his remedy under his former right of entry may have become barred. It is unnecessary to express any opinion as to whether a person, while holding one right of entry, can acquire a second, nor whether such second right of entry accrues in the case of a confirmation survey or patent of a "sobrante grant" or a Spanish or Mexican grant of any character.

JOHN WILSON v. M. CAPURO AND G. CAPURO.

BANKRUPTCY.—ACTION BY CREDITOR AFTER PROVING DEBT.—Under the provisions of section twenty-one of the United States Bankrupt Act of 1867, a creditor who has proved his debt is deemed to have waived his right of action against the bankrupt, and cannot maintain such action.

CONTROL OF BANKRUPT'S ASSETS EXCLUSIVE IN FEDERAL TRIBUNALS.—It is the intent of that Act that the Federal tribunals shall have the exclusive control of the assets of the bankrupt, and shall distribute the proceeds among his creditors.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The plaintiff demurred to defendants' answer, the demurrer was overruled, and the defendants obtained judgment, from which the appeal was taken.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Byers & Elliott, for Appellant.

Section twenty-one of the Bankrupt Act of 1867 was not intended to mean that if the bankrupt shall have been guilty of palpable frauds of so gross a character that he dare not make an attempt to get a discharge, that the creditor shall be compelled to remain content with having proved up his claim, whether he shall have received a dividend or not, and not be permitted to enforce his claim in action subsequently brought upon the unpaid claim. Such a construction is a bid for fraud. It is true the creditor might decline to prove up his claim and depend upon preventing the bankrupt's discharge, and collect his debt out of the future acquisitions of the bankrupt; this remedy would be no less unfavorable for the creditor than proving up his claim in the hope of obtaining a dividend. The parties proving up would have no object in opposing the discharge, if they had waived all right of future action by proving their claim; and this notwithstanding the bankrupt had committed a thousand fraudulent acts which would prevent his discharge, if suggested in opposition thereto. (Compare section five of the Bankrupt Act of 1841, found in Hilliard on Bankrupt., p. 442, and section twenty-one of the Act of 1867; Hamlin v. Hamlin, 3 Jones' Eq. N. C. 191; Haxtun v. Corse, 2 Barb. Chan. 506.) No plea but a discharge will suffice to abate the suit. The creditor has a right to prosecute his suit notwithstanding the proceedings in the Court of bankruptcy, no discharge being pleaded, unless he be enjoined from further proceedings by an order from the Court in which the insolvency proceedings are pending. (In re Bellows & Peck, 3 Story, 428.)

It appears from this case that the United States District Court might restrain the creditor from proceeding further in the State Court until the termination of proceedings in bankruptcy. Should no injunction be thus placed on the creditor, he is at liberty to pursue his action to judgment. The State Court is under no obligation to suspend any proceedings properly before it on account of any proceedings pending in the United States Court. Neither should it — for the debtor, if desiring it, may procure an order restraining the creditor, but this order cannot effect the jurisdiction of the State Court, but will simply render the creditor amenable for contempt of Court in thus pursuing his action, should he refuse to discontinue it.

The State Court cannot recognize a plea of insolvency proceedings pending, as any defense to an action, as it is not made a defense by any statute. Neither should it, upon this plea, discontinue the suit. (Hobart v. Haskell, 14 N. H. 127; In re Roseberg, 2 B. R. 81; In re Metcalf et al., 6 I. R. R. 223; In re Reed, 6 I. R. son v. Fontenberry, 7 S. & M. 302; Ingass v. Savage, 4 Barr, 224.)

In the case at bar the Court has, upon the defendant's plea of proceedings pending, ordered a dismissal of the case and judgment for defendant for his costs.

It will appear from the answer of defendant that his petition in bankruptcy was filed in April, 1868. No steps have ever been taken to obtain a discharge. The Court by its judgment finds that the plea of proceedings pending is a complete bar to the action as fully as the plea of discharge would have been. But as we have seen, the stay, where granted, is only to obtain time to get a discharge and plead it in defense. Why should any stay be ordered if the plea of proceedings pending is a complete defense, entitling the defendant to a judgment for his costs? The tenor of every decision is that where proceedings in insolvency are pending, the proper Court (United States District Court) may restrain the creditor from further proceedings until the debtor has had an opportunity of applying for his discharge; for it was held In re Rosenberg, 3 B. R. 81, that if the discharge be refused the stay ceases, and the creditor is entitled to prosecute his action to judgment.

J. H. Todd, for Respondents.

Section twenty-one of the Bankrupt Act of 1867 has reference to two classes of creditors of the bankrupt: first, creditors who prove their debts in the bankruptcy proceedings; second, creditors who do not prove their debts, but whose debts are provable under the provisions of said Act. The first class are, under the provisions of the section, not allowed to maintain any suit at law, etc., for the debts proven. The second class are not allowed, by the provisions of the second clause of section twenty-one, to prosecute to judgment any suit on the debts which are provable without permission of the Bankrupt Court, until the question as to the bankrupt's final discharge be determined. The pendency of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and the proof made therein by the creditor, if not a matter in bar, must, at the very least, be a matter in abatement of any action which the creditor may bring for the debt which he has proven. It was not the intention of Congress that a creditor should be allowed to pursue two remedies at the same time and in different tribunals for the same indebtedness. The State Courts must take notice of the laws of Congress and be governed thereby, so far as they may affect the rights of the parties litigant in the State Courts. The Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, are the supreme law of the land, and the Judges of every State are bound thereby. (Art. VI, Const. of the U. S.)

The first clause of the twenty-first section of the Bankrupt Act is not ambiguous; it requires no judicial interpretation to explain its meaning. The question is not what should have been, but what are the provisions of the Act in reference to the effect of proving a debt by a creditor in the proceeding in bankruptcy. In Haxtun v. Corse, 2 Barb. Chan. Rep. 532, Chancellor WALWORTH held that by the mere act of proving the debt, for the recovery of which proceedings were pending in the State Courts, such proceedings were absolutely surrendered, relinquished, and discontinued; and the Chancellor quotes with approbation the opinion of Judge Ware, in the case of Everett v. Derby, 5 Law Rep. 225. The language of the Bankrupt Act is: "That no creditor, proving his debt or claim, shall be allowed to maintain a suit at law or in equity therefor against the bankrupt, but shall be deemed to have waived all right of action and suit against the bankrupt, and all proceedings already commenced shall be deemed to be discharged."

If, then, "the proving of the debts operates as a surrender ipso jure of the action, and is a bar to any further proceedings in that suit," by parity of reason, such proof must be a bar to an action in the State Courts to recover the debt so proven.

The Chancellor, in Haxtun v. Corse, 2 Barb. Chan. R. 529, gave, as his opinion, with considerable hesitation, that the proof of a debt in proceedings in bankruptcy would not bar the creditor who proved the debt of all right to the future acquisitions of the bankrupt; but that was not the real point at issue in that case. The real point at issue was, whether the proof of the debt operated ipso jure as a surrender of a judgment for the same demand rendered before the debt was proven; and the Chancellor, without hesitation, held that it did so operate.

There is a difference between the English statutes in respect to the effect of the proof of a debt against a bankrupt's estate and the bankrupt law of the United States on the same subject.

The fourteenth section of the statute, 49 Geo. III, Chap. 121, declared that the proving of a debt under a commission against the bankrupt should be deemed an election by the creditor to take the benefit of such commission in respect to the debt so proven. By the United States Bankrupt Act, the creditor proving his debt shall be deemed to have waived all right of action and suit against the bankrupt.

The provisions of the Bankrupt Act against the right of a creditor who has proven his debt to maintain an action therefor, is much more pointed and stringent than the English statute on the same subject.

If the proof of a debt be a defense in any Court, why not in a State Court? It was held to be a defense in Haxtun v. Corse, hereinbefore cited. The cases cited by the counsel for appellant were those arising under the second clause of the twenty-first section of cases arising under the clause of the thirty-third section above referred to. United States District Courts have jurisdiction in their respective districts only. (Bankrupt Act, Sec. 1.)

In case the creditor of a bankrupt should be without the jurisdiction of the United States District Court having cognizance of the bankruptcy proceedings, the bankrupt might be without remedy against the claim of such creditor, although he may have proven his debt and thereby become entitled to a dividend from the bankrupt's estate. If the United States District Court have no jurisdiction of the person of the creditor, it could make no effective order restraining him from pursuing his action in the State Court.

The proof of a debt by a bankrupt creditor is ipso jure a surrender of a judgment for the same debt, and available in a State Court. (See Haxtun v. Corse, above cited.) And, as respondent claims, it is also an absolute waiver of all right of action for the same debt, and is available as a defense in a State Court in an action for the same debt.

A creditor whose debt is provable—not proven—does not waive his right of action against the bankrupt; but any action such creditor may commence to enforce the collection of the debt, may be restrained upon the application of the bankrupt to await the determination of the Court in bankruptcy on the question of the discharge.

This restraining order should, of course, be made by the Court in bankruptcy, which has jurisdiction of the matter, and not by the State Court.

The proving by a creditor of the debt not created by fraud is a defense available in any Court. The fact that the debt is provable, though not proven, is a matter entitling the bankrupt to a temporary restraining order from the Court in bankruptcy against the creditor until the question of the bankrupt's discharge be determined therein.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

This action was brought on a promissory note. The defendants, among other defenses, alleged that they, as partners, commenced proceedings in bankruptcy; that they were duly adjudged bankrupts; that the proceedings are still pending; and that the plaintiff appeared in those proceedings and proved the indebtedness of the defendants to him on the note in suit. The demurrer which was interposed to this defense, raises the only question in the case.

It is provided by section twenty-one of the Act of 1867, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States (14 U. S. Stats. 526), "that no creditor proving his debt or claim shall be allowed to maintain any suit at law or in equity therefor against the bankrupt, but shall be deemed to have waived all right of action and suit against the bankrupt," etc. It is clear, from this provision, that a creditor who has proved his debt in the bankruptcy proceedings, cannot maintain an action on the same demand against the bankrupt. His right of action in the State Court, as well as in the Federal Courts, is waived. The purposes of the Act would, in a great measure, be defeated were the creditor permitted to recover a judgment on his debt, after having proved it in the bankruptcy proceedings. It is the intent of the Act that the Federal tribunals shall have the exclusive control of the assets of the bankrupt, and shall distribute the proceeds among his creditors. A judgment in a State Court, on a debt which has been proved in the proceedings in bankruptcy, would be useless unless it gave the creditor some lien or priority that he otherwise would not possess, or enabled him to enforce the payment of the judgment without regard to the proceedings in bankruptcy. A discharge in bankruptcy would be no relief to the debtor, if the creditor, after participating in those proceedings, were entitled to maintain an action on his debt.

Points decided.

No question arises in the case, as to whether a creditor can maintain an action, when the debtor has unduly delayed in procuring his discharge, or when the discharge has been denied, or when he has been guilty of fraud in the proceedings in bankruptcy; for no facts of that character are alleged or proved.

Judgment affirmed.

E. S. EMERSON v. ELIAS SANSOME

SHERIFF'S DEED DOES NOT CONVEY AFTER-ACQUIRED INTEREST.—A Sheriff's deed transfers to the purchaser all the interest the execution debtor had in the land sold at the date of the levy, but no subsequently acquired right or interest of such debtor.

EXECUTION DEBTOR NOT ESTOPPED FROM SETTING UP AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE.—An execution sale and Sheriff's deed does not estop the execution debtor from asserting a subsequently acquired interest or right of possession to the land sold, as against the right of possession and interest sold and transferred by the Sheriff's deed.

POSSESSORY RIGHTS UNDER THE UNITED STATES HOMESTEAD LAW.—Where the possessory claim of a settler on public land was sold out on execution, and afterwards he entered the same land as a homestead, under the Act of Congress of May 20th, 1862; held, that he had by his homestead entry acquired from the paramount proprietor a right and interest in the land which he did not possess at the time of levy and sale, and that this newly-acquired right and interest vested an independent right of possession, which would constitute a complete and valid defense to an action of ejectment based on the Sheriff's deed.

RENTS AND PROFITS OF POSSESSORY CLAIM SOLD BY SHERIFF.—Where the possessory claim of a settler on public land was sold out on execution and he afterwards entered the same land as a homestead, under the Act of Congress of May 20th, 1862; held, that, though the purchaser under the Sheriff's deed might not be entitled to the possession of the land, which had so been entered as homestead, he was entitled to the rents and profits for so long as the settler occupied the land intermediate the Sheriff's deed and homestead entry.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, San Luis Obispo County.

Argument for Appellant.

This was an action of ejectment for a piece of land in San Luis Obispo County, commenced in March, 1869. It appears that in July, 1868, two judgments were recovered by the plaintiff in a Justice's Court against the defendant, who had settled upon and was in possession of the land in question; that in August following the Sheriff, on executions duly issued on such judgments, levied upon and sold out all the right, title, interest, and claim of the defendant in and to the same; that the plaintiff became the purchaser and received the Sheriff's deed in February, 1869; that the defendant had continued in possession; and that in February, 1870, and after the commencement of the suit, defendant filed his declaration of intention to hold the same as a homestead right, in the United States Land Office, pursuant to the Acts of Congress to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, of May 20th, 1862, and March 21st, 1864.

There having been findings and judgment in the Court below in favor of the plaintiff for possession of the land and two hundred dollars damages, for withholding the same, the defendant appealed.

L. D. Latimer, for Appellant.

It is well settled that a Sheriff's deed on execution conveys only the right, title, or interest that the judgment debtor had at the time of the levy of the execution. No title or interest that defendant acquired after the sale passed by the Sheriff's deed. (Montgomery v. Whiting, Oct. Term, 1870; Freeman v. Caldwell, 10 Watts. 9; England v. Clark, 4 Scam. 486.)

Nor was the defendant estopped from showing an after-acquired title or right as against the plaintiff. The deed of the Sheriff was not the deed of the defendant. The Sheriff could not have bound the defendant by covenant; but there was no covenant, and hence no estoppel. (Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 628.)

Whatever the character of defendant's possession may have been prior to his entry of the land as a homestead, it is plain that from the time of such entry his possession was rightful. By the entry he connected himself with the original source of title—the United States—and acquired an interest in the land, and the right to its possession. By such entry he added to his naked possession the absolute right of possession; and there being no estoppel, he was entitled in this action to assert such subsequently acquired right.

William J. Graves, for Respondent.

The purchaser under an execution, in an ejectment against the defendant in the execution or one claiming under him, need not show any other title than a judgment, execution, and Sheriff's deed; and defendant will not be permitted to controvert such title by showing it to be defective or by setting up a better outstanding title in a third person. (Lessee of Cooper v. Galbraith, 3 Wash. C. C. 550; 3 Caines, 188; 10 John. 223; 2 Yeates, 443; 5 Binney, 270; 4 John. 22; 2 Binney, 463.)

The homestead entry conferred no title on Sansome. By his application he merely placed himself in the predicament of a person who could acquire a homestead right. He could acquire no title until he should have resided upon the land continuously, or cultivated it for the period of five years. By filing his affidavit, and paying fees and commissions, he had taken merely the preliminary steps; and at the very time he did these things his position on the land, the dwelling where he resided, the improvements, and everything belonging to him on it, and which would enable him to assert a homestead claim, belonged to Emerson by virtue of the execution sale. True, no after-acquired title would pass by the Sheriff's deed, but every right and all title that Sansome then had did pass, and as unmistakably he had the possession which is presumed to be rightful, this passed to Emerson. Before, he was a preëmtor, and had placed himself in as near connection with the legal title as he did by turning his preëmption claim into a homestead claim. In either case his right was only inceptive. (Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The Sheriff's deed of February 13th, 1869, transferred to the plaintiff all the interest the defendant had in the land in controversy at the date of the levy of the executions thereon, under which the sale thereof was subsequently made to plaintiff by the Sheriff, and no subsequently-acquired right or interest in such lands by the defendant could inure to the plaintiff as purchaser at such execution sale. Nor would such sale, followed by a Sheriff's deed to the purchaser, estop the defendant from asserting a subsequently-acquired interest or right of possession in such lands, as against the right of possession of an interest therein sold under execution and transferred by the Sheriff's deed.

It is apparent from the record that at the date of the levy of the executions by the Sheriff, and at the date of the sale of the lands thereunder—also at the date of the Sheriff's deed to the purchaser at such sale—the demanded premises were public lands of the United States; that defendant was in possession thereof, claiming right of possession merely, without title or any vested interest therein, as against the United States. This possessory claim of defendant, and nothing more, passed to the plaintiff by virtue of his purchase on execution sale and subsequent deed of the Sheriff. By the subsequent entry of the same lands as a homestead by the defendant, on the 1st of February, 1870, under the Act of Congress of May 20th, 1862, he acquired, as I understand this Act of Congress, an interest in the lands and the absolute right of possession from the paramount proprietor, which possession, if actually continued for the period of five consecutive years from the date of the entry, will, under the Act above cited, entitle him to a patent therefor, on proof being made that he has resided on or cultivated the same for such terms of five years, without further payment of money. The defendant then, by his homestead entry, acquired from the paramount proprietor a right and interest in the lands which he did not possess at the date of the levy and sale on execution, and this newly-acquired right and interest is in no way connected with or dependent upon his prior possession or interest which was sold on execution against him, but is an independent, substantive interest, vesting an independent, absolute right of possession acquired directly from the paramount proprietor. This interest and right of possession presented by defendant's supplemental answer is a complete and valid defense to the plaintiff's suit for possession, based upon his acquisition of the defendant's former simple possessory claim. I am of opinion, therefore, that, upon the facts as presented by the findings of the Court below, judgment should have been rendered for defendant upon the issue as to the right of possession tendered by his supplemental or amended answer.

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

This, however, could not relieve the defendant from his responsibility to plaintiff for the rents and profits of the premises from the date of the Sheriff's deed to plaintiff up to the date of defendant's homestead entry of the premises or for so much of such period as defendant occupied the same.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

CORNELIUS CARPENTER v. H. S. SARGENT.

PURCHASE OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LAND — TIME OF FIRST PAYMENT.— Under section one of the Act of April 27th, 1863, for the sale of certain lands of the State (Stats. 1863, p. 591), the first payment must be made within thirty days after the record in the County Surveyor's office of the approval of the Surveyor General; and a failure by the applicant to pay within the thirty days will not be excused on account of a neglect of the County Surveyor to forward to him the approved copy of the survey.

NO EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FIRST PAYMENT ON SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.— The thirty days' time after the record of the Surveyor General's approval of survey, prescribed for the first payment of money by section one of the Act for the sale of swamp and overflowed lands (Stats. 1863, p. 591), cannot be postponed or extended on account of accident, mistake, neglect or inadvertence.

COUNTY TREASURER'S DUTIES — FAILURE TO PAY WITHIN TIME ON SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LAND — ABANDONMENT.— A County Treasurer is not bound to accept money tendered after the time prescribed by law (Stats. 1863, p. 591, Sec. 1) for the first payment on a proposed purchase of swamp and overflowed lands, but may properly treat the proposed purchase as abandoned.

ORIGINAL application to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandamus.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

J. H. Budd, for Petitioner.

It was the imperative duty of the County Treasurer, on presentation of the approved survey, to "receive the amount, whether in full or in part, so provided by law, and the fee for the certificate of purchase, indorsing his receipt thereof upon the back of said certificate of location," etc. (Statute of April 27th, 1863, Sec. 14.) The applicant forfeited no rights by failure to present the approved copy within thirty days after the record of the approval, especially when, as in this case, he presented the same as soon as received by him. The refusal of the Treasurer to receive the money tendered does not affect any right of the applicant to purchase the land mentioned in the approved survey. It is a well-established principle that where an individual, in the prosecution of a right, does everything which the law requires him to do, and he fails to attain his right by the misconduct or neglect of a public officer, the law will protect him. (Lytle v. The State of Arkansas, 9 How. 833.) The Treasurer is not invested with judicial authority. The statutes make it his duty, on presentation of the approved survey, to receive the amount therein shown to be due the State. In such matter he acts in a ministerial capacity. Questions as to conflicting claims, which may arise by reason of his receiving the purchase money for the land, are to be determined in another manner, and by a tribunal especially constituted for that purpose.

Hall & Montgomery, for Respondent.

The design of the legislative direction to the County Surveyor to forward the approved copy of the survey may have been to put the applicant upon early notice; but it cannot be construed to mean that the date of the receipt of such copy shall be the point of time from which the limitation of thirty days shall begin to run. If such had been the legislative intention, it would have been so declared in plain terms. The forwarding of the copy was a means used by the State, ex gratia, to facilitate compliance with the thirty days' condition; but it was not meant to substitute the date of the receipt of the copy for the date of the record of the approval, as the initial point of the thirty days. It was for the applicant to be on his guard, and on his own motion to be advised of the event on which his obligation would arise, and not have awaited the Surveyor's action. An interpretation of the statute contrary to this would enable the County Surveyor to have fixed terms of sale according to his will, in opposition to the will of the Legislature. The records of the County Surveyor's office were, and are, at all times

"open to public inspection," and it is not asserted that the relator ever resorted to them for information between the date of the forwarding of his application to the Surveyor General and December 4th, 1865, when the time for payment had elapsed. The relator's offer was accepted by the State on the condition that he made the offer good by payment within the given period. No contract was effected until payment, and without it the State's acceptance of the offer was determined by its own terms. (People v. Supervisors of Lake County, 33 Cal. 487.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an application for a mandamus to compel the respondent, as County Treasurer of San Joaquin County, to accept from the petitioner the first payment for a quarter section of swamp and overflowed land, and to execute a proper receipt therefor. The petitioner made his application to the County Surveyor on the 18th of August, 1865, in the form prescribed by the Act of April 27th, 1863, (Stats. 1863, p. 591), to purchase the land from the State. The County Surveyor noted the application and proceeded to make the survey, which was completed on the 11th of September, 1865, on which day the survey and other necessary papers were forwarded to the Surveyor General for his approval, and were received by him and filed in his office on the twenty-second of the same month. On the 30th of October, 1865, the Surveyor General approved the application and survey, and forwarded an approved copy of the survey to the County Surveyor, which was received and recorded by the latter officer November 4th, 1865. On the 2d of January, 1866, the County Surveyor delivered to the applicant the approved copy of the survey, and on the same day the applicant presented said approved copy to the then County Treasurer, and tendered to him the first installment of the purchase money and interest on the remainder, as required by law; but the County Treasurer refused to accept the money or to receipt therefor, on the ground that the statute required the payment to be made within thirty days after "the record of approval of survey or location by the Surveyor General in the County Surveyor's office," as provided by the first section of the Act of April 27th, 1863. The first question to be determined is, whether the refusal of the then County Treasurer to accept the money was justifiable; for it is obvious that if he properly refused to receive it, nothing has since occurred which renders it incumbent on his successor, the present respondent, to accept it. Section first of the Act expressly requires the first payment to be made within thirty days after the record in the County Surveyor's office of the approval of the Surveyor General. It provides for no excuses and makes no exception founded on mistake, inadvertence, or inevitable accident. Section seven makes it the duty of the County Surveyor "immediately upon the receipt from the Surveyor General of any approved copy of survey of swamp or tide lands, to forward the same to the applicant." In this case the applicant did not tender the money to the County Treasurer until after the lapse of fifty-nine days from the time when the approval of the Surveyor General was recorded in the County Surveyor's office; and the only excuse given for the delay is the neglect of the County Surveyor to forward to him the approved copy of the survey within the thirty days. But this neglect of the County Surveyor does not excuse the delay. The books of his office were at all times open to inspection, and exhibited the date of the record of the Surveyor General's approval; and though the statute make it his duty immediately to forward to the applicant the approved copy of the survey, there is no provision from which it can be reasonably implied that a neglect of this duty will defer the time of payment beyond the thirty days. On the contrary, there is no provision whatever for any contingency whereby the payment may be postponed. The Legislature has prescribed the terms and conditions on which these lands can be purchased, and persons seeking to purchase must comply substantially with them. If the first installment of the purchase money be not paid within the time required by law, the officers and agents of the State may well treat the proposed purchase as abandoned. If the rule were otherwise, there would be no fixed period at which it could be ascertained whether the applicant had abandoned the contemplated purchase or had only delayed making the payment on account of some accident, mistake, or neglect. This would lead to the greatest perplexity and confusion in the disposition of the lands, and would tend greatly to increase litigation. It is said, however, that the County Treasurer is not a judicial officer with authority to decide between contesting claimants, and that his duty being purely ministerial he has no right to refuse to accept payment for these lands, because not made strictly within the time limited by the statute. But though he has no authority to decide upon conflicting claims, he is, nevertheless, to be governed by the statute in the discharge of his duties. He is clearly not bound to accept payment after the time expressly limited by the statute within which it may be made. If it was incumbent on him to accept it thirty days after the proper time had elapsed, it would be equally his duty to accept it five or ten years later. There is no reasonable interpretation of the statute which would sanction such a practice.

The application for the writ is denied and the petition dismissed.

WILLIAM S. LEWDEN.

ALLEGATION IN COMPLAINT.—In an action by the owner of a toll road against another for damages caused by obstructing the public highway leading to his road, the plaintiff must allege that his right to collect tolls has been disturbed, or it will be presumed that he has received no injury by reason of the obstruction.

OBSTRUCTION OF A HIGHWAY A NUISANCE.—The obstruction of a public highway is a common nuisance.

IDEM — ACTION BY PRIVATE PERSON.—A private person has no cause of action by reason of such obstruction, unless he has suffered some special damage. In order to maintain an action for such damage, it must be such as might legitimately flow from the nuisance.

COMPLAINT IN SUIT FOR DAMAGES FROM NUISANCE.—Special damages to private persons, from nuisance in obstructing a public highway, must be particularly stated in the complaint. The means by which the damages were caused must be alleged in the complaint.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, County of Shasta.

The plaintiff demurred to the complaint on the ground that it does not state a cause of action, and the demurrer was overruled. Upon the trial judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

W. S. Long and A. P. Dudley, for Appellants. Beatty & Denson, of Counsel.

The Court below erred in not sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, because the complaint shows only an alleged public nuisance, and shows no cause of special complaint on the part of plaintiff. (Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156.) The complaint makes an allegation of injury; but that injury is not based on allegations of facts which would naturally tend to produce injury. The obstruction of a highway does not necessarily injure any turnpike or toll road in the vicinity. On the contrary, it might greatly benefit such toll road; and this would seem to be the case here, for after the erection of the obstruction the toll road took all the travel between the points of its termini, and its business was on the increase, as appears upon the face of the complaint.

A pleading must not state merely the conclusion that plaintiff is injured, but the facts which would show to the mind of the Court that, being true, injury would result.

J. S. Follensbee, J. Chadbourne, and E. & C. A. Garter, for Respondent.

The Court below did not err in not sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, for the reason that the complaint shows both a public and a private nuisance. The complaint shows that the plaintiff's road constitutes a connected part of a thoroughfare for public travel between Shasta and Weaverville, named therein; that the public travel passes over plaintiff's road, when not interrupted; that the plaintiff's use and enjoyment of property in said road consists in the revenue from the collection of tolls thereon; that the defendants stopped up the road, by placing obstructions across the same, and that by means of these obstructions the plaintiff cannot have the use and enjoyment of their said property; that defendants also interrupted the public travel on plaintiff's road, by demanding and collecting toll on the public highway connecting with plaintiff's toll road, thereby showing a nuisance as against the plaintiff. The case made by the complaint is governed by the law and decision in the case of Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156; see, also, Pr. Act, Sec. 249.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The only questions in the case arise upon the demurrer to the complaint. The plaintiff is the owner of a turnpike road leading from Lewiston, in Trinity County, to a certain point where it intersects a public highway in Shasta County, and possesses the right to collect tolls on that turnpike. The defendants have wrongfully placed a toll gate on the public highway, about a half mile from the point of intersection of the public highway with the plaintiff's turnpike, and have demanded and collected tolls of persons who pass along the highway with their teams, vehicles, etc., and threaten to maintain the gate and collect tolls, etc. The plaintiff alleges that by means of the gate the highway is greatly obstructed, and that by reason thereof, the plaintiff cannot "have or enjoy its said toll road or turnpike as it ought to be [have] done, and otherwise might and would have done; and has been and is by means of the premises deprived of the use, benefit and advantage thereof," and that the maintenance of the toll gate by the defendant will cause great and irreparable damage to the plaintiff. It is also alleged in the complaint "that under and by virtue of said incorporation (the incorporation of the plaintiff) the plaintiff obtained the franchise or right to collect tolls on said road or turnpike, and has, since its completion, enjoyed said right, privilege, and franchise without any interruption, disturbance, or interference whatever."

The complaint, tested by the familiar rule that a pleading is to be construed most strongly against the pleader, shows no cause of action; for if the plaintiff's franchise—its right to collect tolls—has not been interrupted or disturbed, no injury has been occasioned by reason of the acts complained of.

The obstruction of a public highway is a common nuisance. A private person has no cause of action by reason of such obstruction, unless he has suffered some special damage. The special damage must be such as might legitimately flow from the nuisance. It is a further rule of pleading, that such special damages must be particularly stated. (1 Chit. Plead. 347; Butler v. Kent, 19 Johns. 228; Squier v. Gould, 14 Wend. 159; Bogart v. Burkhalter, 2 Barb. 525; Cole v. Swanston, 1 Cal. 51; Gay v. Winter, 34 Cal. 153.) It was held in Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 102, that when the damages are special—that is, such as do not necessarily arise, or are not implied by law, from the act complained of—the facts out of which the damages arise must be averred in the complaint. The maintenance of a toll gate upon the public highway, mentioned in the complaint, did not necessarily lessen its use as a highway; and if such were the case, it does not necessarily follow that thereby the travel on the plaintiff's road was diminished and the tolls lessened. The plaintiff should have stated the facts out of which the damages arose—the means by which the damages were caused. The plaintiff has not alleged that any one was prevented, by means of the defendants' toll gate, or in consequence of their having demanded or collected tolls, from traveling upon the plaintiff's turnpike, on paying the proper tolls therefor. The complaint, in that respect, is defective. (Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 146.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

INSOLVENT'S CONVEYANCE TO CERTAIN CREDITORS, FOR THEMSELVES AND OTHERS, NOT "ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS."—Where Stanford, being in insolvent circumstances and largely indebted, conveyed, by an instrument in writing, certain valuable personal property to five persons, as a committee appointed by and representing themselves, and about ninety-five of his other creditors, reserving in himself a right to redeem in six days; and, at the same time, he delivered possession of the property, and the said creditors gave him receipts in full; held, that the instrument and transaction was not an "assignment for the benefit of creditors," within the meaning and prohibition of section thirty-nine of the insolvent law (Stats. 1852, p. 69).

PREFERENCES OF CREDITORS BY INSOLVENTS.—There is nothing in section thirty-nine of the insolvent law (Stats. 1852, p. 69) prohibiting an insolvent debtor from conveying his property absolutely, or by way of security, directly to one or more of his creditors, to the exclusion of the remainder.

INSOLVENT ACT, SECTION THIRTY-NINE—"ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS."—Section thirty-nine of the insolvent law (Stats. 1852, p. 69) was aimed wholly at "assignments for the benefit of creditors;" but a conveyance to the creditor himself is not an "assignment," in the sense of the statute.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

C. P. Stanford, at the time he executed the instrument referred to in the opinion (August, 1869), was carrying on the Coldstream Sawmill, in Placer County. The plaintiffs to whom, and the other persons for whose benefit also, he made the conveyance, were his employés. Among his other creditors was "The Contract and Finance Company," which, about the time of the transfer above referred to, commenced a suit against him, in the Sixth District Court for Sacramento County, for thirty-one thousand five hundred and ninety-two dollars and eighty-seven cents. An attachment was issued and transmitted to the defendant, the Sheriff of Placer County, who levied upon and took into his possession and out of the possession of the plaintiffs, the property so conveyed to them, consisting of lumber, cattle, wagons, saws, and other personal property, estimated at six thousand eight hundred and sixty-four dollars and ninety-seven cents.

Plaintiffs then commenced this action against the Sheriff for a return of said property or its value, and damages. On the trial, after they had presented their proofs, defendant moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the transfer was void under section thirty-nine of the Insolvent Act, as an assignment for the benefit of creditors. The motion being sustained and judgment entered for defendant, and motion for a new trial overruled, plaintiffs appealed.

Fellows & Norton, for Appellants.

A debtor has an undoubted right to convey all his property to any one of his creditors, in satisfaction of his debt; and there is nothing in the insolvent law to prohibit such a preference. (Dana v. Stanford, 10 Cal. 275; Morganthau v. Harris, 12 Cal. 247; Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 474; Gladwin v. Gladwin, 13 Cal. 332; Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 242; Le Cacheaux v. Cutter, 6 Cal. 519.)

But, we submit, that the instrument in writing offered by the plaintiffs was not, tested by the spirit, intent, and true meaning of the law, an "assignment." (Treadwell v. Davis, 34 Cal. 601.) It was a chattel mortgage. (Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 414.)

S. W. Sanderson, for Respondent.

Stanford being insolvent, the assignment in question was void under section thirty-nine of the insolvent law, as against the Contract and Finance Company, which was a creditor of Stanford at the date of the assignment, and therefore in a position to attack it. (Chever v. Hays, 3 Cal. 471; Adams v.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

Wood, 8 Cal. 152; Morganthaw v. Harris, 12 Cal. 245.) The instrument was not a mortgage, as contended upon the other side, but an assignment within the meaning of the insolvent law, because it created a trust in favor of third persons. (Dana v. Stanford, 10 Cal. 269; Wellington v. Sedgwick, 12 Cal. 469.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The only question in this case is whether the instrument from C. P. Stanford to the plaintiffs is void under section thirty-nine of the Act of May 4th, 1852, for the relief of insolvent debtors and protection of creditors. (Stats. 1852, p. 69.)

It appears that Stanford, being in insolvent circumstances and largely indebted to about one hundred laborers, including the plaintiffs, proposed to turn over to them certain personal property in satisfaction of, or as security for, their several demands; that, thereupon, the laborers held a meeting, acceded to the proposition, and appointed the plaintiffs as a committee to accept the transfer in behalf of the whole; that, in pursuance of this arrangement, the instrument in question was executed and delivered by Stanford, accompanied by an immediate transfer of the possession of the property to the plaintiffs; that, upon the execution and delivery of the instrument, all the laborers gave to Stanford receipts in full for their respective demands.

This instrument purports, on its face, to have been made in consideration of "ten thousand dollars, more or less money due to the men whose names are hereunto annexed as creditors, for labor performed;" and then proceeds to convey the property absolutely to plaintiffs, "a committee appointed by the creditors, whose names are appended hereto, to hold said property in trust for them, * * * reserving to myself the right to redeem said property within six days from this date, by paying to the parties whose names are hereto annexed the sum of money set opposite each man's name." It further appears that no redemption was made within the six days; and the defendant, as Sheriff of Placer County, seized the property under attachments issued at the suit of other of Stanford's creditors, who claim that the transfer to the plaintiffs was an assignment in trust for creditors, within the meaning of section thirty-nine of the Act above cited, and was, therefore, void.

It is quite clear that if the instrument had been made directly to all the creditors, whose names are appended to it, it would have come fully and precisely within the principles decided in Dana v. Stanford, 10 Cal. 269, and would have been upheld as a valid conveyance. There is nothing in section thirty-nine of the insolvent law prohibiting an insolvent debtor from conveying his property absolutely, or by way of security, directly to one or more of his creditors, to the exclusion of the remainder, as was decided in Dana v. Stanford, and several subsequent cases. That section was not intended to abridge the right of an insolvent debtor to convey his property to one or more of his creditors, in satisfaction of, or as a security for, their demands, but was aimed wholly at "assignments" for the benefit of creditors; and a conveyance to the creditor himself is not an "assignment" in the sense of the statute. The policy which dictated this section, and the character of assignments which it was intended to forbid, are discussed, with learning and ability, by Justice Field, in Dana v. Stanford; and I fully assent to the conclusions at which he arrived. In my opinion, the instrument in question here is not an "assignment" in the sense of this section, as expounded in Dana v. Stanford, nor within the evils which it was intended to prevent. This conveyance is made directly to a portion of the creditors; and so far as their rights are concerned, the case is fully and clearly within the decision in Dana v. Stanford. If any part of it is void, because in contravention of the statute, it is only that portion which relates to the other creditors, whose names are appended to it, but who are not parties to it; and if void as to them, it is, nevertheless, valid as to the plaintiffs, whose rights are readily severable from those of the other creditors. As to them, it is a conveyance to them directly, in payment of, or as a security for, their several demands, which can be easily separated from the claims of the other creditors. The nonsuit was, therefore, improperly granted, even though it be conceded that the instrument was void, so far as it was intended to protect the rights of other creditors.

But, in my opinion, no portion of it is void. It is not an "assignment" in the sense of the statute, but is either an absolute sale and conveyance, in satisfaction of the enumerated debts, with a right to the vendor to repurchase within the stipulated time, or it is a mortgage made to the plaintiffs, partly to secure their own debts, and partly in trust to secure the demands of the other enumerated creditors. In either event, the transaction is wholly different, both in form and in its legal effect, from an assignment. If it be an absolute sale, with a right to repurchase, the title vested absolutely in the plaintiffs, and the debts due to the enumerated creditors, were wholly and finally extinguished. On the other hand, if it be a chattel mortgage, the title of the mortgagee became absolute at law, on condition broken, with a right of the mortgagor to redeem, under appropriate proceedings in equity. These are not elements in an assignment for the benefit of creditors. In whatever light, there-

ALEXANDER R. WALSH v. GEORGE A. HILL, JENNINGS T. SHELBY, L. M. BURSON, AND A. E. FRASER.

FINDING AGAINST EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY CONTRARY TO STIPULATION.—

Where a finding of fact was supported by the testimony of only one witness, and his testimony, besides being open to suspicion on other grounds, was directly contradicted by the stipulation of the parties attached to the statement: Held, that such finding was against evidence.

POSSESSION OF SPECIFIC LAND WITHIN LARGE INCLOSURE.—A general inclosure of a large tract of land is not sufficient to constitute an actual, exclusive possession of a specific parcel within it, when it appears that much of the land within the inclosure is not claimed, and much of it is in the actual occupancy of parties claiming and holding adversely.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

This was an action of ejectment for a tract of about twenty acres of land, on what is known as the "Potrero Nuevo," in the City and County of San Francisco. It was originally commenced in the Twelfth District Court, but was afterward, on account of the disqualification of the San Francisco Judges to try Potrero cases, transferred to the Third District Court of Alameda County. There having been findings and judgment for plaintiff, and motion for new trial overruled, defendants Shelby, Burson, and Fraser appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Walter Van Dyke, for Appellants.

Shafter, Southard & Seawell, for Respondent.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

On the former appeal of this case (38 Cal. 481), two points were settled: First — That the deed from Crowell to Mason, Bensley, and Himrod, of 15th December, 1853, embraced the land in controversy. Second — That neither plaintiff nor those through whom he derives title, prior to the commencement of this suit, as shown by the evidence on the former trial, ever had constructive possession of any portion of the demanded premises. The question of actual possession in plaintiff or his grantors, beyond the half acre leased by Mason to Garagnon in 1861, was not passed upon by this Court, as the Court below had not found such actual possession, but constructive possession, of the residue of the entire tract described in the deed, by virtue of this half-acre lease and the entry of the tenant into the actual possession of the leased premises.

On the retrial, it was "stipulated and agreed that the testimony and proceedings in the former trial should be considered as taken and had in this trial, as the same appears in the printed transcript on said appeal, and on file herein, the same as in the former trial, * * * with permission to either party to introduce additional testimony."

The cause was tried before the Court without a jury. Additional testimony was introduced by each party, and the Court made special findings of facts, and rendered judgment against defendants Benson, Shelby, and Fraser, and in favor of plaintiff, for all that portion of the tract of land described in the complaint south of Mariposa street, from which judgment, and also from a subsequent order of the Court denying said defendant's motion for a new trial, comes this appeal.

The points upon which appellants rely on this appeal are: First — That "the testimony was insufficient to support the findings; that in August, 1854, or at any other time, Mason, Bensley, and others leased to Snow and others, or to any one, the land claimed by them within the inclosure, so far as relates to the Shelby tract, or the land in controversy, or that the parties mentioned in said lease ever went into the possession of the Shelby tract, or land in controversy, or were on said tract in any manner or form;" and that "the evidence, on the contrary, shows that the said pretended lease does not cover or include any portion of the Shelby tract or land in controversy." Second—That "the evidence fails to show that plaintiff and his cotenants, Bensley and Mason, were ever in the actual possession of the Shelby tract or land in controversy, or that they claimed the same in good faith."

The findings of the Court to which the above exceptions are directed were the seventh and tenth, which are as follows:

"Seventh—On the 18th of August, 1854, said Mason, Bensley, and Himrod executed and delivered to one H. A. Snow, A. L. Brewster, Meredith Brier, and W. S. Mann a lease of the land claimed by them within the said inclosure. These parties entered upon the land under the lease, and occupied a house upon it known as the Farrington, or Ludlum, house. This house was not upon the land in controversy, but was located to the west of it, and within the general inclosure of land claimed by Mason, Bensley, and Himrod. The parties did not cultivate, improve, or use the land for any purposes. They were generally armed, and occupied the house for the purpose of keeping possession of the leased premises for their lessors, and to keep squatters off of them, and to keep up the fences. In this way they occupied the house for about a year."

The ninth finding, which I have inserted for the purpose of illustrating the tenth, is as follows:

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

"Ninth — In August, 1861, Mason leased part of the land in controversy to one Garagnon, for the term of one year, with the privilege of four years. The tenant immediately entered into actual possession of the leased premises which lie north of the described road, and inclosed the same with a substantial fence, and erected on them a tannery; and he and his grantees under him have since continued to occupy the same, and are still in the occupation of them as tenants of Mason, Bensley, and the plaintiff. In addition to which, Mason and Bensley, and their tenants for them, have kept the eastern line of fence in repair until 1862."

This is the lease and actual possession under it of a part of the premises described in the Crowell deed, and in the complaint from which the Court, on the former trial, found that Mason, Bensley, and plaintiff were in the constructive possession of all the land described in the deed which includes the Shelby tract (the land in controversy) lying south of the "described road." This finding, on the former appeal, was by this Court decided erroneous.

The tenth finding on the retrial, is as follows:

"Tenth — The remainder of said tract, south of the described road to its cross-ditch, was not used for any purpose by the plaintiff or his cotenants Mason and Bensley, but they claimed it in good faith under the deed to them from Crowell, and under this claim of right they continued in actual possession of the premises in controversy by the inclosure, and acts which I have described, from January, 1854; and the plaintiff, as grantee of said Himrod, also continued in such actual possession until August, 1862; which the defendants Benson, Shelby, and Fraser entered without right or title into and upon said tract of land described in the complaint, lying south of the road running near or on the line of Mariposa street, and ousted the said plaintiff and his cotenants, Bensley and Mason, therefrom."

The facts, as I understand them from the findings and evidence not controverted, are briefly as follows: In June, 1852, Farrington and Ludlum, having purchased a brickyard from one Wire, located on what is known as the Potrero Nuevo, in the City and County of San Francisco, undertook to locate a possessory or preëmption claim of one hundred and sixty acres, including the brickyard, by making a description of the land so claimed, and recording the same in the Recorder's office, with a plat thereof. This one hundred and sixty acres so located by Farrington, it is agreed by the parties to this suit, "was bounded on the west by a line on or near and parallel to Potrero avenue, and on the south by a line on or near and parallel with Solono street, and on the east by the westerly line of the tract in controversy. Its northern boundary was Mission Creek."

Some time prior to September, 1853, one Crowell had taken possession of the eastern portion of the Farrington and Ludlum claim, claiming the same adversely to Farrington and Ludlum, under, as he claimed, a deed to him from Roberts and Lange, dated June 3d, 1851. This deed from Roberts and Lange to Crowell, embraced a tract of land off the eastern portion of the Farrington and Ludlum claim, sixty-six and two thirds rods wide, and extended from Mission Creek on the north eight and one third rods south of the south line of the Farrington and Ludlum claim. It does not definitely appear from the evidence when Crowell entered upon this land, whether before or after the record of the Farrington and Ludlum claim, or whether he entered under his deed from Roberts and Lange; but it definitely and conclusively appears that on and for some time prior to the 15th December, 1853, and as early as September 1st, 1853, Crowell and several other parties claiming under him were in the actual occupation of portions of the land covered by the Roberts and Lange deed, holding and claiming the same adversely to Farrington and Ludlum.

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

In September, 1853, there was a piece of vacant unoccupied land, of about twenty acres, between the eastern boundary line of the land covered by the deed of Roberts and Lange to Crowell, and the western boundary line of land in the occupation of one Piercy, no part of which was covered by the Farrington and Ludlum claim. During this month Crowell made claim to this piece of land and, as evidence of his claim, marked the boundaries thereof by running a plow furrow or small ditch along Piercy's west line from the bay southerly about one hundred and forty rods; thence easterly about ten rods to a skeleton fence, which before that time had been constructed by some party not disclosed by the evidence, which at that time ran from the point where the ditch intersected it; thence northerly along or near the easterly line of the Farrington and Ludlum claim to the bay or Mission Creek. At this time one Ellis and some others, claiming under Crowell within the boundaries of the Farrington and Ludlum claim, had inclosed the parcels claimed by them.

On the 15th December, 1853, Crowell conveyed by deed the lands described in the complaint to Bensley, Mason, and Himrod. The land described in this deed included the land so taken up by Crowell in September, 1853, and a small parcel of the northeast portion of the land described in the deed from Roberts and Lange to him of June 3d, 1851. At this time no portion of the land so taken up by Crowell had ever been occupied, cultivated, or improved by him, nor had any acts been performed by him to evidence a possession thereof, other than the construction of the small ditch on its eastern and southern boundaries, hereinbefore referred to. Some five days after this purchase from Crowell by Bensley, Mason, and Himrod, some of the grantees (it does not distinctly appear whether all three joined) purchased an undivided interest in the Farrington and Ludlum claim, and immediately thereafter Bensley, Mason, and Himrod commenced the construction of a substantial post and board fence from the bay southerly along the east line of their purchase from Crowell, which was along the west line of Piercy's claim, near and along the small ditch theretofore constructed by Crowell; and in January, 1854, had extended the same south the whole extent of this easterly line to the ditch on the south line, and continued it in the same direction a short distance further south, until it connected with a line of fence which had been previously built (but when or by whom built does not appear) running from the point of intersection west and north to Mission Creek. And these last lines of fences and Mission Creek and the Bay of San Francisco, with the eastern line of fence so built by Bensley, Mason, and Himrod, formed a general and substantial inclosure for the tract of land described in the complaint—the Farrington and Ludlum claim; the tract described in the deed from Roberts and Lange to Crowell, and also a tract of from twenty to thirty acres immediately south of the Farrington and Ludlum tract. Mason, Bensley, and Himrod kept the eastern line of this general inclosure in repair up to 1862, the time at which appellants entered upon the south half of the land described in the deed from Crowell to Mason, Bensley, and Himrod; but other portions of the fence forming this general inclosure were broken and dilapidated, and not kept up or in repair so as to form an inclosure after January, 1856. The tract of land in controversy, occupied by appellants, embraces that portion of the land described in the complaint and in the deed from Crowell to Mason, Bensley, and Himrod, which lies south of a public road which has crossed the tract, running east and west, since 1853, nearly on the line of Mariposa street. The plaintiff in this case is the successor in interest of Him-rod, the cotenant of Bensley and Mason in the land purchased from Crowell, as hereinbefore stated.

On the former trial, the plaintiff gave in evidence a lease from Mason, one of his cotenants, to one Garagnon, made in August, 1861, of a small parcel of the tract purchased from Crowell, embracing one half acre, located on the bay, north of the above described public road, and proved that Garagnon took immediate, actual possession of the leased premises, built a tannery thereon, and that Garagnon and his assignees had continued to occupy the leased premises ever since. The effect of this lease and occupancy of the lessee under the same were disposed of on the former appeal. On the retrial, plaintiff introduced and read in evidence, against objections of defendants, a lease made by Bensley, Mason, Himrod, Dumarthray, Farrington, and Webster, as lessors, to Snow, Brewster, Brier, and Mann, as lessees, dated August 18th, 1854, of lands described as follows: "All that certain tract or parcel of land lying and being in the City of San Francisco, being part of the tract known as the 'Potrero Nuevo;' that is to say, the tract of land known as the Farrington claim, formerly the Farrington and Ludlum claim, as the same is shown upon a map of said tract on record in the office of the County Recorder of the County of San Francisco. Also, all that tract of about twenty acres lying southerly of and adjoining the said last mentioned tract, the said tracts of land being now closed by a substantial fence."

Plaintiff then introduced evidence tending to show that the lessees immediately entered under the lease, and occupied a house situated about the center of the Farrington and Ludlum claim, called the Ludlum house, and occupied the same about one year, keeping the fences forming the general inclosure heretofore described in repair. As to what these lessees did under said lease, the Court below finds as follows: "The parties did not cultivate, improve, or use the lands for any purposes. They were generally armed, and occupied the house for the purpose of keeping possession of the leased premises for their lessors, and to keep squatters off of them, and to keep up the fences. In this way they occupied the house for about a year."

For the purpose of showing that the lands described in this lease covered and embraced the land in controversy plaintiff called as a witness Frederick Mason, one of the lessors named in the lease, who testified that "at the time this lease was made, this (meaning the land conveyed to himself, Bensley, and Himrod, by Crowell, in December, 1853) was the only land answering the description of the twenty acres lying southerly of and adjoining the Farrington claim;" and on further examination, the same witness testified as follows: "There was no other land, except this in controversy, answering the description of the twenty acres.

* * * At the time of the execution of this lease, I considered this tract in controversy as lying south of the Farrington claim. The lessees did not live on this land; they lived in the Farrington house; they did not put any improvements on the tract in controversy. The west line of the tract in controversy, which is the east line of the Farrington claim, runs nearly north and south."

This is the only evidence contained in the records tending to show that this lease of August 18th, 1854, embraces the lands in controversy. In the statement on motion for a new trial, which was agreed to and signed by the attorneys of the respective parties as correct, occurs the following:

"It was shown by diagrams, and admitted, that the tract known as the Farrington and Ludlum claim, as the same is shown upon a map of said tract on record in the Recorder's Office of the County of San Francisco, was bounded on the west by line on or near and parallel to Potrero avenue, and on the south by a line on or near to and parallel with Solano street, and on the east by the westerly line of the tract in controversy; that Crowell, John Brewster, and others, holding under Crowell, occupied a strip of the eastern part of said Farrington claim, and bordering the tract in controversy on the west; that south of the old Farrington claim, as above, there was a tract inside of the general inclosure of twenty to thirty acres, and that no part of the tract in controversy lies south or southerly of the said Farrington claim; that it lies directly east of it, and separate from the part occupied by the Ludlum house by the said strip in possession of the Crowell party."

Thus, it appears that plaintiff has admitted the incorrectness of the evidence of his witness, Mason, in two vital particulars: First—Mason testified that the land in controversy "was the only land answering the description of the twenty acres lying southerly of and adjoining the Farrington claim." Plaintiff's admission is "that south of the old Farrington claim * * * there was a tract inside of the general inclosure of twenty or thirty acres." Second—Mason testifies that "the tract in controversy lies to the southeast of the Farrington claim;" but plaintiff admits "that no part of the tract in controversy lies south or southerly of said Farrington claim; that it lies directly east of it."

The first paragraph of the seventh finding of the Court is not supported by, but is manifestly against, the evidence. The evidence clearly shows that the lease of the 18th August, 1854, instead of being made by Mason, Bensley, and Himrod to Snow and others, of "the land claimed by them within the said inclosure," was made by Mason, Bensley, Himrod, Dumarthray, Farrington, and Webster, to Snow and others, of the old Farrington and Ludlum claim, and about twenty acres lying southerly of and adjoining the old Farrington and Ludlum claim. This lease did not cover the land in controversy, or any portion thereof. There could, therefore, have been no possession, actual or constructive, on the part of plaintiff or his grantor, or their cotenants, of any portion of the premises in controversy, by virtue of this lease, and the entry and occupancy of the lessees thereunder, as disclosed by the evidence.

It appears from the evidence that the witness, Frederick Mason, claims to be a cotenant with plaintiff in the demanded premises, and had possession of this lease at the former trial. He is interested with plaintiff in the recovery of the demanded premises from appellants; and the fact that this lease was not introduced on the former trial, and no evidence offered in relation thereto, is very suggestive of a knowledge on the part of plaintiff and Mason that the premises described therein did not embrace the land described in the complaint, or any part thereof. On the former trial, plaintiff relied upon his cotenant Mason's lease to Garagnon of the half acre in the northern part of the premises described in the complaint, and the actual possession taken by the lessee of the leased premises in 1861, as sufficient to establish in plaintiff a constructive possession of the entire premises described in the Crowell deed to Mason, Bensley, and Himrod. But this having failed on appeal to this Court, this lease of August, 1854, is on the retrial, sought to perform a like service for plaintiff, not before considered within the range of its powers.

The second point now urged by appellants, that "the evidence fails to show that plaintiff and his cotenants Bensley and Mason, were ever in the actual possession of the Shelby tract or land in controversy," as found by the Court in its tenth finding, I think is well taken. There is no evidence tending to establish that plaintiff or his cotenants, or their grantors, ever occupied, cultivated, or improved one foot of the Shelby tract, the land in controversy. It cannot rationally be claimed that the plow furrow or small ditch made by Crowell in September, 1853, on the east and south lines of the tract, constituted an actual possession of the tract by him, nor can it be reasonably claimed that the construction of a substantial fence only along the east line of the land in controversy by Mason, Bensley, and Himrod, in January, 1854, and keeping the same in repair till 1862, constituted an actual possession, or the subjection of the tract of land, or any portion thereof except that upon which the fence stood, to their will and dominion, to the exclusion of others. And as to the general inclosure, which included the land in controversy, and nearly two hundred acres of other lands not claimed exclusively by plaintiff, his grantor or their cotenants, and much of which, all the time this inclosure was maintained, was in the actual occupancy of various parties claiming and holding adversely to the Farrington and Bensley parties, it would be the extreme of assumption to maintain that this sufficed to subject the premises in controversy to the will and dominion of the then claimants of a portion thereof, to the exclusion of others, or to constitute an actual, exclusive possession of any claimant of a specific parcel within this general inclosure. (Wolfe v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 367, 368; Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 408.)

I am clearly of opinion that the evidence entirely fails to establish either an actual or constructive possession in plaintiff or his grantors of that portion of the premises described in the complaint lying south of the road running east and west on or near the line of Mariposa street, and that the judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial should be reversed and the cause remanded.

So ordered.

F. F. FUQUAY v. J. B. STICKNEY, JOHN WRIGHT,
A. S. LEAVITT, P. IDE, MECHANICS' MILL AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY, D. J. STAPLES,
ALPHEUS BULL, AND THE FIREMAN'S FUND
INSURANCE COMPANY.

MECHANICS' LIENS, AS AGAINST HOLDER OF PRIOR TRUST DEED.—Where an insurance company loaned the owner of a lot and uncompleted building money for the purpose of finishing the building, and took from him a deed of trust conveying the fee, defeasible on the payment of a debt, and afterwards knowingly permitted the building to go on without giving notice that it would not be responsible therefor: held, that under section four of the Mechanics' Lien Law (Stats. 1868, p. 589), the interest in the property held by the insurance company was subject to mechanics' liens for work done and materials furnished after the making of the trust deed.

MECHANICS' LIEN LAW, SECTION FOUR.—LEGISLATIVE POWER.—If the owner of land, or any one claiming an interest in it, knowingly permits buildings and improvements to be erected on it without giving notice that it is done without his consent, it is just that he should be held to have acquiesced therein, as provided in section four of the Mechanics' Lien Law (Stats. 1868, p. 589); and the power of the Legislature to enact that provision is clear.

INTEREST IN LAND CONVEYED BY TRUST DEED FOR MONEY LOANED.—A trust deed of real estate, taken by a person who loans money to the owner, defeasible on payment of the debt, is something more than a mortgage. It conveys the legal title and an interest in the land.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The deed of trust executed by the defendant Stickney to secure the loan made to him by the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, as stated in the opinion, was made to the defendants Staples and Bull, as trustees of that company. The plaintiff and the defendants Wright, Leavitt, Ide, and Mechanics' Mill and Manufacturing Company, were the holders of mechanics' liens for work done and materials furnished after the execution of the trust deed. The defendant Stickney having made default, a decree, finding the amounts of the different liens, and for a foreclosure and sale of the property, was entered by stipulation of the other parties. A sale took place, and the net proceeds — four thousand four hundred and seventy-four dollars and seventy-three cents — an amount insufficient to satisfy all the claims, being brought into Court, on motion of the parties for distribution of the same, the Court ordered that the holders of the mechanics' liens should be first paid, and then the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company. The insurance company appealed from the order.

William H. Patterson, for Appellant.

When the mortgage was given and recorded, all material men and workmen had been paid. No contract was then subsisting for additional work on the building, or the furnishing of other materials: and Stickney, without the consent of the mortgagee, could not afterward create liens which would be entitled to priority over the mortgage. (English v. Foote, 8 Sm. & Mar. 451; Stillman v. Hawes, 7 How. Miss. 423; Farmer's Bank v. Winslow, 3 Minn. 93.) Persons who commenced work and furnished materials subsequent to the mortgage, and with knowledge of it — for it was duly recorded — must be postponed to the mortgage. (Crowell v. Gilmore, 18 Cal. 370; Soule v. Daws, 7 Cal. 575; Ferguson v. Miller, 6 Cal. 402; Guy v. Carriere, 5 Cal. 511.) The mortgage lien attached to the house, in its nearly completed state, as to the land; and it will not do to say the house can be severed from the lot and sold to pay subsequent mechanics' liens. It would be impossible to sever the painters' or the carpenters' work subsequently done; and surely the mortgage must remain a lien on what existed at the time of its execution and record. (1 McCarter, N. J. 189; 1 Oregon, 220; Green v. Green, 16 Ind. 253; Reese v. Ludington, 13 Wis. 276; Jessup v. Stone, 13 Wis. 466; 36 Penn. St. 252.)

Taylor & Fifield, Gray & Haven, and L. S. Clark, for Respondents.

The language of section four of the Mechanics' Lien Law is too plain and explicit to admit of doubt in its construction, and the power of the Legislature to make the provisions therein contained cannot be doubted. The appellant certainly had an interest in the land in question. The language of the statute is comprehensive enough to embrace every sort of interest or claim whatsoever. But if it should be said that a mortgagee under our laws has no interest in the land, it is to be remembered that the appellant is not a mortgagee, but a cestui que trust under a trust deed, by which the entire legal estate passed into its trustees, and therefore it had an estate in the land. (Kock v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256; Preston v. Sonora Lodge, 39 Cal. 117.) Appellant also had full knowledge of the construction of the building upon the land, and actual notice of its continued progress, but posted no notice whatsoever, in pursuance of the requirements of the statute. The law presumes, therefore, that appellant was willing to allow the construction to go on, and to subordinate its lien to the liens of the mechanics and material men who were contributing to it.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action to enforce the liens of mechanics and material men, under the Act of March 30th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 589), for labor performed and materials furnished in the construction of a building by the defendant Stickney. Whilst the building was in the process of construction, Stickney borrowed from the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars, and, to secure the repayment thereof, executed a deed of trust upon the lot of land on which the building was then being erected, and which deed, of course, included the unfinished building. At the time when the deed was made and recorded there was nothing due to the mechanics and material men, and the labor and materials for which this action is brought was all performed and furnished after that time. It is not pretended that the insurance company, when it loaned the money to Stickney, was ignorant of the fact that the building was then in the progress of erection. On the contrary, the proof tends strongly to show that the loan was made for the purpose of enabling him to complete the building. On these facts the only question raised on the appeal is, whether the mechanics and material men have a lien either upon the land and building, or upon the building alone; and if so, whether such lien is superior to that of the insurance company. In construing this statute, we held, in Preston v. Sonora Lodge, 39 Cal. 117, that "it contains no provision authorizing, under any circumstances, the displacement or disturbance of a mortgage lien once attached, nor its postponement to any lien arising at a subsequent time; nor does it contemplate that the mortgagor and material man or laborer may, as the result of a contract made between themselves without consulting the mortgagee, improve the latter out of such absolute prior lien upon the premises as he may have theretofore lawfully obtained.

But the fourth section of the statute provides, that if the building be erected with the knowledge of the owner of the lands or of any person having or claiming an interest therein, it shall be held to have been erected at the instance of such owner or person claiming an interest, and such interest so held or claimed shall be subject to the lien of the material man or laborer, unless the owner or claimant, within three days after he shall have obtained knowledge of the construction, alteration, or repair, or the intended alteration or repair of the building or superstructure, give notice that he will not be responsible for the same; and the statute prescribes the method in which the notice shall be given.

In this case the proof shows that the insurance company had knowledge of the intention of Stickney to complete the building after the execution of the deed of trust, and permitted the work to proceed without giving the notice prescribed by the statute. The case is fully within the class of cases provided for in the fourth section; and I think the power of the Legislature to enact this provision is not only free from doubt but the justice and wisdom of the measure are obvious. If the owner of land, or any one claiming an interest in it, knowingly permits buildings and improvements to be erected on it without giving notice that it is done without his consent, it is eminently just that he shall be held to have acquiesced in it.

It is unnecessary in this case to decide whether a mortgage or judgment creditor having a lien has such an interest in the land as to bring him within the rule here laid down; but my impressions are strongly to the contrary, and the question was practically decided in Preston v. Sonora Lodge. The instrument, however, taken by the insurance company from Stickney is not a mortgage, but a deed conveying the fee, defeasible on the payment of the debt. It conveys the legal title, which is to be reconveyed if the debt is paid at maturity. It is something more than a mortgage lien, and clearly conveys an interest in the land; and such being its character, it brings the case fully within the letter and spirit of the fourth section of the statute.

F. A. WILL ET AL. v. WILLIAM SINKWITZ.

EFFECT OF REMITTITUR OF SUPREME COURT UPON DISTRICT COURT.—Where an order of the Supreme Court reverses an order of the District Court, by which a judgment in a County Court modifying a judgment in a Justice's Court has been modified, and remands the cause with directions to vacate the judgment of the County Court, the District Court has power under the remittitur from the Supreme Court to do nothing further than to vacate the order of the County Court; it cannot render judgment for the defendant unless so expressly ordered by the Supreme Court.

CLERICAL ERROR IN JUDGMENT.—Where, in such a case, the District Court renders judgment in accordance with the order of the Supreme Court, but the Clerk of the District Court uses an improper form in entering the judgment, by which the Court is represented as dismissing the cause, the mistake of the Clerk does not change the judgment; it is a clerical blunder.

EFFECT OF JUDGMENT.—In the case stated, the result of the judgment of the Supreme Court was to leave the cause in the County Court in the condition in which it stood when the papers were filed therein on appeal from the Justice's Court.

ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT.—Where an order of a superior Court is filed in a County Court, vacating a previous order of the latter Court which modified a judgment in a Justice's Court, and the County Court directs its previous order to be vacated in accordance with the decision of the superior Court, it is error for the County Court to grant a motion for judgment on the pleadings and the Justice's record in the case, the motion having been made prior to its order vacating the previous judgment.

NEW TRIAL.—In such a case the annulling of the judgment of the County Court makes a new trial of the cause indispensable.

NUISANCE—REMEDY BY ACTION FOR DAMAGES.—Where the acts complained of amount to nuisance, for which the person injured may have his action to abate the nuisance, he is not limited to that remedy, but may sue to recover damages sustained by the wrongful acts of the defendant.

WRIT of certiorari to review proceedings of the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco and set aside its judgment.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

N. B. Mulville, for the Petitioner.

The record of the first trial in the County Court disclosed the fact by the judgment (which was for three hundred dollars) that the subject matter exceeded the jurisdiction of that Court. When an inferior tribunal renders judgment for an amount beyond its jurisdiction, it is evident that the subject matter exceeded the jurisdiction of the Court, and on appeal or review the action should be dismissed. (Ford v. Smith, 5 Cal. 331; Wrattan v. Wilson, 22 Cal. 465.) The first judgment and proceedings in this case being vacated and set aside by this Court deprived the County Court of any further jurisdiction over the cause, and was virtually a dismissal of the action. The Fifteenth District Court so held by its decision on review vacating the judgment subsequently entered. The only question that can arise on certiorari is the jurisdiction of the Court; and if a superior Court vacates the judgment of an inferior one, it is virtually a decision that the inferior Court had not jurisdiction, which is equivalent to dismissing the action.

The next point in this case is, that the subject matter, as appears by the complaint, is a nuisance, and comes under the rule, "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedes." The damages complained of as alleged arise from water flowing from defendant's to plaintiffs' property. (Prac. Act, Sec. 249.) Justice and County Courts on appeal have no jurisdiction in such cases; it brings into question the title and possession of real property.

If a cause of action exists at all in this case, it is a nuisance, which the County Court has only jurisdiction of by original proceedings under section eight of the Constitution, and not on appeal from a Justice's Court.

I think it evident that at the time of the last trial of this cause, and when judgment was entered for one hundred and seventy-five dollars and costs, that the said County Court had not jurisdiction over this case—either the subject matter thereof or the person of defendant.

Argument for Plaintiffs.

S. F. & L. Reynolds, for Plaintiffs.

The fact of a Court rendering judgment for an amount beyond its jurisdiction does not render void the subject matter of the action, but only the judgment so rendered. The decision or judgment of this Court was only to the effect to set aside the judgment of the County Court, and thereby left the case precisely where it was on the 2d day of March, 1870, the day on which it was first called for trial in the County Court, and the first time the case was ever tried in the County Court.

As to the second point made by the counsel for the defendant, there is nothing in the record to show it; nor is there anything upon which it can be based. This was an action, as appears by the complaint, for damages to personal property. The plaintiffs were not the owners of the building. They were only the occupants of the building wherein their goods were stored at the time they were injured. The action was brought in the proper form for damages, and they could not have or maintain an action to abate a nuisance. The plaintiffs had the right to bring the action for damages in the Justice's Court, so long as the amount sued for was within the jurisdiction of that Court. The amount for which the action was brought was within the jurisdiction of the Court, and that is what gives and shows the jurisdiction of the Court.

If there is anything in the objection to the jurisdiction of the Justice's Court, or to the County Court on appeal, on the ground that the action should have been one to abate a nuisance, instead of an action for damages, that objection should have been taken before the trial in the Justice's Court, either by a demurrer or an objection in the nature of a demurrer. But the objection comes too late after having submitted to two trials in the County Court, after the case was appealed.

The only effect of the decision of this Court was to set aside the judgment of the County Court, and that left the case in the same position that it was after it made its first appearance in the County Court, on appeal from the Justice's Court. No motion for new trial could be made in the County Court on the part of plaintiffs. The only and proper motion that could be made was the one which the plaintiffs did make.

The action of the County Court, in placing the cause on the calendar for trial, was not granting a new trial. The trial, and the proceedings resulting in a judgment, were set aside by this Court, and that left the case as if no trial had been had, and hence the notice of motion by plaintiffs. We respectfully submit that there is nothing in the record to show error in the action of the County Court, and that the same should be affirmed and the said writ be dismissed.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

An action was commenced in a Justice's Court for the recovery of two hundred and ninety-nine dollars and ninety-nine cents, for the damages occasioned by certain wrongful and negligent acts of the defendant, mentioned in the complaint; and judgment having been rendered for the plaintiffs, the defendant appealed to the County Court. A trial de novo was had in the County Court, and that Court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs for three hundred dollars. A writ of certiorari was issued to the County Court by the District Court of the Fourth District; and on the hearing of the cause, the District Court modified the judgment of the County Court by striking therefrom the sum of one dollar. An appeal was taken to this Court from the judgment of the District Court; and this Court reversed the order of the District Court, and remanded the cause, with directions to vacate the judgment of the County

Opinion of the Court.—Rhodes, C. J.

Court. On the return of the remittitur, the District Court ordered that the judgment of the County Court be set aside and vacated. This order is followed by a formal judgment, whereby, "by virtue of the law, and by reason of the premises aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed" that the plaintiffs "take nothing by this action as against William Sinkwitz, defendant," and that the defendant recover his costs. A certified copy of the decision of this Court, and of the order of the District Court, having been filed in the County Court, that Court ordered that the judgment theretofore entered in that Court be set aside and vacated. Three days prior to the entry of that order the plaintiffs had moved for judgment for two hundred and ninety-nine dollars and costs, on the pleadings and papers in said cause; and about one month subsequent thereto the County Court gave judgment for the plaintiffs for that sum and costs. The defendant thereafter procured from the District Court of the Fifteenth District, a certiorari to the County Court; and on the hearing thereof the District Court ordered that "the judgment of the County Court, and all the proceedings in that Court, in the action on which said judgment was entered, be and the same is hereby set aside, vacated, and annulled." This is followed by a formal judgment: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and the premises, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed," that the judgment in the County Court be set aside, vacated, and annulled, and that the plaintiffs "take nothing by this action" as against the defendant, and that the defendant recover his costs. Soon after the entry of that judgment, the County Court, on the plaintiffs' motion, placed the cause on the calendar for trial; and a trial having been had, the County Court rendered judgment for the plaintiffs for one hundred and seventy-five dollars and costs. The cause now before this Court is a certiorari issued by this Court, to bring up for review the last mentioned judgment of the County Court. This is a succinct history of this interesting case.

The only difficulties there are in this case, arise from the inattention of counsel in permitting the Clerk of the District Court, after the Court had pronounced its judgment, to enter up a judgment which did not accord with that which had been rendered — the Clerk, doubtless, using one of the common blank forms, without noticing that it was not the appropriate form. The Fourth District Court, in pursuance of the order of this Court, ordered the judgment of the County Court to be vacated. That was the extent of the order; but the District Court had no authority, under the remittitur from this Court, to adjudge that the plaintiffs take nothing by this action. Had this Court intended that the District Court should render judgment for the defendant, in the action in the County Court, this Court would have so expressly ordered; and reading the whole judgment, it does not appear that the District Court ordered judgment to be entered for the defendant. The result of the judgment was, to leave the cause in the County Court, in the condition in which it stood when the papers were filed therein on appeal from the Justice's Court.

The judgment which was rendered by the County Court, on the plaintiffs' motion, without a new trial, was clearly erroneous; but whether certiorari was the proper remedy to correct the error, is not a question which we can consider on the record now presented.

It is apparent from what has already been said, that when the first judgment of the County Court had been vacated as well as when the second judgment — that which was rendered on the plaintiffs' motion — had been vacated, it was proper that the cause should be placed on the calendar for trial. The annulling of the judgment made a new trial indispensable, unless the judgment of the Fifteenth District Court amounted to a dismissal of the action. The judgment was, that the judgment in the County Court be vacated. The subsequent formal entry of the Clerk cannot be construed as giving the judgment a different effect—as changing entirely its nature. If the Court, on certiorari, may order the inferior tribunal to dismiss the action, it is clear that the statute does not authorize it, after vacating the judgment, to order a judgment to be entered for the opposite party. It is unnecessary, however, to determine whether such an order would be void; for, looking at the whole judgment, we construe this order to be a mere clerical blunder, and hold that it did not have the effect to add to or change the judgment, which it clearly appears was rendered by the Court. It did not directly dismiss the action.

The first point of the petitioners is that the judgment of this Court was virtually a dismissal of the action. It is apparent from what has already been said, that the judgment was not intended to have, and did not have, that effect.

The next point is that the subject matter of the action is a nuisance, and that, therefore, the Justice's Court had no jurisdiction of the cause of action. This is not an action to prevent or abate a nuisance, of which the County Courts, as well as the District Courts, have jurisdiction, but is an action for the recovery of damages occasioned by the alleged tortious acts of the defendant. Where the acts complained of amount to a nuisance, for which the person injured may have his action to abate the nuisance, he is not limited to that remedy, but may sue to recover the damages sustained by the wrongful acts of the defendant.

There is nothing in the petitioners' third point which requires further notice.

ELEANORA O. SALMON, EXECUTRIX OF THE LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF FRANCIS SALMON, DECEASED,
v. ALLEN T. WILSON, ISAAC R. JEWELL, ET ALS.

DEMURRER FOR AMBIGUITY.—A demurrer, on the ground of ambiguity, should be overruled, if enough appears to render the pleading demurred to easy of comprehension and free from reasonable doubt.

EJECTMENT BY EXECUTOR—ALLEGATION OF TITLE IN TESTATOR.—A complaint in ejectment by an executor is not necessarily defective because it fails to allege any title in the testator, as neither the legal title nor the right of possession may have been in him at his death, and yet both may have been afterwards acquired by the executor as such.

EJECTMENT BY EXECUTRIX—ALLEGATION OF SEIZIN.—Where a complaint in ejectment by an executrix, after setting forth the will, its probate, and the issuance of letters, averred that by virtue thereof she, as executrix, possessed herself of the real estate of the testator, and that she ever since has been and is the owner, seized in fee of an estate of inheritance therein, both as such executrix and as heir at law, and is entitled to the possession thereof: held, a sufficient averment of seisin and right of possession in her capacity of executrix.

DEED EXPRESSING MONEY CONSIDERATION, WHEN HELD GIFT.—In determining the character of a deed, claimed and purporting to be a gift, but also expressing a money consideration, resort must be had to the instrument itself; but if it can be ascertained from its face, interpreted in the light of surrounding facts, that it was intended to be a gift, it will be so held, without the need of proof alunde, on that point.

DEED OF GIFT, NOTWITHSTANDING MONEY CONSIDERATION.—Where Bartolome Bojorques conveyed to his eight children eight ninths undivided of a valuable six-league ranch, in consideration of love and affection, "and in the further consideration of four hundred and sixty-one dollars to him in hand paid by said parties of the second part:" held, that enough appeared on the face of the deed itself, in view of the value of the property conveyed in comparison with the paltry sum named, and in view of the condition of the parties, their relations, and the surrounding circumstances, to show the transaction a donation, and not a sale.

DEED OF GIFT "SUBJECT TO A MORTGAGE."—Where a deed of gift contained a provision that it was made "subject, however, to the payments, conditions, and agreements specified and contained in a certain indenture of mortgage;" held, that by accepting the deed the grantees did not become personally liable for, or assume the payment of, the mortgage debt, and that the transaction was not thereby rendered a sale.

CONSTRUCTION OF DEEDS AGAINST THE GRANTOR.—Deeds are construed most strongly against the grantor.

Statement of Facts.

TUSTIN vs. FAUGHT, 28 Cal. 241, in so far as it holds the deed of Bartolome Bojorques to his children of eight-ninths of the Rancho Laguna de San Antonio to be a deed of bargain and sale, and not a deed of gift, overruled.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT BY WIFE, WHERE HUSBAND NON-RESIDENT.—Where the certificate of acknowledgment to a deed of separate property by a married woman, made under the Act of February 14th, 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 12), was dated February 26th, 1859, and set forth that she acknowledged on February 22d, 1859, and that her husband "does not now reside, and for one year next preceding February 22d, 1859, has not resided within the State of California;" held, that an objection to the certificate, on the ground of not stating that the husband was not a resident on the day of acknowledgment, was hypercritical and untenable.

DEED BY WIFE OF NON-RESIDENT—CERTIFICATE DATED AFTER ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—The statute relating to conveyances, by wives of non-residents, of their separate estate (Stats. 1855, p. 12), contemplates that some time may elapse, after the acknowledgment, and before the certificate, in order to make the necessary proofs as to the non-residence of the husband; but the certificate, when made, is the termination of a continuous transaction, and speaks as of the day of acknowledgment.

DEED OF UNDIVIDED INTERESTS, WITH SPECIAL RESERVATION—VESTING OF TITLE.—Where a father made a deed of gift to his eight children of eight-ninths undivided of a large grant, reserving one-ninth to himself, "to be laid out on that part of said rancho on which I now reside;" held, that the actual location of the reserved ninth was not a condition precedent to the vesting of the title to their undivided portions in the children.

EJECTMENT—PROOF OF OUSTER.—Where, in ejectment, the answer put in issue the plaintiff's title and right of possession, while it was not denied that defendant was in exclusive possession, holding for himself alone; held, that this was sufficient proof of ouster.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Sonoma.

This was an action of ejectment, brought against all the occupants (over a hundred in number) of the Rancho Laguna de San Antonio, in Sonoma and Marin Counties. Isaac R. Jewell, one of the defendants, answered separately; and the case, so far as he was concerned, was tried, and judgment obtained against him in March, 1870. He afterwards made a motion for a new trial, which being overruled, he took this appeal from the order as well as from the judgment.

Argument for Appellant.

The complaint, after giving the title of the Court and names of parties, commences with the declaration that "The said plaintiff in this action as well on her own account as on the account of the other heirs and devisees of Francis Salmon, deceased, complains of the above named defendants." It then alleges in the usual form the death of the testator, the leaving of a will, which is set forth in full, its proper probate and issuance of letters testamentary to the plaintiff, and her qualification; and then follows the allegation that she, "by virtue thereof, possessed herself of the real estate of said testator," etc., as given in the opinion. It also alleges ouster by the defendants, describes the land, and prays judgment of restitution, etc. To this complaint defendant Jewell, previous to putting in his answer, interposed a demurrer on the grounds that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that it was ambiguous and uncertain in not plainly setting out the party or parties plaintiff specifically, and in not specifically or in any manner describing the interests which plaintiff had in the land. The demurrer was overruled.

F. D. Colton, for Appellant.

1. The complaint is insufficient, because it nowhere alleges that Francis Salmon, the testator, was in his lifetime the owner of the land. The allegation that plaintiff "thereupon, by virtue thereof, possessed herself of the real estate of said testator hereinafter described," is not an allegation that Francis Salmon ever owned the land, or that it belonged to the estate. It is simply a recital to the effect that she possessed herself of the land, as being land of the estate. But this is no allegation of title in any one. A title in her, as executrix, is not set out at all; and no facts are shown to entitle her to recover as such. The allegation that she is seized in fee of an estate of inheritance, as executrix, is an impossible allegation, because an executrix, as such, cannot have an estate of inheritance; she simply has a right of possession, founded upon the title of the testator.

Again, the complaint is ambiguous. It appears that the plaintiff complains as well on her own account as on account of the other heirs and devisees of Francis Salmon, deceased, and she alleges that she is seized of an estate of inheritance both as executrix and as heir at law of said testator. We contend that the parties plaintiff are not definitely set out, nor is the title relied on sufficiently alleged.

2. If the deed from Theodosia Bojorques Prudon to Salmon, Bliss, and Touchard was not properly acknowledged and certified in accordance with the statute (1 Hittell, 597) it was not executed, and is inoperative. (Ewald v. Corbett, 32 Cal. 497.) It is one of the express conditions of the statute that the husband shall not reside in the State on the day of acknowledgment; but this nowhere appears from the certificate. If it is sufficient that the husband was not a resident on the twenty-sixth of February, then it is sufficient if he was not a resident on the first of June following. If the Judge can delay making his certificate for four days, and then certify that on that day he was not a resident, then he can delay for four months, and then certify that on the day of making the certificate four months subsequent to the day of acknowledgment he was not a resident. For all that appears, the husband may have been present at the time the acknowledgment was taken. He may have been residing in the State, and in the Town of Santa Rosa, on the twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth of the month; and from the certificate it would be inferred that for those four days he was residing in the State.

3. The deed from Bartolome Bojorques to his children is a deed of bargain and sale, and not a gift. The words of conveyance are, "give, grant, bargain, and sell," all showing upon the face of the deed that it was not a gift. It is not like the deed in Peck v. Vandenburg, 30 Cal. 13. In that case the grantees, as appeared from the deed, were the owners of the equitable title to the land, and the grantor simply vested them with the legal title thereto. She states this to be the object of the deed. Her intent to give appears plainly and unequivocally from the deed itself. Not so with the deed in this case. Here the grantor provides carefully for his money and for the payment of his mortgage. This same deed has been before this Court, in Tustin v. Faught, 23 Cal. 241, and it was there held, that upon its face it was a deed of bargain and sale, and not a deed of gift.

4. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary or modify the conveying elements in a deed, except for the purpose of reforming it on account of fraud. (McCrea v. Piermont, 16 Wend. 465; Westbrook v. Harbison, 2 McCord Ch. 112; Ryan v. Goodwin, McMullen Eq. 451; Gullett and Wife v. Lamberton, 1 English, Ark., 109; Sewell v. Baxter and Wife, 2 Maryland Ch. Dec. 454, and cases cited; Natley Young's Estate, 3 Maryland Ch. Dec. 467; Crawford v. Spencer, 8 Cush. 418; Logan v. Bond, 18 Ga. 197; Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 483; Attorney General v. Clapham, 31 English L. & Eq. 163.)

5. By the terms of the conveyance the land conveyed was made subject to the payment of the mortgage, according to the conditions and agreements specified therein. This mortgage was for four hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per month, compounded monthly. The payment of this mortgage might well be a strong inducement for the grantor to make the deed. By the terms of the deed, the grantees were bound to pay this mortgage. Such was the evident intention; and they received it with that understanding, and were bound to fulfill all obligations specified in it. (Minor v. Terry, 6 How. Pr. 208; Ferris v. Crawford, 2 Denio, 595; Jumel v. Jumel, 7 Paige Ch. 594; Belmont v. Cowan, 22 N. Y. 439; Maynard v. Maynard, 4 Edwards Ch. 716; Notter v. Hughes, 2 Kernan, 78; Lewis v. Covilland, 21 Cal. 178.) And it makes no difference that the grantee was a feme covert. (Cross v. Carson, 8 Blackford, 138; Barker v. Cobb, 36 N. H. 344; Garnett v. Scouten, 3 Denio, 334.)

6. No ouster has been shown. Admitting the plaintiff's title, she has made out no case. If she has title, she is merely a tenant in common; and no refusal of joint occupation has been shown.

George Pearce, for Respondent.

1. Though the plaintiff alleged a fee simple, she was not bound to prove it, but might recover on proof of prior possession. (Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 275; Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361.)

2. The deed of Bartolome Bojorques to his children constituted a gift. (Gale v. Colburn, 18 Pick. 297; Brewer v. Harely, 22 Pick. 370; Bryan v. Bradley, 16 Conn. 474; Peck v. Vandenburg, 30 Cal. 11.) If it did not on its face, parol evidence was admissible to show the real consideration. (1 Greenl. Ev., Sec. 26, Note 1; Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass. 257; Fairly v. Fairly, 34 Miss. 18; 2 Wash. on Real Prop. 655, 656, and cases cited; Barker v. Koneman, 13 Cal. 9; Cole v. Saulsby, 21 Cal. 47; Bennett v. Solomon, 6 Cal. 134; McCrea v. Piermont, 16 Wend. 460; Bullard v. Briggs, 7 Pick. 537; Wallace v. Wallace, 4 Mass. 135; Peck v. Vandenburg, 30 Cal. 11.)

3. When the different parts of a deed are inconsistent with each other, effect must be given to that part which is calculated to carry into effect the real intention, and that part which would defeat it must be rejected. (Chitty on Cont. 94; Walker v. Giles, E. C. B. 662-702; Shep. Touch. 88; 1 Steph. Com. 464; Furnival v. Coombes, 5 M. & G 736.)

4. The words used in the deed of Bartolome to his children in reference to his own share, do not constitute a reservation in the sense attempted to be put upon it (Bouv. L.

Argument for Respondent.

Dict., Title, Reservation; 2 Wash. on R. P. 686, 687, 692); nor an exception (2 Wash. on R. P. 686; 38 N. H. 212; Hurd v. Curtis, 7 Met. 110; Peltea v. Harris, 13 Pick. 323); nor a condition (6 Petersdorff's Abr., Title, Condition, 35). The deed passed an estate in presenti, and created a tenancy in common of the whole tract. (Lawrence v. Ballou, 37 Cal. 518; Schenck v. Encey, 24 Cal. 110; Lick v. O'Donnell, 3 Cal. 59; Gibbs v. Swift, 12 Cush. 393; Shrafe v. Wait, 30 Ver. 738; Jackson v. Livingston, 7 Wend. 136; Corbin v. Jackson, 14 Wend. 619; Long Island R. R. Co. v. Conklin, 29 N. Y. 572.)

5. It is objected that it nowhere appears that the husband of Theodosia did not reside in the State on the day of the acknowledgment to her deed. What is the day of acknowledgment? Clearly, the twenty-second day of February; and the certificate shows that the husband did not on that day reside in, and had not for one year next preceding that day resided in, the State. The act of certifying an acknowledgment must follow the taking of the acknowledgment; and in such a case as this a reasonable time will be allowed until the testimony, provided for in the statute, is taken. The words used in the certificate — whenever that may be made — all refer to the day of acknowledgment; and the words “does not now,” etc., used in the certificate here are used in connection with, and in reference to, the word “acknowledged,” and are qualified thereby and by intendment of the statute, they being part only of an entire certificate of acknowledgment, made on the twenty-second of February.

6. No question arises in an action of ejectment about an ouster in a case when the defendant denies the plaintiff's title. (2 Greenl. Ev., Sec. 318; Siglar v. Van Kassar, 10 Wend. 414; Carpentier v. Gardner, 29 Cal. 163; Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373; Marshall v. Shafter, 22 Cal. 194.)

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it is ambiguous, and does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was properly overruled. The facts on which the plaintiff relies might, perhaps, have been stated with more perspicuity; but enough appears in the complaint to render it easy of comprehension and free from reasonable doubt, which is all that is necessary.

Under the second ground of demurrer, it is objected that if the plaintiff can recover at all, it can only be in her capacity of executrix, and not in her own right, and that the complaint fails to allege any title in her testator to the demanded premises. If this be conceded, the complaint is not necessarily defective. Neither the legal title nor the right of possession may have been in the testator at the time of his death, and yet both may have been since acquired by the plaintiff, in her capacity of executrix, prior to the commencement of the action. After setting forth the will, and alleging that it was duly probated and that letters testamentary were issued to the plaintiff, the complaint avers that "by virtue thereof (she) possessed herself of the real estate of said testator hereinafter described, and ever since then has been, and now is, the owner seized in fee simple of an estate of inheritance of, in, and to all of said land, both as such executrix and as heir at law of said testator, and is now entitled to the possession thereof." This is a sufficient averment of seizin and a right of possession in the plaintiff in her capacity of executrix.

The plaintiff and defendants claim title to the premises in controversy under one Bartolome Bojorques, who, in November, 1851, conveyed to his eight children, as tenants in common, eight ninths, undivided, of the "Rancho Laguna de San Antonio," reserving the remaining one ninth to himself, "to be laid out on that part of said rancho on which I now reside." The deed recites that it was made "for and in consideration of the natural love and affection of the said party of the first part to his children, the said parties of the second part, and in the further consideration of the sum of four hundred and sixty-one dollars, to him in hand paid by the said parties of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged." In a subsequent portion of the deed, it is provided that the conveyance is made, "subject, however, to the payments, conditions, and agreements specified and contained in a certain indenture of mortgage" made by said Bartolome Bojorques to one Short, to secure the payment of four hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per month, on which mortgage there was then due four hundred and fifty dollars, and interest from the eighth day of March preceding. The mortgage included the whole rancho, which contained six square leagues. One of the children named as a grantee in the deed was Theodosia, then the wife of Victor Prudon, from whom, however, she had been separated for some years next prior to the date of the deed, in which she is described by her maiden name, "Theodosia Bojorques," and in which there is no reference to her husband. The plaintiff deraigns title under Theodosia, through a deed made by her, in which her husband did not unite, he being then, and for more than a year next preceding the execution of the deed, a non-resident of this State, as the plaintiff alleges. The defendants deraign title under certain other of the children named as grantees in the deed of November, 1851; and there has been no partition of the rancho between the several tenants in common, though an action is pending for that purpose.

At the trial, the plaintiff put in evidence the deed from Bartolome to his children, and offered to prove by parol that it was intended as a deed of gift, and not as a deed of bargain and sale, and that no valuable consideration whatever was paid or agreed to be paid by the grantees. The defendants objected to this proof as incompetent, but the Court admitted it, and the defendants excepted. The plaintiff then offered in evidence the deed from Theodosia, to which the defendants objected, on the ground that it was not acknowledged and certified in the form required by law to enable a married woman to convey her separate estate without uniting her husband in the deed; but the Court admitted the deed, and the defendants excepted. These rulings are claimed by the defendants to have been erroneous, and constitute the chief grounds of error relied upon on this appeal.

It becomes material, it is said, to determine whether the deed from Bojorques to his children was a deed of gift, or of bargain and sale, for the reason that in the former case the estate conveyed to Theodosia became her separate property and might be alienated by her without joining her husband in the deed, under the circumstances alleged to exist in this case; whereas, if the conveyance from her father was a deed of bargain and sale, made upon a valuable consideration, it is claimed that the estate conveyed became community property, and could not be transferred by her separate deed. In determining the character of the deed, resort must, of course, be had to the instrument itself; and if it can be ascertained from the face of it, interpreted in the light of the surrounding facts, that it was intended to be, in fact, a deed of gift, and that the transaction between Bojorques and his children was a donation, and not a sale, there will be no necessity for the inquiry whether parol evidence was admissible to prove it to be a gift. If the deed itself, viewed in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, establishes the gift, there was no need of proof aliunde on that point.

In Peck v. Vandenburg, 30 Cal. 11, this Court had occasion to consider a deed very similar to that now under discussion. In that case a mother conveyed to her eight children eight ninths of two large tracts of land, reserving one ninth to herself, and the deed recited that it was made "in consideration of the natural love and affection which I have and bear to my said children, and for the further sum of five dollars, to me in hand paid before the sealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged." The only appreciable difference between the recital of the consideration in that deed and in this is, that in the former the money consideration is stated at five dollars, and in the latter at four hundred and sixty-one dollars. In that case the record did not disclose the quantity of land conveyed; but in this case the quantity conveyed to the children was eight ninths of a tract of six square leagues, containing about twenty-five thousand acres, of which more than twenty-one thousand acres was conveyed to the children. In the former case the Court held that the consideration of five dollars, recited in the deed, was merely nominal, and was probably inserted by the scrivener under the belief that some such recital was essential to the validity of the conveyance; and the deed was, therefore, held to be a deed of gift on its face.

I think it is apparent in this case, as in that, on the face of the deed itself, construed in connection with the surrounding facts, that the money consideration named in the instrument was merely nominal, and that the transaction was, in fact, a donation, and not a sale. Here was an old man with a family of eight children, most of whom were married and living apart from him, and who was the owner of about twenty-five thousand acres of land situate in one of the most fertile portions of the State. He conveys to all his children eight ninths of this large estate in equal portions, reserving to himself only one ninth, including his homestead, and recites on the face of the deed that it is made "for and in consideration of the natural love and affection of the said party of the first part to his children, the parties of the second part;" and then adds, as a further consideration, the paltry sum of four hundred and sixty-one dollars, which is recited to have been paid to him by the children, equal to about fifty-eight dollars for each child; and each of whom was receiving, under the conveyance, about two thousand seven hundred acres of valuable land. If the recital of this paltry money consideration, so insignificant as compared with the value of the estate, is to convert the transaction into one of bargain and sale, no reason is perceived why the same result would not have ensued if the sum named had been one dollar or one cent for each of the children, instead of fifty-eight dollars. The disproportion between the price named and the value of the estate would only have been a trifle greater in the one case than in the other; but in either case is so enormously large as clearly to indicate that the money consideration did not, in fact, enter into the transaction as one of its material elements. It was clearly the intention of Bojorques to donate this large and valuable estate to his children in equal portions, and not to sell it to them. Hence we find the conveyance to his married daughters is made to them in their own names, excluding their husbands; and in the case of Theodosia, she is named by her maiden name, and her husband is not referred to. The parties to the deed must be presumed to have known that under the law, as it then was and now is, all property acquired by the wife during the marriage, by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, became her separate estate, and that all acquired otherwise became the common property of the husband and wife, and was subject to disposition by the husband without the consent of the wife. It is clear that Bojorques, in conveying this valuable property to his married daughters, had no intention to convey it, practically, to their husbands; and particularly in the case of Theodosia, who had been, for some years, living apart from her husband. But if we should hold that the insertion in the deed of an inconsiderable money consideration by the scrivener who drew it up had the effect to convert the transaction into one of sale. I am convinced we would give an effect to this deed which never entered into the minds of the parties to it at the time it was made. When Bojorques conveyed to Theodosia her portion of the land, he little dreamed that he was virtually conveying it to her husband, Prudon, from whom she had been separated for six years. Our statute, which provides that all property acquired by the wife during the marriage, otherwise than by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, shall be common property, and subject to disposition by the husband, could not have been intended to work so flagrant a wrong as would result in this case were we to hold that the deed from Bojorques to his married daughters was in fact, and was intended to be a deed of bargain and sale, and not of gift. But enough appears on the face of the conveyance, when construed in connection with the condition of the parties, their relations to each other, and other circumstances, to render it apparent that the transaction was in fact a donation, and not a sale, in the true sense of the statute defining the rights of husband and wife; and this, too, without the aid or parol evidence to show the actual intention of the parties and the precise facts of the transaction. Some stress, however, is laid upon that clause of the deed which recites that the conveyance is made subject to the "payments, conditions, and agreements" contained in the mortgage to Short; and counsel insists that in accepting the deed the grantees became personally liable for, and assumed the payment of the mortgage debt, and that this rendered the transaction a sale, and not a gift. The mortgage to Short is not before us, and we are ignorant of its contents, except that it included the whole rancho, and was made to secure the payment of four hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at ten per cent per month from March 8th, 1851. This recital is but a declaration of the grantor that the whole tract was then subject to the mortgage to Short; and such recitals are usually inserted in deeds conveying mortgaged premises, in order to rebut a presumption that the existence of the mortgage had been concealed from the grantee. But a recital of this character imposes no obligation on the grantee to pay the mortgage debt unless there be some other clause in the deed indicating that such was the understanding and agreement of the parties. Deeds are construed most strongly against the grantor, and in the absence of any provision importing that the grantee shall assume upon himself the payment of a prior mortgage upon the premises, no such obligation arises. I find nothing in this deed indicating such an understanding.

I am aware that in Tustin v. Faught, 23 Cal. 241, this particular deed from Bojorques to his children was under consideration, and was held to be a deed of bargain and sale, and not a deed of gift. But from the report of the case this point does not appear to have been argued by counsel, or carefully considered by the Court. The opinion of the Court, by Mr. Justice CROCKETT, does not attempt an analysis of the deed, and, on this point, is unsatisfactory. I think the Court fell into an error in deciding on the character and legal effect of the instrument.

The next point urged by the appellant is that the deed from Theodosia to Salmon, Bliss, and Touchard is inoperative and void as a conveyance, because of a defect in the certificate of acknowledgment. The statute of February 14th, 1855 (Stats. 1855, p. 12), provides in what manner a married woman may convey her separate estate, in the absence of her husband. It requires the acknowledgment to be made before the District Judge of the county in which the land is situate, and only authorizes such a conveyance to be made by the wife, when the husband was not, and for one year next preceding the execution of the instrument had not been bona fide, residing in this State. The second section requires that the Judge taking the acknowledgment shall, "before he certify the same, be satisfied by the oaths of at least two credible, disinterested citizens of this State, that the husband of such married woman does not, and for one year next preceding the day of acknowledgment has not, resided in this State, which fact, and the name of the witnesses by whom the same was proved, shall be recited in the certificate of acknowledgment." The acknowledgment in this case was taken before the proper Judge, whose certificate is dated February 26th, 1859, and states that the deed was acknowledged by the wife on the 22d February, 1859, and that he is satisfied by the oaths of four credible, disinterested citizens of this State (whose names are given), that Victor Prudon, the husband of said Theodosia, "does not now reside, and for one year next preceding the 22d day of February A. D. 1859, has not resided, within the State of California." The only objection taken to this certificate is, that it does not state, as is alleged, that on the twenty-second of February (the day of the acknowledgment) the husband was not a resident of this State. It is conceded that the certificate states, that on the twenty-sixth of February, and for one year next preceding the twenty-second of February, Prudon was not a resident of this State; but it is said there is nothing in the certificate to show that on the twenty-second (the day of the acknowledgment) he was not residing in this State. This objection is hypercritical and untenable. If such fine-spun technicalities as this should prevail in interpreting certificates of acknowledgment, there would be but little safety in land titles. The certificate was manifestly intended to speak as of the day of acknowledgment; and when it says Prudon is not "now" a resident, it must be referred to the day of the acknowledgment, and not to the date of the certificate, four days later. The statute contemplates that some time may possibly elapse after the acknowledgment, and before the certificate, in order to make the necessary proofs as to the non-residence of the husband, and until the proof is made the transaction is continuous, and is finally terminated by the completed certificate, which speaks as of the day of the acknowledgment. This certificate is clearly good.

Another point made by the appellant is that the deed from Bojorques to his children was inoperative to vest the legal title in them until after the one ninth reserved by him had been definitely located so as to include his homestead. But there is no force in this proposition. There is nothing in the deed to indicate that the actual location of the one ninth was intended as a condition precedent to the vesting of the title. On the contrary, that clause of the deed was designed to be only a specification, in general terms, of the manner in which the reserved one ninth should be thereafter located on a final partition between Bojorques and his children. The provision for the location contains none of the elements of a condition precedent.

The only remaining ground of error relied upon is that there was no proof of the ouster complained of. But the answer puts in issue the plaintiff's title and right of possession; and even on this appeal it is insisted that the plaintiff has neither title nor right of entry, whilst it is not denied that the defendant is in the exclusive possession, holding for himself alone, and not for himself and the plaintiff, as one of his cotenants. Under all the authorities this is sufficient proof of ouster. (Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373; Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 163; Marshall v. Shafter, 32 Cal. 194; 10 Wend. 414; 2 Greenl. Ev. Sec. 318.)

Points decided.

Q. K. MARSHALL v. U. CALDWELL, E. E. FORREST, AND I. TRUEMAN.

CONSTRUCTION OF WRITTEN CONTRACT—SALE OF LAND.—Where a party who owns but an undivided one-half of a tract of land enters into a contract by which he agrees that, upon the payment of the purchase money, he will convey the whole of the land to another party, who is induced to regard him as the owner of the entire premises, the vendor is deemed to have sold not only his own interest in the land, but the whole of the land.

REMEDY—ALLEGATION IN COMPLAINT.—In the face of such an agreement, the vendor will not be permitted to aver, if he brings an action to recover possession from the party holding under the contract, that he sold less than the whole title to the land, unless he can also aver that the written contract, by reason of fraud, mistake, or the like, does not show the real contract.

RIGHT TO RESCIND—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—In the case stated, upon a discovery by the vendee that the plaintiff held only the undivided half of the land, he is entitled to proceed at once to rescind the contract; or he may proceed to have the contract specifically enforced to the extent of the plaintiff's interest in the land.

RESTORATION OF POSSESSION—RENTS AND PROFITS.—In proceeding to specifically enforce the contract, it is not incumbent on the defendant to restore, or offer to restore, the possession to the plaintiff; nor is the plaintiff entitled to any portions of the rents and profits accruing since the contract was made.

OBLIGATION OF VENDOR TO CONVEY.—If the vendor in such a case is unable to perform the entire agreement, and can convey only an undivided half of the land, he may be compelled to convey that interest.

OBLIGATION OF VENDEE TO TENDER PAYMENT.—To entitle the vendee in the case stated to a decree compelling the vendor to convey his undivided half of the land: held, that it was necessary for him to tender as the purchase money only one-half of the contract price.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Solano.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

L. P. Marshall, for Appellant, argued that as the contract of sale contained an express provision whereby the plaintiff agreed to execute a deed to the defendant warranting the title as against himself and all persons claiming from him, but against no others, he can be deemed to have sold only his own interest in the land. He also argued that the cross complaint was insufficient to constitute a defense to the action of the ejectment on the ground of covenant for conveyance, because that ground of defense is destroyed by asserting title in another, and by averring that the vendee took possession without averring a surrender, or offer to surrender, possession to plaintiff; and also, that it is inequitable, first, for the defendant, by himself and assignor, to accept the possession from plaintiff of the undivided one half of the land to which he has not the legal title, and receive to his own use the rents and profits for a long space of time — to wit, for more than three years — without rendering to plaintiff any return for such benefits; and, second, to refuse to surrender up such possession, and resist the action of ejectment. These acts being inequitable, he cannot claim any equitable relief whatever. The maxim is, "He who seeks equity must do equity." (Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 404; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 638.)

Argument for Respondents.

John M. Coghlan, for Respondents.

The rule is well settled that where a party contracts to sell land, as he is unable to make a complete title to all the property sold, or where there has been a substantial misdescription of it in important particulars, Courts of equity will not suffer the vendor to take advantage of his own wrong, or misdescription, but will allow the vendee to proceed with the purchase pro tanto, or to abandon it altogether. "The general rule (for it is not universal) in all such cases," says Mr. Justice STORY, "is, that the purchaser, if he chooses, is entitled to have the contract specifically performed as far as the vendor can perform it, and to have an abatement out of the purchase money, or compensation for any deficiency in the title, quantity, quality, description, or other matter touching the estate." (Story's Eq. Jur. Sec. 779; Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 315; Attorney General v. Day, 1 Ves. 218; Voor- Thompson*, 34 Ala. 633; Collins v. Smith, 1 Head. Tenn. 251; Wright v. Young, 6 Wis. 127.) The objection that the tender is not properly alleged is untenable. When acts to be done by two parties are mutual and concurrent, an allegation in the complaint that plaintiff offered to perform his part of the contract, and a continued readiness to perform, and a refusal by defendant, is sufficient to sustain an action for specific performance; the tender in such cases only going to the question of costs. (Stevenson v. Maxwell, 2 Comstock, 408; St. Paul Division v. Brown, 9 Minn. 157.) Especially when the vendor, as in the case at bar, refuses to perform. (Stone v. Sprague, 20 Barbour, 509; Bellinger v. Kitts, 6 Barbour, 281.) The offer to perform, and the right to a tender, if it ever existed, is waived by the neglect of applicant to discharge the estate from the cloud upon his title. (Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Barbour, 143.)

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

The plaintiff sues in ejectment, and relies for a recovery on his legal title. The defendant Forrest, the vendee of Caldwell, sets up in his cross complaint a contract made between the plaintiff and Caldwell, by which the plaintiff sold to Caldwell the premises in controversy, and covenanted to convey the same to him upon the payment of the purchase money therein mentioned; and alleges that he entered into possession of the land under the contract; that the plaintiff falsely and fraudulently represented that he owned the whole land; but that in truth he owned only the undivided half of it; that he offered to accept a deed from plaintiff of so much of the land as the plaintiff was the owner of, and to pay the plaintiff therefor a proportionate part of the purchase money; and he prays for a specific performance of the agreement as to the undivided half of the land.

The contract, as already remarked, shows that the plaintiff sold the whole land, and not, as he now contends, only his interest in the land. True, he could not convey any greater interest in the land than he held, but the contract recites a sale of the entire title. The covenants which, by the terms of the contract, are to be inserted in the deed, do not limit the extent of the interest attempted to be sold, for upon a sale in fact of the entire title, the vendor may restrict the covenants, whether express or implied, in such manner as the parties may agree. Nor indeed will the plaintiff be permitted to aver, in the face of the agreement, that he sold less than the whole title to the land, unless he can also aver that the written contract by reason of fraud, mistake, or the like, does not show the real contract.

Upon the discovery by the vendee, that the plaintiff held only the undivided half of the land, he was entitled to proceed at once to rescind the contract; but he was not obliged to adopt that course. He was entitled to proceed, as he has done in this case, to have the contract specifically enforced to the extent of the plaintiff's interest in the land. The discussion, therefore, of the rules of law which may be applicable, when the vendee elects to rescind the contract on account of the fraudulent representations of the vendor, are immaterial, for the vendee elects, not to rescind, but to affirm the contract, so far as the plaintiff is able to perform it.

It does not expressly appear, that at the time of the sale, the plaintiff had the possession of the land, but as Caldwell acquired the possession under the contract, it may be assumed, as both parties seem to concede, that the plaintiff then held the possession. Whatever possession he may have had, and whatever may have been the source of his right of possession, it is clear that such right passed to the vendee by virtue of the sale. In proceeding to specifically enforce the contract, it is clear that it is not incumbent on the defendant to restore or offer to restore the possession to the plaintiff. In such case it is equally clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to any portion of the rents and profits accruing since the contract was made, for the reason that he was not, and is not now, entitled to the possession of the premises if the defendant is entitled to a specific performance of the contract. That is the only remaining question.

The cross complaint of defendant Forrest is sufficient to entitle him to a judgment for a specific performance of the agreement, and in this respect it is sustained by the findings. The plaintiff does not controvert the position—and there is no doubt of its soundness—that if he is unable to perform the entire agreement, and can convey only an undivided half of the land, he may be compelled to convey that interest. To entitle the defendant to the relief, it was necessary for him to pay or tender as the purchase money only one half of the contract price. The offer to pay that sum is alleged, and the finding is in accordance therewith. The possession which the plaintiff had will be referred, for its right, to his title to the undivided half of the land which he then held; and as the defendant is entitled to such possession, the plaintiff is neither entitled to be restored to the possession jointly with the defendant, nor to any separate compensation for such possession beyond the one half of the stipulated price for the whole land.

The question as to the correctness of the ruling of the Court, in permitting the defendant to amend his cross complaint in respect to the allegation of the fraudulent representation of the plaintiff as to his title to the land, need not be noticed; as in the view we have taken of the nature of the cross complaint, the amendment was immaterial.

THE EEL RIVER NAVIGATION COMPANY v. JUSTUS STRUVER.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS UPON CORPORATION—PRESIDENT DE JURE.—In an action against a corporation, where the summons was served upon Bristol, who had been duly elected its President and presided at several meetings of its Board of Trustees, and who had never resigned, or been removed, or his office declared vacant, or a permanent President chosen in his place—though he had left the county and no longer took any part in the management of the corporation affairs, and at the meeting of the Board after his so leaving the county, another person was elected President pro tem. for that meeting, and was regarded by the stockholders as the President: held, that Bristol was still President de jure, and the service upon the corporation valid.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

In December, 1867, Justus Struver, as the assignee of E. W. Linsley & Co., commenced an action in the Fourth District Court against the Eel River Navigation Company to recover a balance alleged to be due for goods sold and delivered. The summons was served in the same month, in San Francisco, upon J. D. Bristol as the President of the corporation. No appearance being made a default was entered and judgment by default taken against the corporation in January, 1868, for six thousand eight hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty-one cents. It was this judgment which the present action was brought to set aside.

The Eel River Navigation Company was organized as a corporation by filing its certificate in the County Clerk's office of Humboldt County, on October 2d, 1865; and Ferndale, in that county, named as the principal place of business. On the next day a meeting of the Trustees mentioned in the certificate was held at Ferndale, and Bristol, who was one of the number, was elected President for three months. He attended and presided over another meeting of the Trustees, held on October fifth, and soon afterwards left Humboldt County and never returned or afterwards took any part whatever in the concerns of the corporation. On October fourteenth, at a meeting of the Trustees — Bristol being then absent — N. Patrick was elected President pro tem. for that meeting; and it appears that he continued to act as President de facto. None of the other officers, or agents, or stockholders, knew anything about the service on Bristol until several months after the entry of judgment against the corporation.

Argument for Appellant.

There having been a judgment in the present action for defendant, the plaintiff appealed.

M. G. Cobb, for Appellant.

If Bristol were ever President at all, it was only for the first three months of the existence of the corporation. (Hitt. Dig. 933, 936.) If he remained President after the first three months, he was simply President de jure, and Patrick was President de facto. But Patrick, so far as Struver was concerned, was President de jure at the time of the service of the summons. (Touhy v. Chase, 30 Cal. 524; People v. Allen, 6 Wend. 487; Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41; Golt v. Eves, 12 Conn. 248; Pond v. Negus, 8 Mass. 230; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. 612.) Even if Patrick were only President de facto, service should have been made on him and not on Bristol, even if Bristol were President de jure. (Ang. & Ames on Cor., Sec. 286; Berrian v. Methodist Soc. of N. Y., 4 Abbott Pr. 424; McCall v. Byram Manufacturing Co., 6 Conn. 435.)

Courts, of law and equity both, will not tolerate any fraud, trick, or misrepresentation, in the service of process, by means of which the spirit and intent of the law is violated, even though its letter be strictly complied with. (Bulkley v. Bulkley, 6 Abb. 311; Carpenter v. Spooner, 2 Sandf. 717; 2

Walter Van Dyke, for Respondent.

No other President than Bristol was ever elected, or attempted to be elected. Patrick was never elected other than President pro tem. He was neither President de jure nor de facto—there was not even the color of an election as President. (Ang. & Ames on Cor., Sec. 287.)

There is no sufficient showing for the interposition of a Court of equity; no reason given why a motion to open the default was not made. (Pr. Act, Sec. 68; Bibend v. Krentz, 20 Cal. 109; 2 Story Eq. Jur. Secs. 887, 888; Floyd v. Jaynes, 6 John. Ch. 479; 7 Cranch, 336.)

This appeal being from the judgment only, the appellant is bound by the findings, and they sustain the judgment. (Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 107.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an appeal by the plaintiff, on the judgment roll alone, from a judgment for the defendant. The action is to set aside a judgment obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff, on the ground that one Bristol, on whom the summons in that action was served, as President of the corporation, was not, when served, the President, or indeed an officer of said corporation; that the corporation or its officers had no knowledge of the pendency of the action until long after the judgment by default was entered, and that it has a meritorious defense.

It appears from the findings that Bristol was duly elected the President of the corporation soon after its organization, and presided at several meetings of the Board of Trustees; that he subsequently ceased to reside in the county in which the corporation had its principal place of business, and after he left the county, at a meeting of the Board one Patrick was elected President pro tem. for that meeting; but Bristol never resigned his office, and was never removed, nor was his office declared vacant; that Bristol thereafter took no part in the management of the affairs of the corporation, and Patrick was regarded by the stockholders as the President; but no permanent President was ever chosen in place of Bristol.

Upon these facts, I think the Court below properly held the service upon Bristol as President to be valid and sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction over the corporation. Service upon Patrick as President de facto might, and probably would have been, good; but Bristol was President de jure, and I think the service upon him was clearly valid.

BENJAMIN BRUNDAGE v. SAMUEL ADAMS AND JAMES DEVLIN.

SERVICE OF STATEMENT.—A statement on motion for a new trial need not be served unless there is a rule of Court requiring service. The statute only requires such statement to be filed.

WAIVER OF NOTICE OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—Proposing amendments to a statement on motion for a new trial is a waiver of a failure to serve a notice of the motion, unless the party proposing the amendments makes the objection, or reserves his right to make it when he proposes his amendments.

ASSESSMENTS ON MINING INTERESTS.—The statute of 1865-6 in relation to levying assessments against the owners of interests in mining claims for the purposes of working the same, applies only to copartners in the claim, and has no reference to those who are mere owners and shareholders, without the partnership relation.

LIEN.—To warrant such assessment, if the partnership relation does not exist, the joint owner must be notified that thenceforward he will be deemed a copartner for the purpose of working the claim, and the service of the notice changes the relation of the parties, and creates a mining partnership.

Argument for Appellant.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.—Constitutionality of the Act of April 2d, 1866, providing for assessments on interests in mining claims not discussed or decided.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixteenth Judicial District, Kern County.

The Court below rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Whiting & Naphtaly, for Appellant.

No evidence, aside from the deeds, is offered to show that defendants were either "the owners or occupants of a mining claim;" that they ever "associated themselves together" for any purpose; or that any single act was done by which they could be brought within the power of the law.

We insist that effect is to be given to the word "such," and that before the deed becomes evidence of the facts recited in it, it must, at least, be shown that the parties whom it is sought to divest of their property, by means of it, are of the class of persons toward whom the Act is directed; that they are either owners or occupants of a mining claim, and that they have associated themselves for the purpose of working or prospecting a mining claim. It is only after these and many other preliminary facts are shown to exist that any proceedings whatever are authorized.

But even admitting that these deeds are competent evidence of the facts therein recited, they do not recite sufficient to bring the respondent within the Act of 1866. Section one of that Act premises that it is applicable only "whenever two or more persons being owners, occupants, or locators of any mining claim, or where any two or three persons shall have associated themselves together * * * for the purpose of working or prospecting any mining claim, or any of the public lands of the United States, shall, after being notified in writing by said mining company, that they have been associated in said mining claim, be deemed to be copartners for the purpose of prospecting or working said mining claim, and shall be subject to the provisions and liabilities imposed by this Act."

Opinion of the Court—Wallace, J.

Quint & Hardy, for Respondent.

The same rules of law which apply to sales for unpaid taxes are applicable to this case. Prima facie the deed is evidence that all the proceedings were regular, and in accordance with law. The burden of showing irregularity is thrown upon the defendants. (O'Grady v. Bartisel, 23 Cal. 287; Moss v. Shear, 25 Cal. 38; Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.) In this case no attack is made, nor attempt to prove any irregularity in the proceedings. As a general rule, Courts will take notice of whatever ought to be generally known within the limits of their jurisdiction. They take notice who fill the various county offices within their jurisdiction. (Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.) If the defendants were not notified as the law required—if the instruments evidencing the plaintiffs' title were not genuine, how easy for them to have shown the fact. The question of notice was a matter within their own knowledge.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The Court below should not have denied the motion of the defendants for a new trial because they had not served their statement in support of the motion. They had filed it within the time provided in the stipulation of June twenty-third. Neither the stipulation, nor the statute, nor any rule of the Court below which has been called to our attention required them to serve it. (Sec. 195.)

The point is now, however, made in argument here, that the motion for a new trial was correctly denied, because the defendants, though they filed, did not serve their notice of intention to move for a new trial. But the answer is, that the plaintiff did not make this objection, nor reserve his right to make it, when he proposed his amendment to the statement. Had he done so the fact of service might possibly have been shown, or a waiver of it in some way made to appear.

The action is brought to quiet the alleged title of the plaintiff to certain mining ground, being an undivided interest in the Delphi mining claim, in Kern County. The answer denies the plaintiff's title. On the trial the plaintiff undertook to show that he had acquired the interest and estate formerly owned by the defendants in the mine. For this purpose he offered and read in evidence, against the objections of the defendants, a conveyance made by Ross, the Sheriff of Kern County, running to the plaintiff as grantee, and purporting to convey to the latter the estate of the defendant Adams in the premises.

This conveyance in substance recites that in the Clear Creek Mining District, in Kern County, an assessment was levied against the owners and shareholders of the Delphi claim, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of prospecting and working it; that Adams, owner of an undivided interest, neglected and refused to pay, after notice given; that thereupon his interest in the claim was advertised for ten days, and was sold by the Sheriff to the plaintiff, pursuant to the provision of "An act concerning partnerships for mining purposes," etc. The plaintiff also read in evidence, against the objections of the defendants, a conveyance to himself made by the Sheriff, and purporting to convey to the plaintiff the interest of Devlin, the other defendant, in the mining claim, and reciting, mutatis mutandis, the same matter recited in the Adams deed, already mentioned.

The objections taken by the defendants to the introduction of these deeds were numerous, and among the rest was the objection that there was no authority of law shown in the Sheriff to convey the property of the defendants to the plaintiff, and that the conveyances do not sufficiently set forth a compliance with the requirements of the Act of the Legislature to which they refer. The argument upon either side had proceeded here upon the assumed constitutionality of the statute itself, through the provisions of which the plaintiff claims to have acquired the title of the defendants; and we shall, therefore, determine the case without reference to that question.

It will be seen that the statute (1865-6, p. 828) in the first section, distinctly designates the person who "shall be subject to the provisions and liabilities imposed by the Act." Such persons must be copartners — "copartners for the purpose of prosecuting or working said mining claim," in the language of the statute. It is not enough that they are "owners and shareholders," as these deeds recite that Adams and Devlin were, or that they are associated together for the purpose of working or prospecting a mining claim on the public lands. So long as these and no other relations exist between the parties their interest in the mining claim is not subject to be divested by such proceedings as those here relied upon. Notice must first be given to such occupant, locator, or person associated, that he will be thenceforward deemed and held to be a copartner "for the purpose of prospecting or working said mining claim." Such a notice given to those who are owners, or shareholders, or locators, or occupants, etc., by one who is jointly concerned with them in the enterprise, would have the effect, under the provisions of the statute, to change the relations of the parties inter sese, and create a mining copartnership between them; and only after that had been effected, a notice or notices looking to the levying of an assessment, etc., under section two of the Act, etc., may be served, and other proceedings taken, according to the further provisions of the statute. There is no authority whatever to proceed as here attempted under the statute, unless the mining copartnership be first created between the parties; and there being no evidence tending to show that fact, the Court below should have excluded the conveyance offered by the plaintiff.

Judgment and order denying new trial reversed, and cause remanded.

NICHOLAS MARQUEZ v. JOHN B. FRISBIE ET AL.

PROOF OF RIGHTS OF CLAIMANTS UNDER THE SUSCOL ACT.—It was the special duty of the Register and Receiver of the United States Land Office at San Francisco to take proof of the necessary facts entitling applicants, under the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1862, relative to the Suscol Rancho, to the benefit of that Act; and where there is no charge of fraudulent proofs, the award of the Register and Receiver will be regarded as conclusive.

PRE-EMPTION OF LANDS INCLUDED IN THE SUSCOL RANCHO.—By the Act of March 3d, 1863, relative to the Suscol Rancho, all the lands included in the grant to Vallesjo are withdrawn from the operation of the general preemption laws of the United States, and an attempt to preempt such lands under the general laws is futile, and confers no title, either legal or equitable.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts in this case are substantially the same as in Hutton v. Frisbie, reported in 37 Cal. 475, except that in this case the plaintiff claimed to have been in possession of the premises in suit ever since 1853, and alleged that the patentee, Frisbie, never was in occupation of it. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the Court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action. The demurrer was sustained, upon the authority of Hutton v. Frisbie, supra, and plaintiff appealed.

M. A. Wheaton, for Appellant.

The plaintiff settled upon the land before it was improved or used, and has resided ever since upon it. Upon this point we insist that by the terms of the Suscol Act (12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 808, Sec. 2), the patentee was not entitled to enter in the Land Office, under that Act, lands which he had never reduced to possession, but which had been held in adverse possession against him before and at the time of the rejection of the grant claim, and ever since. (Sec. 2 of Suscol Act, 12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 808.) As to the other points in the case, we submit them upon the argument and authorities filed in Hutton v. Frisbie.

William H. Patterson, for Respondent, relied upon the points and authorities filed for the respondent in Hutton v. Frisbie.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

It is conceded by the plaintiff's counsel that this case comes strictly within the decision in Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475, unless it can be distinguished from it on the ground that the plaintiff was in the actual possession of the premises in controversy for many years prior to the passage of what is known as the Suscol Act (12 U. S. Stats. at Large, 808), and that Frisbie, the patentee under that Act, had not at any time reduced this land into his actual possession; and it is insisted that, under the second section of the Act, Frisbie was not entitled to enter lands of which he had never been

JOHN WILSON v. DANIEL SHACKELFORD AND OSCAR WILSON.

UNLAWFUL DETAINER — POSSESSION OF PREMISES WITHOUT ACTUAL PRESENCE.—Where a person entered upon a vacant quarter section of public land, erected a small dwelling-house upon it, slept there several nights, and then, locking the house and taking the key with him, returned to an adjoining county, where he had previously resided, with intention immediately to return with his family to the new house as his home, but found his wife too ill to be removed, and she continued so for several months: held, that in contemplation of law he remained in possession, and that such possession was sufficient to maintain an action of unlawful detainer, against a person entering in his absence and refusing to surrender, under section three of the forcible entry and unlawful detainer Act of 1866. (Stats. 1865-6, p. 768.)

SHELBY v. HOUSTON, 38 CAL. 410.—On the point that a person may be an occupant and have peaceable and undisturbed possession of premises within five days preceding an unlawful entry, within the meaning of section three of the forcible entry and unlawful detainer Act of 1866 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 768), without the actual presence of himself or any person in his behalf, affirmed.

APPEAL from the County Court of Santa Clara County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Fisher & Newman, for Appellant.

The plaintiff was only required to have the immediate right of possession of the premises as against the defendants to enable him to recover. His actual personal presence was not indispensable. (Minturn v. Burr, 16 Cal. 107; Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410.)

Hatch & Tully, for Respondents.

The very object of the Legislature, as we think, in using the words "occupant" and "actual occupant," in the third section of the forcible entry and unlawful detainer Act, was by limiting the right of action to the person who was in the actual possession at the time, to distinguish between the special remedy which the statute affords and the ordinary remedy afforded by the possessory action of ejectment. Under the construction given in Shelby v. Houston, we can not see why this action in the County Court can not be substituted for the action of ejectment in very many cases where that action has hitherto been considered the proper and only remedy. Certainly it can be so substituted in all cases where the plaintiff relies for recovery upon mere prior possession. We submit that the statute bears a different construction from that put upon it by Shelby v. Houston.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action for unlawful detainer under the third section of the Act of 1866 (Stats. 1865-6, p. 768.) On the trial the Court granted a nonsuit, and the plaintiff having moved for a new trial, which was denied, has brought this appeal. The proof was that in October, 1869, the plaintiff erected on a quarter section of public land in Santa Clara County a small dwelling-house, in which he slept for several nights, and then returned to San Mateo County, where he had previously resided, with the intention immediately to return with his family to the new house as his home; but on his arrival at his home in San Mateo found his wife too ill to be removed, and she so continued for several months; that on leaving the new house for San Mateo he locked the door and took the key with him; that in the ensuing month of January, during the plaintiff's absence, the defendants entered the new house and have ever since occupied it; that they obtained access to it by removing some of the boards from the side, and have refused to surrender the possession for more than five days, after a proper demand made. On the facts the Court below granted a nonsuit, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show that he was the actual occupant of the premises within five days before the entry of the defendants. That the plaintiff, in contemplation of law,

Statement of Facts.

was in possession of the house when the defendants entered is too plain to admit of debate. He had recently erected and occupied it, and was only temporarily absent, having the door locked and the key in his possession. But the defendants insist that this is not sufficient to maintain the action under the third section of the statute, which, it is claimed, requires an actual occupation of the premises by the plaintiff or some one in his behalf within five days before the entry. This precise question was before the Court in Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410, and was decided adversely to the construction now contended for. It is unnecessary to repeat the reasons for the construction adopted in that case, and which are fully stated in the opinion of the Court.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
HORACE HAWES.

STIPULATION IN COURT BELOW, WHEN NO PART OF APPEAL RECORD.—

Where a transcript on appeal contained neither bill of exceptions nor statement, and the only points raised depended upon a stipulation embodied in it, to the effect that for the purpose of a trial in the Court below and an appeal certain isolated facts (not, however, constituting the case to be determined) were agreed on. Held, that such stipulation was not an exception, nor a statement on appeal, nor a part of the judgment roll, and that therefore neither it nor the points depending upon it could be considered by the appellate Court.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, San Mateo County.

This was an action against the defendant, Hawes, and certain real estate, known as the "Redwood Farm," to recover taxes, amounting to seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars and eighty-seven cents, levied for the fiscal year 1868-9.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

The transcript on appeal, besides the pleadings, findings, and judgment, contained, under the head "Statement," a stipulation, dated June 14th, 1869, whereby it was agreed to submit the cause to the District Court upon the evidence and statement of facts therein given, and that upon them and the pleadings the Court should determine all questions of law and fact, and proceed to render final judgment, subject to appeal; and that, in case of appeal by either party, the same might be taken directly, without any previous application for new trial; and that this statement should stand for the statement on appeal. The evidence and facts set forth in the stipulation related to the time and manner of making up the assessment roll and levy of road tax in San Mateo County in 1868. There was nothing in the record purporting to be an objection or exception, nor anything purporting to be a statement, except the foregoing stipulation. There was a judgment on September 30th, 1869, for plaintiff, as demanded in the complaint, and defendant appealed.

Horace Hawes, for Appellant.

George W. Fox, District Attorney of San Mateo County, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The appeal is from the judgment, and rests upon the judgment roll, being in this case the pleadings, findings, and judgment—no bill of exceptions or statement appearing in the record. A stipulation is found embodied in the transcript, from which it would appear that for the purpose of a trial in the Court below and an appeal to this Court, if one should be thereafter taken, certain isolated facts were agreed upon (not, however, making up the case to be determined), and also agreeing that certain evidence might be offered on the trial, subject to objection, etc. This stipulation is not, by statute, part of the judgment roll. It is not an exception under section one hundred and eighty-eight, nor a statement on appeal under section three hundred and thirty-eight, and we can not therefore consider it or the points of the appellant, depending, as they do, wholly upon it.

The judgment is therefore affirmed, as of the 10th day of January, 1871.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not participate in the foregoing decision.

FREDERICK F. LOW, GOVERNOR, HENRY W. CLEAVELAND, J. D. WHITNEY, WILLIAM ASHBURNER, J. W. RAYMOND, E. S. HOLDEN, ALEXANDER DEERING, GEORGE W. COULTER, AND GALEN W. CLARK, CONSTITUTING AND KNOWN IN LAW AS "THE COMMISSIONERS TO MANAGE THE YOSEMITE VALLEY AND THE MARIPOSA BIG TREE GROVE," v. J. M. HUTCHINGS.

YOSEMITE VALLEY — THE STATE AS TRUSTEES — POWER OF LEGISLATURE.

— Congress having, in 1864, granted to the State of California the Yosemite Valley in trust for certain purposes, and with a proviso that it should remain inalienable forever, the State Legislature has no power to make an unconditional and absolute grant of it to a third person in violation of such trust.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT DEFEASIBLE BY GOVERNMENT BEFORE MONEY PAID.—

Though a qualified preëmptioner enter upon public land, with intention to preëmpt the same, and perform all the acts necessary to perfect his preëmption right, except the payment of the purchase price, the Government may, nevertheless, at any time before the price is actually paid or tendered, devote the land to another purpose, and thereby wholly defeat the right of preëmption.

HUTCHINGS AND LAMON SPECIAL ACT INOPERATIVE WITHOUT RATIFICATION BY CONGRESS.—The Act of February 20th, 1868, granting certain lands, held in trust by the State in Yosemite Valley, to Hutchings and Lamon, being in terms not to take effect until after its ratification by Congress, cannot, in the absence of such ratification, have any force, or serve as a muniment of title, or protect the contemplated grantees against an ejectment brought by the Commissioners appointed to manage the property.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, Mariposa County.

The District Judge, after reciting the facts, concluded his findings in the following language: "That it would operate as great and irreparable injury to defendant to be ejected from the lands in controversy, before the final action of Congress upon the Act of Legislature last mentioned; and as conclusion of law the Court finds that the defendant is entitled to judgment. The case of Hutton v. Frisbie, in 37 Cal. 495, and others cited by the plaintiffs' attorney, I do not consider in point—and I further decide that when a pre-emptioner enters upon the unsurveyed public lands, under the sanction of a public law, and makes improvements and becomes a bona fide settler, he acquires such rights as the Government cannot divest or take from him."

There having been a judgment for defendant in accordance with the findings, the plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Alex. Deering, for Appellants.

So far as the Act of the Legislature figures in this case, it may be disposed of by referring to its second section, which provides that it shall take effect "when ratified by Congress," and as Congress has not ratified it, it has no operation. But if it were in force, the Legislature had no more right to alienate any of the Yosemite Valley than any private individual; and its action was an unwarranted interference with matters that it had no right to attempt to control.

Argument for Respondent.

The only question involved in this case is, whether the defendant has acquired such rights, by merely settling on the land, as the Government could not divest? Were this question an open one counsel might claim the privilege of a more lengthy discussion; but as this Court has in four cases decided it, and it has been explicitly passed upon and decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, those decisions will be cited, with full confidence that although overruled by the learned Judge in the Court below, they will be received as authority in this Court. (Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 476; Hastings v. McGoogin, 27 Cal. 84; Page v. Hobbs, 27 Cal. 487; Page v. Fowler, 28 Cal. 609; People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 550; Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wallace, 191.)

L. F. Jones and J. B. Campbell, for Respondent.

We submit that there is more than one question in this case, and that one of them is, not whether the Government could have divested such rights as the defendant had acquired, but, rather, have such rights as defendant had acquired been divested? The case here is quite different from that passed upon in Hutton v. Frisbie and Frisbie v. Whitney. Defendant settled under the general laws, and subsequently Congress passed the Act of June 30th, 1864, granting the Yosemite Valley, and including defendant's land, to the State. There are no words in the Act indicating any intent to affect any rights or privileges which had then already accrued to a preëmption settler; and there was nothing in "the condition of things which called for such legislation," from which such an intent could be inferred. Applying the reasoning in Hutton v. Frisbie, to the effect of the Act of June 30th, 1864, the conclusion must be precisely the reverse of that reached in respect to the Act of March 3d, 1863, affecting the Suscol Ranch, which was involved in that case. The defendant has in his favor all "the equities which lie at the foundation of the preëmption policy" and all the equities which this Court conceded to the defendant in Hutton v. Frisbie. In that case the plaintiff sought, through the general preëemption laws, but against their spirit, to deprive the defendant of lands bought in reliance upon the Vallejo title. In this the plaintiffs seek through a special Act of Congress to deprive the defendants of land settled up and improvements bought in reliance upon the general preemption laws.

The conditions annexed to the grant by Congress are conditions subsequent, repugnant to the nature of the estate to which they are annexed, and are therefore void. (1 Greenl. Cruise, Title 13, Secs. 2, 20, 22; 1 Washb. R. P., Chap. 14, Sec. 6; 4 Kent, 150.) The State, therefore, took the fee, discharged of the conditions, and Congress would have no effective ratifying power; so that the defendant derived title under the special Act of February 20th, 1868, and is lawfully in possession.

But, independently of the foregoing considerations, the Acts and proceedings of the Legislature equitably operate as an estoppel against the maintaining of this action by the State or by her agents, the plaintiffs, in her behalf. If the judgment of the court below is right, it will be affirmed, though the reasons given should not be correct or full.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In the year 1864 the Congress of the United States, by special Act, granted to the State of California the Yosemite Valley and the grove of big trees in Mariposa County in trust for certain purposes, and with a proviso that they shall remain inalienable forever. The Act also requires the State to appoint a Board of Commissioners to manage the property in the execution of the trust, with power to make leases of portions of the land for a term or terms not exceeding ten years. In the year 1866 the Legislature accepted the grant, and appointed the plaintiffs a Board of Commissioners to manage the property, under the provisions of the Act of Congress, and with power to sue and be sued in respect to said lands in their official capacity. This action is ejectment in the ordinary form, brought by the Commissioners to recover one hundred and sixty acres of land situated in the Yosemite Valley, and in the occupation of the defendant. It appears from the findings of fact that in 1864, about forty days prior to the passage of said Act of Congress, the defendant, who was a duly qualified preëmptioner, entered upon the premises in controversy with the bona fide intention to preëmpt the same under the preëmption laws of the United States; that he purchased a dwelling-house and other improvements then on the premises, and has ever since resided upon and occupied said premises with his family; that he was, and at all times since his entry has been ready and willing to prove up his preëmption claim and to pay the purchase price therefor, but was hindered from doing so because the land had not been surveyed and sectionized, and was, therefore, not open to entry; that, with the intention to preëmpt the land as soon as an opportunity to do so was afforded, he had continued to make permanent and valuable improvements thereon.

If these were all the facts, there could be no possible doubt of the plaintiff's right to recover, under the principles announced in Whitney v. Frisbie, 9 Wallace, U. S. R. 191; Hutton v. Frisbie, 37 Cal. 475; reaffirmed in Marquez v. Frisbie, decided at the present term. These cases decide, after elaborate argument, and it may now be considered as finally settled, that if a qualified preëmptioner enter upon a portion of the public domain, with the intention to preëmpt the same, and performs all the acts necessary to perfect his preëmption right, except the payment of the purchase price, the Government may, nevertheless, at any time before the price is actually paid or tendered, devote the land to another purpose, and thereby wholly defeat the right of preëmption. It is unnecessary to repeat here the process of reasoning by which the courts have arrived at this result. It will be found to be elaborately stated in the cases referred to; and, whether deemed to be satisfactory or otherwise, must be accepted as settling the law on that point.

But it is claimed that the defendant's case does not come within the principle of these decisions, because in February, 1868, the Legislature of this State passed an Act which on that day became a law, whereby the State granted to the defendant the premises in controversy. If the grant had been wholly unconditional and absolute in terms, and had taken effect in presenti, it would have been clearly void for want of power in the Legislature to make it. It would have been in open and flagrant violation of the trust on which these lands were conveyed to the State, and, therefore, void. But the Legislature was evidently aware that it had no power to make the grant without the sanction of the United States, nor did it attempt to make it, except with the approval of Congress; for the second section of the Act provides that "this Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its ratification by the Congress of the United States." Congress, however, has not as yet ratified it, and, consequently, the act has not yet taken effect, and is not as yet in force. As a muniment of title, it is and will continue to be wholly inoperative until ratified by Congress. Nor can the memorial of the Legislature, requesting Congress to ratify the grant to the defendant, improve his status in the Courts. Whatever consideration these proceedings may be entitled to at the hands of the Commissioners, as an argument why they should forbear, for the present, to press their demand for the possession, it is clear that they establish no equities in the defendant of which the Courts can take cognizance. The Legislature has not, either expressly or by implication, abridged or modified the powers of the Commissioners; and so long as these remain unimpaired, and the trust remains in force under which the State holds these lands, the right of the plaintiffs to their possession cannot be successfully resisted. From the facts found by the Court the defendant's case appears to be one of peculiar hardship, entitling him to relief in some form; but, however great the hardship upon the defendant, his only remedy is an appeal to Congress for relief in some appropriate form. The Courts can afford him none as the case now stands.

Judgment reversed, with an order to the Court below to enter judgment for the plaintiffs on the findings.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
JAMES C. EDWARDS.

CHALLENGE OF JUROR FOR IMPLIED BIAS.—The unqualified expression of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of a prisoner on trial is ground of challenge of a juror for implied bias.

ANSWER TO CHALLENGE.—It is no answer to such challenge to say that in the mind or thought of the party challenged the opinion was qualified, though in its form of expression it was unqualified. The admitted fact being that he had unqualifiedly expressed his opinion upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, he was thereby, in judgment of law, incompetent to serve as a juror.

EVIDENCE OF CHARACTER OF PRISONER.—In a criminal case proof of bad character of the deceased is admissible only when it tends in some way in connection with the immediate circumstances under which the killing was done, to show that the prisoner had sufficient grounds, as a reasonable man, to fear that he was himself about to receive at the hands of the deceased some great bodily harm, and that he acted under the influence of fear in killing the deceased.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for the Respondent.

[No brief on file.]

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The prisoner was convicted of the crime of murder in the second degree, in killing one Ragan.

In impaneling the trial jury, R. Carrol, testifying as to his competency to serve as a juror, in answer to questions propounded by prisoner's counsel, stated that he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, but did not know whether that opinion was qualified or unqualified; that his opinion was formed from rumor and from what he had heard of the case from those who pretended to know the facts; that he believed the statements of these persons, though he did not know whether they were witnesses or not; that he still entertained the same opinion, and that considerable evidence would be required to remove that opinion, and that unless such evidence was produced to change his opinion it was fixed and certain; that he had talked with different persons, and had expressed his opinion without any qualification.

In answer to inquiries made by the Court, he stated that he had no prejudice against the defendant; that he could decide the case impartially; that the opinion he had formed would not influence his judgment; that he would be governed by the evidence, etc.

Upon these facts a challenge for implied bias, interposed by the prisoner, was overruled by the Court below, and Carrol was challenged peremptorily by the prisoner, whose peremptory challenges were exhausted during the impaneling of the jury.

In overruling the challenge for implied bias the Court below manifestly erred.

The statute (Section 347) provides that a challenge for implied bias may be offered for any one of certain causes therein enumerated, among them, that the proposed juror has "formed or expressed an unqualified opinion or belief that the prisoner is guilty or not guilty of the offense charged."

Here it is undisputed that Carrol had "expressed his opinion without any qualification."

The statute declares that the unqualified expression of an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner is ground of challenge for implied bias. When such challenge is interposed it is no answer to say that in the mind or thought of the party the opinion was qualified, though in its form of expression it was unqualified. In People v. Cottle, 6 Cal. 228, one of the jurors, on his examination as to his competency, said that he had not formed or expressed an unqualified opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant; that he had formed a qualified opinion, founded upon report merely, which opinion he had expressed, but that, in expressing it, he had not expressed any qualification. In that case Mr. Chief Justice MURRAY said: "It is argued by the Attorney General that there is a difference between expressing an unqualified opinion and the unqualified expression of an opinion. And so there is, if we resort to a verbal criticism or mere metaphysical disquisition. It was not the intention of the Legislature to leave the rights of parties to rest upon so narrow and dangerous a foundation. Their obvious intention was to exclude from the jury box every one who had either formed an unqualified opinion, or, having formed an opinion, had expressed it without qualification."

The answers made by Carrol to the inquiries propounded by the Court had no bearing whatever upon the question in hand. It was of no sort of import whether he, in fact, had any prejudice against the prisoner or not, nor whether he supposed that, as a juror, he would be governed by the evidence or not. The admitted fact being that he had unqualifiedly expressed his opinion upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, he was thereby become, in judgment of law, incompetent to serve as a juror—just as if it had appeared that he was related by consanguinity to the prisoner (also a ground of challenge for implied bias)—in which case it would be idle to inquire of the proposed juror whether or not, in his opinion, he could give his accused kinsman an impartial trial.

The prisoner offered to show that the deceased was a man of violence, of turbulent character, and bloodthirsty. The evidence was excluded, and, we think, properly. The deceased was unarmed when he was assaulted, and the prisoner approached him from behind, and, while the deceased was peaceably conversing with an acquaintance, shot him in the back, the ball entering his body "a little to the left of the backbone, nearly at the lower edge of the shoulder blade," giving him a mortal wound; and when he had fallen, the prisoner shot him again, and a third time, each wound being, in the opinion of the medical witness, mortal. It is said in People v. Murray, 10 Cal. 310, that if a contest has occurred between the deceased and the prisoner, "the reputation of the deceased may sometimes be given in proof, to show that the defendant was justified in believing himself in danger when the circumstances of the contest are equivocal. But here there was, confessedly, no contest, nor even an altercation between the deceased and the prisoner at the time of the killing; for, as we have seen, the shot was fired from behind; and the deceased does not seem to have been even aware of the proximity of the prisoner at the moment. Under such circumstances, the character of the deceased, as being peaceable or otherwise, is of no import. Bad as it may have been, the prisoner had no right to kill him on that account. The bad character of the deceased, when allowed to be proven, should tend, in some degree, in connection with the immediate circumstances under which the killing was done, to show that the prisoner had sufficient grounds, as a reasonable man, to fear that he was himself about to receive, at the hands of the deceased, some great bodily harm, and that he acted under the influence of that fear in killing him. There must be some fact transpiring at the time of the killing indicating the then immediate purpose of the deceased toward the prisoner to be hostile, or at least equivocal, in its character, and which may be illustrated by the known reputation of the deceased, if he had one, in the community as a man of violence, etc.

Here there was no such fact; and the inquiry into the character of the deceased was correctly disallowed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

Points decided.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
AH SAM.

INDICTMENT FOR POSSESSING UNFINISHED FORGED BANK BILLS—TWO DESCRIPTIONS OF SAME OFFENSE.—In a criminal case, under the seventy-sixth section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, the indictment in one count charged the defendant with having in his possession "five hundred certain false, forged, and counterfeit blank and unfinished bank-bills, each made in the form and similitude of a bill for the payment of money made to be issued by * * * the Chartered Bank of India, Austria, and China, a foreign corporation then lawfully organized and incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland," doing business at Hongkong, with intent to procure the bills to be finished in order to utter them as genuine bills, and defraud the said bank. In a second count, which was preceded by a statement that the offense charged therein was the same as that described in the first count, it charged that the bills were in the form and similitude of bills for the payment of property. Held, that it was but a different description of the same offense, and that there was nothing repugnant in saying that the unfinished bills have the form and similitude of those which have been finished.

MOTION DEFINED, AND HOW MADE.—A motion is an application for a rule or order made vice voce to a Court or Judge. Making out and filing a written application for such rule or order is not sufficient. The attention of the Court must be called to it, and the court moved to grant it.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.—A motion for a new trial must be made vice voce, and, if desired, the grounds of the motion and the rulings of the Court thereon may be embodied in a bill of exceptions, and can be reviewed by the Supreme Court in no other way.

CHARGE AS TO INCORPORATION IN INDICTMENT FOR POSSESSING COUNTERFEIT NOTES.—In an indictment for possessing counterfeit notes with intent to utter them, if the legal existence of the corporation be not made an issue, it is not necessary to charge that the banking house whose bills have been imitated was an incorporated company. It would be equally an offense whether the company be actually incorporated or not, so it is acting as a corporation, and issues bank bills which are current anywhere.

Darwin & Murphy, for Appellant.

Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for Respondent.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The defendant was indicted jointly with one Ah Tuck, under the seventy-sixth section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, for having in his possession blank and unfinished bank bills, in the form and similitude of a bill for the payment of money, made to be issued by a corporate bank, to wit: The Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, being a corporation doing business at Hongkong, with intent to fill up and complete the same, or to cause it to be done, and to pass or cause them to be passed, etc.

The defendant having been convicted on motion in arrest of judgment made several objections to the sufficiency of the indictment. The first is, that the indictment charges two offenses. It is in two counts, but in the second it refers to the first, as recommended in People v. Thompson, 28 Cal. 214, in such manner as to identify the offense as the same already described. And besides, the second count is preceded by a statement that the offense therein described is the same. In the first count the defendant is charged with having in his possession blanks in the form and similitude of bills made, etc., for the payment of money; in the second it is charged that they were in the form and similitude of bills for the payment of property. This is evidently but a different description of the same offense, and was probably designed to meet a doubt in the mind of the prosecutor as to whether the blank bill was in legal effect a bill for the payment of money or property—it being for the payment of five dollars or its equivalent in the currency of the island. Nor is either count in the indictment repugnant in itself. The statute describes the offense as having in possession blanks having the form or similitude of bills for the payment of money or property, made to be issued, etc. The indictment substantially follows the language of the statute. The resemblance required is of blank bills to those which are finished and completed by the bank, excepting, of course, that the blanks are not filled. Nor does the fact that they have the form and similitude of bills made to be issued imply that they are finished. There is nothing repugnant in saying that the unfinished bills have the form and similitude of those which have been finished.

It is unnecessary to discuss the question whether the statement in the first count, that the blank was in the form of a bill for the payment of money, or the statement in the second count, that the blank had the similitude of a bill for the payment of property, is inconsistent with the blank which is set out in the indictment. Under our statute the different counts contained in the indictment neither in fact nor in theory state different offenses. The two counts are but different narratives of the same acts constituting the offense. They are added either through a doubt as to the legal effect of certain facts or to avoid a possible variance between the allegations and the proof.

The supposed repugnance is one of description merely, and the copy of the blank being set out, the party could not be injured by a mistake as to its legal effect. The main purpose of the two counts, as we have said, was probably to meet this doubt, and if the statement in one count in this respect is incorrect, the other must be correct. We think the motion in arrest of judgment was properly overruled.

After the motion for an arrest of judgment had been denied, the defendant moved the Court for a new trial. The minutes of the Clerk show that the "defendant, by his counsel, moved the Court for a new trial, and filed in writing his grounds thereof." Whereupon it was ordered, that the motion for a new trial be stricken from the files, the defendant, by his counsel, excepting. The motion for a new trial was then denied. These facts appear in the minutes of the Clerk and not in the bill of exceptions. The order striking the "motion for a new trial" from the files is earnestly insisted upon as error here, and we shall consider it without passing upon the question whether it is properly brought up.

A motion is properly an application for a rule or order, made viva voce to a Court or Judge. It is distinguished from the more formal applications for relief by petition or complaint. The grounds of the motion are often required to be stated in writing and filed. In practice the form of the application itself is often reduced to writing and filed. But making out and filing the application itself is not to make the motion.

If nothing more were done, it would not be error in the Court to entirely ignore the proceeding. The attention of the Court must be called to it. The Court must be moved to grant the order. (3 Stephens' Com. 679; Burrill's Law Dict., word "Motion.")

The statute neither required nor authorized this motion to be made in writing. It must be made viva voce, and, if desired, the grounds of the motion and the ruling may be embodied in a bill of exceptions, and can be reviewed here in no other way. The form of the application filed would not be evidence to us of the application or motion actually made. Again, the "motion," or the grounds of the motion which was filed, do not appear in the transcript. It may have contained matter disrespectful to the Court, or a brief with which the record should not be incumbered. If the document were unexceptional in every respect, we see no harm in allowing it to be filed; and, on the other hand, the refusal could not possibly injure the defendant. In that view the controversy appears, to some extent, to be a personal one between the counsel and the court, in which no rights of the defendant or the people are involved. There was no error in refusing to allow the document to be filed.

The next question is one of greater importance and of much more difficulty. The indictment charges the defendant with feloniously having in possession certain blank and unfinished bills in the form and similitude of a bill for the payment of money, to be issued by an incorporated bank, viz.: The Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, a foreign corporation then lawfully organized and incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and then carrying on business as such banking corporation at Hongkong, in China, etc., with intent, etc., to defraud the said The Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China. On the trial, the prosecution was permitted to prove the existence of The Chartered Bank of India, etc., by reputation, that it was acting as a corporation and as a banking house, and as such issued bank bills, which were received as current in certain countries.

The materiality of the evidence, if it be material, arises entirely from the unnecessary allegations of the indictment. It was not necessary to charge that the banking house whose bills were imitated, was an incorporated company. If it were a banking company, actually issuing bank bills, which were current anywhere, it is sufficient. The corporate character of the company is supposed to become material just as, in an indictment for stealing a black horse, though it was unnecessary to aver that the horse was black, yet it being averred it becomes material, in order to establish the identity of the crime. So, here, the fact that the company was incorporated becomes material only as a matter of description, and is not an element of the crime. We do not admit the justice of the comparison. It would be equally an offense whether the company be actually incorporated or not, so it is acting as a corporation and issues bank bills which are current. So, too, as a matter of identity, we think the description is satisfied by proof that the company is known as a corporate company and is acting as such, and as such issues bills which come within the statute. The case is widely different where a suit is pending, in which the legal existence of the corporation may be made an issue. (U. S. v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. 392; People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507.)

But admitting that, under the averments in the indictment, it became material to prove that The Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China was an incorporated company, we think the proof offered and received for that purpose was competent. It is enacted in the seventy-ninth section of the Act concerning crimes and punishments, that upon the trial of any person for forging the bill or note of an incorporated company or bank, or for passing, or attempting to pass, or having in possession with intent to pass, such bills, the incorporation of such company or bank may be proved by general reputation. This section does not include the particular offense charged in this indictment; but the inference cannot be, therefore, drawn that it was the intention of the Legislature that such evidence should not be competent in this class of cases. The special mention of certain offenses in the statute is evidence that the law was not intended to apply to others; but cannot be understood as equivalent to a positive provision, that a different rule shall prevail in other cases. Statutes prescribing rules of evidence are not always designed to effect a change in the common law rules. They may be intended to declare what the common law is, for the purpose, merely, of making that certain which before was doubtful. Such, we think, was the object of the statute; and the particular offense charged in this indictment was, no doubt, omitted from the list of the more important kindred offenses by mere oversight. We can conceive of no possible reason why any distinction should be made.

The decisions upon the subject are conflicting. Many of the earlier cases hold that in all cases where it becomes material to prove a foreign corporation, it can only be done in the same way as any foreign law or statute is proven. (Stone v. State, 20 N. J. 401.)

This is undoubtedly the rule in civil cases, where the fact of the legal existence of the corporation is in issue. But in criminal prosecutions a different rule has generally been adopted, and, we think, now universally prevails. In such cases there is no presumption that there is better evidence in the possession of the party offering it, which he withholds. The defendant is entitled to a speedy trial; and the ends of justice would be entirely defeated if such evidence were necessary. Besides, such evidence would be equally necessary on the preliminary examination, or before the Grand Jury, or in any proceeding to prevent the commission of the crime. It is said, also, that the fact that bills are forged upon a bank purporting to be incorporated, raises a presumption that it is so. It is a sort of an admission, on the part of the wrong-doer, of the character of the person against whom the crime is committed. Proof by reputation in such matters is not very liable to lead to error. If the bills of a company purporting to be incorporated are generally received, and passed as current, it is very strong, though not conclusive, evidence that the company is incorporated. Such evidence is received on the same principle that it is permitted to prove that the signatures to a forged bank bill are not genuine, by experts, without calling the officers themselves, or any person who has seen them write. It is necessary to receive such proof in furtherance of justice. It is very analogous to the rule which allows a party to prove the official character of an officer, by proving that he has acted as such. The existence and character of a bank is generally as well known where its bills are current as the fact that one acting as Constable rightfully performs such functions. The views here expressed are, we think, fully sustained by the following authorities: People v. Davis, 21 Wend. 309; Saser v. State of Ohio, 13 Ohio, 453; Reed v. State of Ohio, 15 Ohio, 217; Denio v. People, 1 Parker's Crim. Cases, 469.

We think the preponderance of authority decidedly in favor of the competency of the evidence; but if it presented only a case where the decisions were conflicting, we should decide in favor of the rule adopted by the statute in kindred cases.

There is but one other question in this case which we think is worth while to notice. That arises upon this state of facts, as appears from the bill of exceptions: The blanks, the possession of which is charged in the indictment, were printed by one Baker, who, before printing them, revealed the matter to the city police, and had an arrangement with them by which the police should be in ambush, ready to seize the defendants and the blanks immediately after they had been handed to them by Baker. Baker had from the police assurances that the blanks would be paid for, and without such assurances he would not have printed them. The ambush was laid according to the arrangement, and upon a signal being given by Baker, according to an understanding between him and the police, the latter appeared and seized Ah Sam and Ah Tuck, and took from them the impressions soon after they had come into their hands.

It is claimed that the defendants never had such a possession of the blanks as is contemplated by the statute; that they were printed for the police, under a contract with them, and were really delivered to them according to contract, and were the property of the police; that the mere handing of them to the defendants, to be immediately taken away by the real owners, was no more than laying them upon a counter for them to take. They were given to the defendants at the request of the police, and remained, during all the time they were in defendants' hands, completely under the control of the police; that the defendants did not have them as their property, and, during the time they held them, could not have intended to pass them; that they must have had the ability to commit the offense, as well as the intention, and that ability they never had any more than they would have when immured in a dungeon; that the intention meant by the statute is potential, and not a mere desire which there are no means to effectuate, and which does not, and cannot, result in any act; that Baker and the police never parted with the possession of the blanks, but determined not to do so, and all the time supervised the handling of them by the defendants.

The police laws cannot be tested by any such metaphysical niceties as these. The problem proposed is similar, if not the same, as that which has baffled the best intellects of the world of all ages, in attempting to reconcile the foreknowledge and providence of divinity with the freedom and the moral responsibility of man. The law adopts the theory of the responsibility of man, notwithstanding the controlling supervision of Providence.

The defendants were not under duress, nor compelled by the police, prior to the arrest, to do anything whatever. They contracted with Baker for the blanks as freely and as completely as though the authorities had not permitted him to do so. They had absolute control of their own actions when they received the blanks, and up to the very time they were arrested. The knowledge or intention of the police did not interfere with their freedom prior to that time. They had the ability to commit the crime as fully as they would have had if the police had arrested them at the same time, without any understanding with Baker, and upon mere suspicion. There was no circumstance of restraint upon them up to the time of their arrest. Suppose the police had not arrested them at the time, but had continued to watch them without their knowledge, with the power to arrest them at any time until they had filled up and passed the bills, would it be contended that they were not guilty of forgery or counterfeiting because they had all the time been supervised and controlled by the police?

To constitute the crime, the law only requires the guilty possession. It is not necessary that the intent to fill them up should be proven by an attempt to do so. The person in possession may be unable to do so. He may intend to do it, or to cause it to be done, at some future time, when opportunity, convenience, and safety may serve him. His intention may be sufficiently manifested by the circumstances of his possession alone.

The instruction asked — to the effect that to find the defendant guilty they must find that he had the intent to fill up the blank, or cause it to be done, and to pass or cause it to be passed; that both intents must concur — was correct as a definition of the offense, and was substantially given by the Court. Like the fifth instruction, however, asked for, it ignored the proposition that, although Ah Sam was a mere messenger, he was properly convicted if he knew the purposes for which the blanks were designed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
I. F. EATON AND A. W. THOMPSON.

COMPLAINT ON RECOGNIZANCE—NAME OF ACCUSED—DEMURRER FOR AMBIGUITY.—Where a complaint on a forfeited recognizance set forth that the name of the accused for whose appearance to answer it was given, and the name by which he was indicted, was Antonio Martini, but that it was given in the recognizance as Antonio Martinez, and that the same person was intended: held, that a demurrer on the ground of ambiguity and uncertainty as to the person accused was properly overruled.

SUIT ON RECOGNIZANCE—VARIANCE IN NAME OF PERSON ACCUSED.—In an action on a recognizance, where it appeared that the accused was named Martini in the indictment and Martinez in the recognizance, and there was testimony that the same person who was held to answer by the name of Martinez was indicted by the name of Martini: held, that a motion for nonsuit on the ground of the variance of names was properly overruled, and that a finding that the person indicted was identical with the person held to answer, was justified.

RAISING OF BAIL—LIABILITY OF SURETIES ON RECOGNIZANCE.—It is no defense to an action on a forfeited recognizance, that after it was given the bail was raised, and a new order of arrest issued, without notice to the sureties, and that the officers were so negligent in their proceedings that the accused heard of them and absconded before he could be re-arrested.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

One Antonio Martini, having been arrested on a charge of rape upon the person of a child of tender years, and brought before a Justice of the Peace in the City of Petaluma, was bound over to answer at the next term of the County Court of Sonoma County, and his bail was fixed at one thousand dollars. The defendants gave the required recognizance, and the accused was released from custody. This was June 4th, 1869. On July fifth Martini was indicted by the Grand Jury; and on July fourteenth he was called in the County Court for arraignment, but he failed to appear, and the recognizance was declared forfeited. Afterward, this action was commenced by the District Attorney against the sureties to recover the amount for which they had so become bound.

Statement of Facts.

The complaint set forth, among other things, that the name of the accused appeared in a portion of the proceedings before the Justice, and in the recognizance, to be Antonio Martinez, but that he was the same person indicted as, and whose true name was, Antonio Martini. To this complaint defendants interposed a demurrer for ambiguity and uncertainty, on the ground that it appeared from it that a portion of the proceedings before the Justice were against Antonio Martini, and another portion against Antonio Martinez, and it was uncertain against which person they were in fact had. This demurrer having been overruled, defendants answered, and set up as one of their defenses that on June seventh, and after their recognizance was given, the plaintiff, by its duly constituted officers, without the knowledge of defendants, caused a new warrant of arrest to be issued against the accused, and fixed the bail at two thousand five hundred dollars, and that the accused, hearing thereof, had absconded; on account of which proceedings, defendants claimed that they were prevented by the State from surrendering the accused, as they otherwise might have done, so as to exonerate themselves.

The cause was tried before the Court below without a jury, and there was evidence that the person held to answer as Martinez was the person indicted as Martini. When the plaintiff rested, defendants moved for a nonsuit on the ground that, on account of the difference in the names, facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action had not been shown. This motion was overruled, and defendants then proposed to prove the matters set up affirmatively in their answer, to which offer plaintiff objected, on the ground that the matters so alleged would not constitute a defense. The objection was sustained, and the proffered evidence ruled out. The proper exceptions having been entered, and judgment rendered for plaintiff, and a motion for new trial denied, defendants appealed.

A. W. Thompson, for Appellants.

1. There is a variance between the allegata and probata, in this: the amended complaint avers that the proceedings before the Justice were against Martini; while the proof shows that they were against Martinez. (Stout v. Coffin, 28 Cal. 65; Hess v. Fox, 10 Wend. 437; Lake v. Silk, 3 Bing. 297.)

2. There is neither averment nor proof that defendants knew that Martini and Martinez were the same person. The sureties had a right to stand on the precise terms of their contract. (People v. Buster, 11 Cal. 215.)

3. The contract between plaintiff and defendants was that Martinez should be free from proceedings on this charge until the July term of the County Court next to ensue, and that he should be so free was the sole consideration. (Mattoon v. Elder, 6 Cal. 57.) This contract was deliberately broken by plaintiff, and defendants are discharged. (Chitty on Contracts, 641; Zôe v. Culverwell, 35 Cal. 291.)

4. The sureties were prevented by plaintiff from complying with the terms of the contract, in this: that by the carelessness of plaintiff in allowing the prisoner to know of the issuance of the second warrant, and by the acts and proceedings by plaintiff in the matter of said second warrant, the prisoner was, by plaintiff, induced to abscond. Attorney General Jo Hamilton, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The demurrer to the complaint and the defendants' motion for nonsuit were properly overruled. The complaint, though somewhat inartificially drawn, is substantially good, and states a cause of action. The variance between the name of the accused, as stated in the indictment, and in the recognizance, was sufficiently accounted for to justify the Court in finding that the person indicted was identical with the person charged before the Justice, and for whose appearance the recognizance was given. Nor did the Court err in refusing to permit the defendants to prove the affirmative matter set up in the answer. If proved, it would have constituted no defense to the action. In substance it amounted only to an averment that after the accused had been released from custody on the recognizance of bail here sued upon, his bail was raised by the Court; and an order for his arrest was issued, hearing of which he absconded, and cannot now be found. The answer, it is true, avers that the officers of the law negligently permitted the accused to hear that the order of arrest was issued, whereby he was afforded an opportunity to escape; and that they willfully concealed from these defendants the fact that such an order had been issued. But if true, this would not exonerate the bail. When higher bail is required, there may, in many cases, be very sufficient reasons why the former bail should not be informed of the fact until after the accused is arrested: and I am not aware of any rule or principle of law which relieves the former bail from liability on the ground that the officer requiring additional bail had conducted himself so negligently as to permit the accused to hear of the fact before his arrest. There would be but little chance to fix the liability of bail if they could escape on such pretexts as this.

Judgment affirmed.

COUNTERCLAIM — PLEADING MUST SHOW ITS EXISTENCE AT COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION.— Where an answer, in setting up counterclaims in the nature of a promissory note and work and labor, failed to show when the note was due or the work and labor performed: held, that it did not appear that the counterclaims relied on existed in favor of defendant at the commencement of the action, and that a demurrer on the ground of not stating facts sufficient to constitute counterclaims was properly sustained.

DAMAGES FOR FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.— Where an appeal is clearly without merit, damages will be imposed by the appellate Court.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action upon a contract entered into by the parties in April, 1865, by the terms of which defendant was to pay plaintiff two thousand one hundred dollars in gold out of certain moneys to be collected for street work in San Francisco. The defendant, in his answer, set up as a counterclaim that plaintiff had made a promissory note for one thousand dollars to one Babcock, and that afterwards Babcock indorsed, assigned, transferred, and delivered it to defendant, who was the owner and holder thereof, and that no part of it had been paid; also, that plaintiff was indebted to defendant in the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars for work and labor done and performed at plaintiff's request.

The plaintiff demurred to the answer, in so far as it set up a counterclaim, on the ground that it did not appear therefrom when said note was made or delivered, or when it was made payable, or that the same was at the time of filing said answer due, or that said note was given for a valuable or any consideration; also, that it did not appear when or where said work and labor was done or performed, or the nature or kind of such work and labor.

The demurrer was sustained, and afterwards defendant, declining to amend, and there being a judgment for plaintiff, and motion for new trial overruled, defendant appealed.

H. F. Crane, for Appellant.

The averment of the date of the note in the counterclaim was not necessary to constitute a cause of action. It could only be important in view of the statute of limitations; and that statute could not be taken advantage of, except by being specifically pleaded. The general demurrer did not reach the point. (Green v. Palmer, 15 Cal. 416; Maynard v. Talcott, 11 Barb. 569; Frisch v. Coler, 21 Cal. 71.)

The usual count for work and labor does not show that the value thereof is due; but the Court will presume it due; and if not due, it is a matter of defense. The same may be said as to the matter of consideration of the note.

The answer gave the plaintiff sufficient notice of the counterclaims, and the Court below erred in sustaining the demurrer. (Wallace v. Bear River M. Co., 18 Cal. 461.)

James Mee, for Respondent.

Courts will never presume a cause of action where none appears. (Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 486.) And this rule will apply to both counts of the counterclaim.

The demurrer was not general, but special, pointing out, as required by statute, wherein the pleading did not state facts sufficient to constitute a counterclaim.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The demurrer was properly sustained; it did not appear that the counterclaims relied upon existed in favor of the defendants at the time of the commencement of the action.

There is nothing in the other points; the appeal is without merit, and the judgment is affirmed, with ten per cent damages.

Mr. Justice CROCKETT did not participate in the foregoing decision.

JANE MELEY v. RICHARD N. COLLINS ET AL.

DELAY TO ATTACK FORGED DEED AS ESTOPPEL.—In an action to recover possession of land held by an innocent purchaser who derails title through a forged deed which has been of record five years with knowledge of the plaintiff, the delay of the plaintiff to attack the forged deed is not material if it be not relied upon as extinguishing the plaintiff's title by the operation of the statute of limitations; and such delay does not estop the plaintiff to say that the alleged deed is not his deed.

OBLIGATION OF OWNER AS TO HOSTILE TITLE.—The owner of property is justified in relying upon his title, and he is under no obligations to proceed against all persons who may assert a hostile title, although another person might be deceived by the apparent genuineness of such hostile title.

OBLIGATION OF OWNER AS TO FORGED DEED.—It is not the duty of the owner of real estate, if his own interests do not require it, to attack a forged deed to his property.

PROTECTION TO PURCHASER UNDER FORGED DEED.—A purchaser may protect himself from injury resulting from a forged deed by exacting the necessary covenants from the vendor.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

McAllister & Bergin, for Appellant.

Argument for Appellant.

The charge of the Court and the instructions given at the request of the respondent, proceed upon an assumed estoppel arising out of the record of the forged deed, and we assume, as Court and counsel did on the trial, that the alleged deed of the appellant Meley to Gilbert was a forgery.

Does the recording of a forged deed of real estate work an estoppel upon the real owner in favor of an innocent purchaser for value? It would seem impossible to give but one answer to the question in whatever way we may regard it. View it in the light of the scope and language of the recording Act itself, and how does it stand? According to the rules of the common law there was no mode provided for or effect accorded to the recording of conveyances of real estate; every one was bound, at his peril, to ascertain all outstanding incumbrances or previous conveyances. Caveat emptor. To relieve against the inconveniences of this rule the statute has prescribed a mode for the recording of all conveyances or incumbrances on real estate, and declared that when thus properly recorded they shall be constructive notice to all persons of their contents, and all subsequent purchasers, mortgagees, or lien holders are deemed to purchase with notice thereof. The statute, however, expressly provides that the certificate of acknowledgment, record, etc., shall not be conclusive and may be rebutted. (Sec. 31.)

Made ex parte, as are acknowledgments and records of deeds, etc., it is unnecessary, in face of the express language of the statute, to inquire whether they could legally amount to any more than prima facie evidence of their contents; suffice it to say, the statute has declared they shall not be conclusive, but shall be open to rebuttal. The party must, therefore, at his peril, examine the records; he does so and finds the title of record clear, he takes his conveyance in due form; if he do not cause it to be duly recorded, a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for value, whose conveyance is first recorded, will secure priority of title. This is a result to which he has contributed and for which he should suffer. He, however, duly records his deed. Is there any rule of law or justice that enjoins it as a duty on him to thereafter keep watch of the records of the County Recorder's office? He complied with all the requirements of the law, was diligent, and secured his title. Is ceaseless vigilance upon the records thereafter the price of his retaining it? Where is the justice or policy that would compel him to keep continuous watch of the records? Must he be equally vigilant and watchful of the records to keep, as to acquire a clear title to, his property? Is there any express statutory provision to this or any similar effect? Certainly none that we have been able to discover. (Everts v. Agnes, 4 Wis. 352; 6 Wis. 463; Van Armage v. Miller, 4 Whart. 382; Arrison v. Harmstead, 2 Barr, 195; Smith v. South Royalton Bank, 32 Verm. 353; Berry v. Anderson, 22 Ind. 40; People v. Bostwick, 32 N. Y. 445; Ely v. Wilcox, 20 Wis. 529; Hooker v. Pierce, 2 Hill, 650; Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296; Trall v. Bigelow, 16 Mass. 418; Day v. Clark, 25 Verm. 402.)

These authorities show that a party whose conveyance is duly recorded is not obliged to thereafter keep constant watch of the records, lest some party, without his consent or authority, should fraudulently or feloniously attempt to convey away his property. Nor are the instructions and charge of the Court any more tenable upon the doctrine of estoppel. It will be borne in mind that in the case at bar the deed was forged. The appellant never made it, nor knew of its contents till long afterward, nor authorized or consented to its being recorded. It was neither in law nor in fact her act or deed, and it is difficult to conceive how, under such circumstances, it can operate equitably to estop her. One of the most familiar and essential characteristics of an estoppel in pais is, as laid down in the case already cited, that the declaration or admission be made with intent to influence the conduct of the party claiming the benefit of the estoppel, or those under or through whom he claims; and a no less essential and distinguishing feature of it is that the estoppel must be mutual and reciprocal. Strangers are not bound by and cannot invoke the benefit of an estoppel. (Strong v. Strickland, 32 Barb. 289; Reynolds v. Loundsbury, 6 Hill, 554; Pennell v. Hinman, 7 Barb. 649; Carpenter v. Stilwell, 1 Kern. 71-73; Christianson v. Linford, 3 Robertson N. Y. 224; 21 Ala. 424; 8 Gill, 239.)

There was here no statement, declaration, or act of the appellant, made to, or intended to influence the conduct of the respondent Collins, to whom she was an entire stranger, and therefore there can be no estoppel. Nor can the subsequent knowledge of the appellant, that there was a forged deed of record to her property, create such estoppel. Admitting that she subsequently learned this fact, she likewise knew that it was a forgery to which she never consented. She did nothing to authorize or justify the respondent in supposing that she ever adopted or sanctioned the forgery. She was guilty of no act, and did not omit performance of any duty toward him, by reason of which she can be estopped. There was no relation of trust or confidence between her and the respondent Collins, that devolved upon her the duty of procuring an adjudication of the forgery of this alleged conveyance. She had in all respects complied with the law; obtained a conveyance in due form, and of unquestionable validity, of these premises; had it duly recorded; and was entitled to rely upon the law for her protection. The only statement she ever made of record, upon which the public would be justified in relying, was legal and true — that she acquired title to the property from her grantor. We have sought in vain to discover any principle of law or equity upon which she can be estopped. Can the mere knowledge of the existence of a forged deed of record to her property, and her failure to institute legal proceedings to have it declared a forgery, estop her in the face of the statute of frauds? The court will bear in mind that this is not the case of actual, positive fraud, and it is obvious that if she can for these reasons be divested of her title to her property, the statute of frauds is not only virtually, but in effect, fully repealed. Here the appellant accidentally, after the forgery, learned it; but once admit that notice of it will devolve upon the party the duty of instituting judicial proceedings to declare such a forgery a nullity, under pain of forfeiting the title to his land, and it requires no prophet to foretell that the next step will be to hold that examination of the records would furnish the necessary means of ascertaining the existence of record of any forged title, and that, thus having the means of information, inquiry must be made, or the party will be chargeable with notice, and consequently bound to institute legal proceedings to have it adjudged void, or be forever estopped from asserting title; and it will readily be seen that, to protect the title to real estate, not only must the owner search the record in advance of his purchases, but he must constantly keep himself informed upon the subject, at the peril of being divested of his property in favor of some alleged innocent purchaser for value, without his act, knowledge, or consent, under a forged conveyance. We are free to confess that we have been unable to find any authority in support of such a principle of law. We can conceive of no view of law, justice, or public policy that will sanction it, and we submit that it is utterly inadmissible in the face of our statute of frauds, were there anything in such a principle itself to recommend it to our adoption.

If these views be correct, and of their correctness we cannot for a moment doubt, the instructions of the Court to the jury were erroneous, and the judgment must be reversed

Argument for Respondent.

Jarboe & Harrison, for Respondent.

The instructions given at the request of the defendants, and the charge of the Court, correctly presented to the jury the law applicable to the facts developed on the trial. The position of the defendants is, that whether the plaintiff executed the deed to Gilbert or not, she by her acts so conducted with reference to the property in controversy, and so held Gilbert out to the world as the owner of the same, that she is estopped from setting up any right or claim thereto.

Respondent does not assume, as do counsel for appellant, that this deed was a forgery. On the contrary, he assumes and maintains, as he did at the trial, that it was the deed of Mrs. Meley, signed and executed by her. This was one of the questions litigated between the parties, and submitted to the jury for their determination. It was made a special subject of instruction to them by the Court. There was much testimony offered upon this point at the trial — conflicting testimony, too, and from which the jury would have been fully authorized to find in favor of the defendant.

But, irrespective of this question, we maintain that the appellant is, under the facts developed in the present case, estopped from asserting any claim to the land in controversy.

The appellant gravely propounds to the Court: "Does the recording of a forged deed of real estate make an estoppel upon the real owner in favor of an innocent purchaser for value?" Of course it does not. Respondent does not insist upon any such proposition, and all the argument and citation of authorities by the appellant upon this branch of his brief are inapplicable.

The question of estoppel could not arise under such a state of facts, unless it was the party himself who recorded the forged deed. In that case there would be some "act" or "admission" on the part of the party sought to be estopped, but in the case supposed by the appellant the party whose deed was forged had nothing to do with the transaction on the recording of the instrument, and knew nothing about it until it was sought to be enforced against him.

Such a state of facts, and the argument based thereon, has no application to the question now before the Court, for the simple reason that there is not a particle of identity or parallelism between them. Throughout every line of the instructions given to the jury, in the present case, is the predominant idea that the plaintiff knew, was cognizant of, assented to, and acquiesced in the fact that there was a deed on record from herself to Gilbert, and that she also "consented" to let that deed remain on record, and thus held Gilbert out to the world and to the defendants as the owner of the land in question. It was only upon the condition that they found such to be the facts that they were instructed that the plaintiff had so conducted with reference thereto as to preclude her right to recover.

We insist that these instructions were correct, and that the plaintiff was estopped by her acts and negligence from asserting any claim to the land.

Appellant lays down as a proposition of law, and occupies considerable time in endeavoring to show, that a person, in order to be estopped by his acts or conduct, must have intended to influence the conduct of some one. We do not understand that such is the unqualified definition of an estoppel. It is true that that word is used in some of the cases as one of the elements necessary to create an estoppel. It is, in fact, so used by Justice COWEN, in the case of Dezell v. Odell, 3 Hill, 219, referred to and cited in Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 40, and which appellant has erroneously given in his brief as the language of this Court in the latter case.

It is also found in other cases in the same connection, but we conceive the meaning of the Court in them all to have reference to the objective result of the particular act, rather than to the motive of the person who performs the act. It is not necessary that the person who is estopped should have exercised a particular volition, with reference to the effect to be produced by his act, but it is sufficient if the act has produced that effect independent of or even contrary to the actual volition of the person acting.

In nearly all the cases in which the "intention" is named as an element of the definition of estoppel, there is also found "carelessness" or "culpable negligence" as an equivalent. In Biddle Boggs v. Merced Mining Company, 14 Cal. 368, the Court gives as one of the elements of an estoppel "that he made the admission with the express intention to deceive, or with such careless or culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud." (Story's Eq., Sec. 385, et seq.; Griggs v. Wells, 10 Ad. & E. 97.)

The books are full of authorities to the effect that when one having title to real estate stands by and suffers another to purchase without making known his claim, he shall not afterwards be permitted to assert his claim against such person (Wendell v. Van Renssalaer, 1 John. Ch. 354; 2 Smith's Lead. Cases, 5th Am. ed. 660; Storry v. Barker, 6 John. Ch. 166; Brewster v. Baker, 16 Barb. 618; Hicks v. Cram, 17 Vt. 449); and "standing by" is held to mean not "actual presence," but such knowledge as under the circumstances makes it his duty to speak. (State v. Holloway, 8 Blackf. 47; Thompson v. Blanchard, 4 Comst. 309.)

In Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & E. 469, the rule is laid down as follows: "When one by his word or conduct willfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time."

"Willfully," in this connection, means "knowingly." (28 Me. 539; Stephens v. Baird, 9 Cow. 274; Frost v. Saratoga Ins. Co., 5 Denio, 154; Plumb v. Cattaraugus Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 392; Wendell v. Van Renssalaer, 1 John. Ch. 354.)

Argument for Respondent

In none of these cases was there any "intention" developed on the part of the party acting, yet the Court held him estopped by his acts. (Manufacturers' Bank v. Hazard, 30 N. Y. 230; Brookman v. Metcalf, 4 Robt. 568.)

Under the principles laid down in the foregoing cases, we maintain that the plaintiff is estopped from asserting her claim to this land. The fact that after she found out that the deed in question had been placed on record, and that thereby Gilbert was held out to the world as the owner of the land, she lived in the same house with him for a period of several months, and took no steps to procure the cancellation of the deed, characterizes her as guilty of "such careless or culpable negligence as to amount to constructive fraud," upon any one who should thereafter become a bona fide purchaser of the lot, for value, from or under said Gilbert.

Knowing as the plaintiff did, that the instrument purported to be a conveyance from herself to Gilbert, and knowing, too, that this instrument was spread at full length upon the face of the public records of the county, and that every person who examined those records must see that deed, and must conclude that Gilbert was the owner of the lot, and yet, with all this knowledge inevitably existing in her mind, taking no steps, and doing no act to counteract its effect, but silently and quietly allowing all its influence to have operation upon the mind of any one who should choose to act upon it, she must be regarded by the Court as having acquiesced in and consented to the representation of ownership thus held out, and thus have become a party to the transaction, from the effects of which she is not now at liberty to withdraw. She "kept silent when she should have opened her mouth and spoken," and she shall not now be allowed to open her mouth and speak.

By her conduct she willfully (i. e. knowingly) caused the whole world to believe that Gilbert was the owner of the lot, and induced the defendant to act upon that belief in the purchase of the lot, and she is now concluded from averring that Gilbert was not the owner. She stood by from 1861 until 1867, holding Gilbert out as the owner of the lot, and allowed the defendant to purchase the same, and pay his money therefor, upon the faith and understanding of a fact which she could at any time contradict, and she cannot now dispute that fact.

By allowing that deed to remain on record unchallenged and uncontradicted, she acted the same as though she had allowed it to be posted upon her own door post, by which she passed in and out every day, without removing it. She accepted it as correct, and held it out to the world as her act.

We do not claim that the putting of a forged deed upon record would affect the rights of an owner of land, nor that the plaintiff's right to the land in controversy would have been in the slightest degree affected by the mere recordation of the deed to Gilbert, if she never had executed it. We do not claim that the presumptive knowledge of all deeds placed on record, which the law ascribes to every citizen, would require any action on his part to overcome the effect that the recording of a forged deed might produce; but we rely upon the fact that, after the plaintiff had actual, positive knowledge that this deed was on record, she culpably and negligently allowed it to remain without challenge or controversy, and thereby induced the defendant to purchase the lot, relying upon the tacit representations that she thus held out to him, and all others who might choose to act upon them. We concede the proposition urged by appellant—that a party cannot be divested of his land by a forged deed; but we claim, also, that a party may so act with reference to a forged deed that he will be held to have accepted it, and will be bound by its terms. If one, knowing that a deed has been forged, declares that it is genuine, he is precluded from disputing that fact as against one who has acted upon that declaration; and we say, further, that such declaration may be as potently made by his silence as by his express statement in words.

We maintain, moreover, that after the plaintiff had found out that this instrument was on record, and had consented that Gilbert should continue to hold the title to the premises for a period of two years, she held Gilbert out to the world as the owner of the lot, and is estopped from questioning the title of any purchaser under Gilbert, for value, and without notice of the relation which Gilbert held to the lot.

The plaintiff, by her acts and conduct, placed herself within the operation of that rule applicable in morals as well as in law: "Whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the act of a third, he who enabled such third person to occasion the loss must bear it." In Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253, it was held that when one had so negligently drawn a check, that the amount of the check was increased by forgery, and the person upon whom it was drawn had paid the larger sum, the loss must fall upon the drawer, and not the bank, inasmuch as it was through the fault of the drawer that the loss had occurred. (Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Georgia, 10 Wheat. 333; Gloucester Bank v. Salem Bank, 17 Mass. 33.)

Assuming that the plaintiff is equally innocent with the defendant, and that in any event one of the parties must bear a loss arising out of the fact that the deed to Gilbert had been placed on record without the knowledge of the plaintiff, still it is the plaintiff who must bear that loss, inasmuch as it was her act which enabled Gilbert to occasion the loss. It was in her power to prevent the effect which that deed and its recordation would have, and she negligently stood by and refrained from taking any step thereto. She even consented that Gilbert should hold the title for two years, and she did this, we suppose, upon the faith of his promise that he would give her back the lot. Having ascertained that her faith was not well founded, she cannot now be allowed to set up his faithlessness as a reason why the respondent should suffer. She brought herself within the spirit of the principle laid down by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, cited in appellant's brief as the reason for upholding deeds fraudulently made to bona fide purchasers: "No matter what fraudulent representations induced the grantor to do these acts, an innocent third person shall not be made to bear his misfortune, or suffer for his credulity." In the present case, the defendant ought not to suffer from the fact that the plaintiff, having placed reliance upon the statement of Gilbert that he would give her back the lot, refrained from taking any steps to have the deed canceled, and found out, too late, that Gilbert had been false to her, and had fraudulently conveyed the lot to an innocent purchaser.

The authorities cited by appellant upon the subject of the fraudulent delivery or procurement of a deed placed in escrow, are not applicable to the present case, for the reason that the doctrine of estoppel urged by us could not possibly arise. In all those cases, the grantee was in nowise connected with the fraud, and not aware that it had been committed until an attempt was made to enforce the fraud against him.

The principle upon which all those cases proceed is that of special agency: that one dealing with a special agent is bound to ascertain the extent of his powers, and acts at his peril if he fails to make inquiry; that when a deed is delivered by one other than the grantor, the recipient is bound to regard the person delivering as merely a special agent, and that any act of such agent beyond his powers is utterly without authority or effect, and a transaction to which the grantor is in nowise a party. It is held, however, in some of these cases (4 Whart. 382; 32 Verm. 353), that the grantor may so act as to recognize and adopt the fraudulent act of the depository, and thereby be bound by it.

Nor do we conceive that the authorities cited upon the subject of prior registration of a subsequent deed can have any influence in determining this case. These all proceed upon an entirely different principle of law — i. e., the effect of constructive notice. That an estoppel binds privies in estate needs no further citation than Coke on Litt. 352, and the various subsequent cases in which the principle has been affixed. We do not contend that strangers are bound by or can invoke it. We maintain, however, that the appellant is not a stranger, but a privy in estate under the purchase from Gilbert, in whose power it was to say to the plaintiff that her holding Gilbert out as the owner had estopped her from asserting her claim against him.

In conclusion, we maintain that the instructions of the Court were correct; that they were authorized by the facts in the case; and that the jury were fully authorized, from the evidence presented to them, to find in favor of the conditions upon which the charge was predicated, and then applying the law, as thus laid down, to the facts so found by them, render their verdict for the defendant.

By the Court, RHODES, C. J.:

In June, 1859, the plaintiff was the owner of the premises in controversy. The defendant Collins produced a deed of the premises, dated June 4th, 1859, and recorded the same month, which purported to have been executed by the plaintiff to one James A. Gilbert, and proved by a subscribing witness. He also produced a deed of the premises from Gilbert to McKenzie, dated October 16th, 1865; and a deed from McKenzie to the defendant Collins, dated April 28th, 1866 — and proved that the latter paid the purchase money. The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the deed from her to Gilbert was a forgery; and it was shown that some time after the date of the deed, but prior to 1861, she learned of its existence, and ascertained that it had been recorded. The defendant's evidence tended to prove that Collins, at the time of his purchase, had no knowledge that the plaintiff claimed that the deed from her to Gilbert was a forgery. This action was commenced in 1867.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

The question presented for decision arises on the instructions. The Court laid down this rule of law: That if the plaintiff became aware that the alleged deed from her to Gilbert was of record within about one year from the time it was recorded; and if Gilbert returned to this State in 1861 and boarded with her for a time; and if during that time she was aware of the existence and recordation of that deed; and if she took no steps to have the deed set aside and annulled, then, if the defendant Collins, in 1866, purchased the property for a valuable consideration, relying upon the genuineness of the purported deed from the plaintiff to Gilbert, without any knowledge that she claimed that the deed had been forged, the defendant is entitled to recover. The reason assigned is, that as she took no steps to have the deed annulled, she thereby permitted the parties claiming under it to deal with the property as their own; and that as the defendant purchased the property under these circumstances, the plaintiff is estopped to say that the alleged deed is not her deed.

It will be assumed, for the purposes of the argument, that the deed is a forgery. The circumstance that, during a portion of the time, Gilbert was within, and during another portion of the time was without, the State, may be discarded; for the plaintiff could readily have commenced her action against him in either case. The case does not show that the plaintiff knew of the respective sales of the property by Gilbert and his vendee, or that either of them intended to effect a sale, until after the respective conveyances had been executed. The length of time intervening between the notice to the plaintiff of the recordation of the deed, and the purchase of the property by the defendant, is not material to the question. It is not relied on as extinguishing the plaintiff's title by the operation of the statute of limitations. If the plaintiff is estopped to set up her title because the defendant purchased the property five years after the plaintiff knew that the deed was of record — she not having taken any steps during that time to attack the deed — then the delay of one year or one month would afford the defendant the same advantage. The proposition advanced in the instructions, when stripped of accidental and immaterial circumstances is, that if the defendant purchased the property and paid the consideration without any notice that the deed in question was a forgery, and after the plaintiff knew that the deed was of record, and before she had taken any steps to have it annulled, she is estopped to allege that it is not her deed.

The cases which lay down the familiar doctrine — that one who stands by, and purposely or negligently suffers his property to be disposed of by another, is estopped to assert his title to the property — have no application here, for the plaintiff did not “stand by” while Gilbert or his vendee was selling her property. The provisions of the Registry Act do not support the proposition of the defendant, for no such result is dictated by the Act. The defendant's position, however, would be the same as that which is now taken, had he seen the deed in Gilbert's hands, instead of the record of the deed. No authorities are cited by the defendant which directly sustain his position.

Opinion of the Court — Rhodes, C. J.

As neither the forged deed nor either of the subsequent deeds affected the plaintiff's title, she must recover upon her legal title, unless the defendant has made out a good equitable defense. Was it not incumbent on him to have pleaded his equitable defense — the matter of estoppel in pais, relied upon by him? The question is not discussed by counsel, and it will not be necessary to decide it in this case.

Could it be shown to be the duty of the owner of property, whenever another person asserts title to such property, or is apparently the owner of it, to proceed at once to vindicate his title and destroy the apparent title in such other person, there would be but little difficulty in holding that his neglect so to do, could be relied upon as an estoppel by a purchaser from such person, in good faith and for a valuable consideration. If such were the rule, there would be no difficulty in finding cases in point. Among the innumerable cases, in which the owner of personal property has sought to recover the possession from a person who had bought the property from one who had obtained the possession by a larceny or by force, no one is brought to our attention which holds that the delay of the owner in suing for the recovery of the property impaired his title. And yet, possession is prima facie evidence of title — evidence of as high an order as the record of a deed. Other illustrations might be found in cases of forged bills and notes, and forged indorsements. The owner of property is justified in relying upon his title; and he is under no obligation to proceed against all persons who may assert a hostile title, although another person might be deceived by the apparent genuineness of such hostile title. We have never heard it asserted that it was incumbent on the person who has acquired title to lands by adverse possession, to commence an action to quiet his title against the person whose title had been extinguished by the adverse possession, though the title of the later appeared of record to be the true title. In the case at bar, it cannot be said that the plaintiff, by any act or neglect, induced the purchase by the defendant. It was not her duty, if her own interests did not require it, to take the necessary steps to have the deed to Gilbert annulled. It is true that a purchaser from him, relying on the record, might be injured, but he could readily protect himself by exacting from his vendor the necessary covenants.

JAMES REGAN v. OWEN McMAHON ET AL.

JUDGMENT IN PARTITION.—If tenants in common own, some in fee, others a life estate, and the deed creating the life estate gives the remainder to such children, and the lawful issue of deceased children, of the person owning the life estate, as shall be living when the life estate terminates, a judgment of partition, made before the life estate terminates, should not fix the quantity of interest of those claiming the remainder. Such judgment sufficiently protects those claiming the remainder, if it allots the life estate, subject to the right of those holding in remainder.

Issue.—When it is uncertain to whom, and in what proportions a remainder may descend, after the termination of a life estate, a judgment in partition, made before the life estate terminates, should not ascertain the interest of those holding in remainder.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

In the year 1839 the Mexican Government granted to Francisco Sanchez the Rancho San Pablo, lying in what became the County of San Mateo after the admission of California as a State. The grant was confirmed by the United States authorities; and said Sanchez, on the 5th day of March, 1856, conveyed the same to Arcenia Miramontes, Pedro Higuera, and Ramon de Zaldo, in trust.

wife of said Francisco, to have, during her natural life, for her sole and separate use and benefit, the possession, use, and enjoyment of said rancho.

Second — To hold the undivided one half of said rancho for said Teodora absolutely, and to convey the same in fee simple, as she should in writing direct.

Third — To hold the other undivided half of said rancho until the decease of said Francisco Sanchez and said Teodora Higuera de Sanchez, and then to convey the same unto the then living children of said Francisco Sanchez by said Teodora, share and share alike; and if any of said children should then be dead, leaving lawful issue, then to convey the share which would have gone to said deceased child to the then living issue of such deceased child. On said fifth day of March said trustees granted and surrendered to said Teodora, by a conveyance in writing, for her sole and separate use and benefit, the sole possession, use, and enjoyment, during her life, of said rancho. Said Francisco died in September, 1862. At the time of the execution and delivery of said deed to said trustees there were living nine children of said Francisco Sanchez and his wife, said Theodora Higuera de Sanchez; said children being Pedro Sanchez, Luis de Sanchez, Luisa Sanchez, Rosalia Sanchez, the wife of Frank N. Gutierrez, Tomas Sanchez, Francisco Sanchez, Cipriano Sanchez, Guadalupe Sanchez, Geneveva Sanchez, the wife of Lorenza Pacheco.

The plaintiff, who had acquired an undivided interest in the rancho, commenced this action for a partition on the 16th day of November, 1868. Said Teodora and the children, and a large number of other persons who claimed under Teodora and the children, were made defendants. Two of the children, Guadalupe Sanchez and Geneveva Sanchez de Pacheco, died during the pendency of the suit. George F. Sharp was one of the defendants.

The Court partitioned the rancho among the different owners, in fee and of life estates. At the time the partition was made said Teodora was living.

The final decree contained the following provision:

"It further appearing that the defendants Tomas Sanchez, Cipriano Sanchez, Francisco Sanchez, Juan Bernal, Pedro Sanchez, George F. Sharp, Patrick Flannelly, Patrick Feeny, Robert Inches, and Clorinda Perez and José Garcia, and the plaintiff James Regan, are entitled to remainders in certain portions of said rancho. It is, therefore, ordered and decreed that such portions of said rancho as are allotted to said plaintiff, and to various defendants, for and during the life of said Teodora Higuera de Sanchez, are so allotted, subject to the rights of said plaintiff and defendants, so holding remainders as aforesaid."

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

John Hunt, Jr., for Appellant.

The decree does not provide for appellant's rights, in the event of Rosalia surviving any or all of her brothers and sisters.

J. B. Harmon and J. P. Hoge, for Respondents.

The statute does not permit appellant's interest to be set apart in some specific tract of land. He has a vested remainder only, to come into possession after the decease of Teodora Sanchez — an event which has not occurred. Until that event the land can be actually divided only among those persons who have fee simple or life estate interests therein.

that the premises mentioned in the complaint herein were allotted upon such partition to plaintiff; that immediately after such partition plaintiff inclosed said premises with a fence, consisting of posts, in size three by four inches and four and one half feet high, set in the ground eight feet apart, with two rails nailed thereon, which were two inches by three inches in size; this was in the Fall of 1853.

"Fourth — That during said period of time, said plaintiff did not live upon or cultivate said premises, and did no other acts of possession upon said premises beyond the fencing above mentioned.

"Fifth — That defendant entered upon said premises on May 28th, 1862, by virtue of purchase and conveyance from Stuart Smith, and immediately built a small house thereon, and inclosed the same with a fence, and put a tenant therein, and has ever since and now does keep possession of the same.

"Sixth — That said premises are within the charter line of 1851, of the City of San Francisco, as it was incorporated in 1851."

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

John R. Jarboe, for Appellant.

The judgment is not supported by the findings, but is directly antagonistic to them. The facts found show that the property in question was subject to and under the will and control of the plaintiff, he being in the exclusive occupation thereof. This constitutes a complete common law possession, which is the only possession necessary to establish in this action. The Court having found the plaintiff's occupation and possession down as late as the Fall of 1853, the law presumes it to have continued in the same condition until it was interrupted by the defendants, which the Court finds was on the 28th day of May, 1862. There is no pretense that Stuart Smith, from whom defendant derails title, ever had a title or was ever in possession. The findings show title in the plaintiff, and an entry and ouster by the defendant, without any justification or authority for such entry.

E. A. Lawrence, for Respondent.

A brush fence three feet high was held not to constitute possession in Hutton v. Schumacher, 21 Cal. 453. The fence in this case was only a temporary brush fence. The plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and hence it is for him to show how long the fence continued. (Wolf v. Baldwin, 19 Cal. 306; Polack v. McGrath, 39 Cal. 15; Borel v. Rollins, 30 Cal. 408.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action is ejectment, and was tried before the Court without a jury. Written findings were filed, and a judgment entered for the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone, unsupported by a statement on appeal. The ground of error relied upon is that, on the facts expressly found, the plaintiff, and not the defendant, was entitled to judgment. But we must presume, in support of the judgment, that the Court found not only the facts included in the written findings, but also such other facts within the issues as are necessary to support the judgment. It is not enough that the written findings do not, of themselves, warrant the judgment; but to procure a reversal, the express findings must be absolutely inconsistent with the judgment, conceding all the other facts within the issues to have been found in accordance with it.

The facts within the issues not expressly found are presumed to have been in accordance with the judgment, which must, therefore, be affirmed, unless the express findings affirmatively show it to be erroneous. This has been too often decided by this Court to merit further discussion. The plaintiff relies solely on prior possession as proof of title, and the answer not only denies the plaintiff's title and right of possession, but sets up as a separate defense an abandonment of the plaintiff's claim prior to the commencement of the action. If it be conceded that in 1853 the plaintiff had the actual possession of the premises by means of a sufficient inclosure, he may, nevertheless, have abandoned the possession, or conveyed all his title to the defendant, or to a third person, prior to the commencement of the action, either or both of which facts it was competent for the defendant to prove under the issues: and we must presume, in support of the judgment, that one or both of them were proved. If no other facts than those expressly found were proved at the trial, it should have been made so to appear, either in the findings themselves or on a motion for a new trial, or by a statement on appeal, in order to rebut the presumption that these facts were proved and found. But as the case is presented on the judgment roll, the presumptions arising from the implied findings are not rebutted, and no error is shown.

broken, upon a failure to procure such conveyance within a reasonable time, or to convey to the vendee other lands of equal value; and the statute of limitations will commence running from such breach.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Solano.

The case of Vance v. Fore, mentioned in the opinion, was an action of ejectment brought against the grantees of Clark and Curry to recover possession of the six hundred acres of land conveyed by Peña to Clark and Curry prior to the deed to Vance. It is reported in 24 Cal. 435. This action was brought against the children of Peña — to enforce a performance of the covenant with Vance — Peña having died intestate in 1863. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

[For reports of other questions litigated by the parties, see 21 Cal. 142; 33 Cal. 631; 36 Cal. 328.]

S. F. Reynolds, for Appellants.

Vance had no cause of relief upon the covenant until after the determination of the ejectment case against Fore et al. 24 Cal. 435. It was part of the covenant and agreement that Peña should have all necessary time to obtain those lands, either by a reconveyance, if he, upon examination, found that he had before conveyed the lands, or if he believed it was even a doubtful question, then sufficient time to have that question settled by the proper Courts; and that Vance was bound to such time, and had no action or suit against Peña until after such time. But if we are mistaken in this, then we insist that Peña could reasonably and fairly require such time; and can not insist upon the running of the statute, while he was having this proper and reasonable time, to recover those lands by an action for his benefit. That the statute should run against a party under such circumstances, would be, in the language of Kane v. Cook, to permit the defendant to take advantage of his own wrong, and to sustain a defense which, in conscience, he ought not to be permitted to avail himself of. Courts of equity will interpose and prevent the bar of the statute, and will not let it apply when it would be against conscience. (Kane v. Cook, 8 Cal. 449; 2 Story Eq. Sec. 1521 (a); Angel on Limitations, Sec. 115, notes.) No notice was required to be given before commencement of the suit. The filing of the bill is sufficient notice. It only affects the question of costs. This Court has so determined. But suppose notice, under the covenant to convey other lands, would have been required to have been given to Peña, before the bill was filed. That was rendered unnecessary, on the ground that by the conveyance to the defendants he had placed his other lands in their hands. The plaintiffs, therefore, are excused from the necessity of giving the notice under the covenant. (Delemater v. Miller, 1 Cow. 75; Main's Case, Coke's Rep. 5th Book, 21.)

M. A. Wheaton, for Respondents.

One of the conditions upon which Peña agrees to convey "other lands" is "upon reasonable notice." Peña had a right to put in his covenant whatever conditions he chose, and he did put in the above condition, that he should have reasonable notice; and it is not alleged that any notice whatever was ever given Peña. It is said no notice was necessary, because he conveyed the land. Had the action been against Peña for damages, because he had put it out of his power to fulfill his covenant, the authorities of counsel would have been in point; but they do not apply where the action is against the grantee instead of being against the grantor. (Connelly v. Pierce, 7 Wend. 129; Hackett v. Hudson, 3 Wend. 249; Fuller v. Hubbard, 6 Cow. 13.)

The cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. It was agreed on the argument that this suit was commenced the first day of August, 1865. The covenant was executed by Peña the 7th day of November, 1853, nearly twelve years before; and the deed to Curry and Clark was executed in January, 1853. Peña was, therefore, liable upon his covenant, if at all, the moment he executed it. The most that he could have claimed would have been a reasonable time in which to procure a reconveyance to himself. Seven years might be allowed him as a reasonable time in which to obtain the reconveyance, and still this action would have been barred. The suit commenced by Vance, with Peña's "knowledge and approbation," had nothing to do in preventing the statute from running. Peña's covenant was not made dependent upon the result of that suit, either by its terms or by the fact that it was commenced with Peña's "knowledge and approbation." "Knowledge and approbation" of a suit on the part of a person does not make him either a party or privy to it, nor do they make the judgment binding upon him — still less upon his heirs or assigns.

If Vance ever had a cause of action against these defendants, it was as soon as the land came to their hands, especially if they received it for the purpose of cheating and defrauding the plaintiff out of it. Yet more than four years elapsed from the time the last deed was given by Peña (May 17th, 1861) and the commencement of this action. True, the plaintiffs say that the conveyance was made by Peña to these defendants to defraud these plaintiffs, and also alleges that plaintiffs had no knowledge of the conveyances until after Peña died; this, however, does not bring their case within the fourth subdivision of the seventeenth section of the statute of limitations, because the conveyances were no fraud. Peña had a perfect right to convey the lands to his children. His natural affection for his offspring was a good legal consideration; if the covenant was binding upon and run with the land, the conveyances were made subject to the covenant, and could not defraud the plaintiffs. If the covenant did not run with the land, but was binding upon Peña as a personal obligation, then the conveyances could not have injured the plaintiffs, even by inducing or deterring their action, as they did not know of the conveyances until after the death of Peña had barred a personal action. In four years from the time the cause of action accrued the action was barred. (Statute of Limitations, Sec. 17; Peña v. Vance, 24 Cal. 150.)

The complaint states, that in 1853, Peña, the father of the defendants, conveyed to Vance a tract of land which formed a portion of a rancho which had been granted to Vaca and Peña. The tract conveyed is situated southerly of Alamo Creek, but there is excepted therefrom all lands which had theretofore been conveyed by Vaca and Peña. The deed contained a covenant of warranty, and also a further covenant, in the words following:

“And I, the said Peña, do hereby covenant and agree to and with the said Vance, and his heirs and assigns, that if any of the lands lying on the southerly side of said creek have heretofore been conveyed by said Vaca and Peña to any person or persons except that portion thereof that one William Fore has purchased and occupies, or claims at the date hereof, that in that case the said Peña will hereafter convey any of such portions of such lands as shall be conveyed to him, unto the said Vance, or his heirs or assigns, and in case the said Peña shall not be able to procure a conveyance to himself of such portions of said lands lying on the southerly side of said creek which may have been conveyed heretofore as aforesaid, then said Peña shall, and will, upon reasonable notice, convey unto said Vance, or his heirs or assigns, other lands in said County of Solano (of him said Peña), in quantity and quality of equal value to such lands as may have been conveyed, as aforesaid, on the southerly side of said creek, excepting, however, any lands now possessed by said Fore under claim of title."

Before the execution of the deed to Vance, Peña had conveyed to Currey and Clark six hundred acres of the lands described in the deed to Vance. An action was brought by Vance, with the knowledge and approbation of Peña, to recover from the grantees of Currey and Clark the six hundred acres of land, and judgment was rendered against Vance; and in April, 1864, the judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court. No portion of the six hundred acres was reconveyed to Peña, nor was any part of the same conveyed to Vance. In 1859, Peña owned seven thousand acres of land — part of the same rancho — and in that and the two following years he conveyed the same to the several defendants without any consideration, and for the purpose of preventing the application of the lands to the satisfaction of his covenant with Vance. The defendants took with notice of the deed to Currey and Clark, and the deed and covenants to Vance; and it is alleged that they hold the lands in trust for the performance of the covenant to Vance, and are bound to convey so much thereof as may be necessary for the full performance of the covenant. Other facts are stated in the complaint, but they are not material to a correct understanding of those grounds of demurrer which will be noticed.

The decision on the former hearing was that there was no breach of the covenant, as it did not appear that "Vaca and Peña" had conveyed the six-hundred-acre tract to Currey and Clark. The soundness of that construction of the covenant is questioned by the plaintiffs. They contend that, looking at the whole contract, the clause is to be read "Vaca or Peña." It will not be necessary, however, to express any opinion on that question.

One of the grounds presented by the demurrer to the complaint, is that the action is barred by the statute of limitations; and a further ground is that it is not alleged that "reasonable notice" was given to Peña or his assigns to convey any land to the plaintiffs. On the latter point, the position of the plaintiffs is that notice in fact was unnecessary, and that the want of notice would only affect the question of costs. That position may be accepted as correct, without discussion of the question whether the words of the covenant mean or necessarily imply an actual notice.

The question is, when was the covenant broken by Peña?

At the time Peña executed his conveyance to Vance, the six-hundred-acre tract had been conveyed to Currey and Clark, and it became his duty to procure a reconveyance of the six-hundred-acre tract, or to convey to Vance other lands, in accordance with his covenant. He was not relieved of that duty because he claimed, believed, or protested that the deed to Currey and Clark did not include any of the lands which were described in the conveyance to Vance. His denial that such was the purpose or effect of the deed to Currey and Clark, did not alter the fact that it did convey to them the six-hundred-acre tract. His covenant was not that he would procure a reconveyance of the lands which he believed, claimed, or admitted he had theretofore conveyed to others; or that, failing to procure such reconveyance, he would convey to Vance other lands in lieu thereof. His obligation arose from the fact, not from his admission or belief of the fact, of such prior conveyance. The covenant, therefore, was broken by his failure to convey to Vance, within a reasonable time, the land theretofore conveyed to Currey and Clark, or other lands as provided in the covenant.

Admitting—as the plaintiffs contend—that Peña was entitled to a reasonable time in which to procure, or attempt to procure, a reconveyance to him of the six-hundred-acre tract, it cannot be claimed that eight years is within the limits of a reasonable time for that purpose—it not being alleged that there was any obstacle in the way of his proceeding forthwith to procure the reconveyance; and, even allowing eight years as a reasonable time in which to attempt to procure a reconveyance, more than four years thereafter elapsed before this action was commenced. It is also contended that the plaintiffs had no cause of action against Peña or the defendants, until the determination of the action of Vance v. Fore, in April, 1864. The covenant is not conditional upon the event of any litigation then pending, or thereafter to be instituted. It cannot be implied from the covenant that the parties, at the time of the execution of the deed, contemplated that an action should be brought by either of them to test the question, as to whether any of the lands described in the deed had theretofore been conveyed by Peña. The fact that an action was brought by Vance for that purpose, with the “knowledge and approbation of Peña,” did not suspend the running of the statute, if it had already commenced to run.

Judgment affirmed.

Statute will be sustained unless clearly unconstitutional, p. 162.

Cited in dissenting opinion in Tucker v. Barnum, 144 Cal. 271, noted under Borland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 161.

Unconstitutionality of a statute can be declared by the court only where the federal or state constitution has deprived the legislature of the power to enact it, or limited it to something else than the subject to which the legislature has applied it. It will not do to talk about the spirit of the constitution as imposing a limitation upon the legislative power, p. 162.

Cited in University v. Bernard, 57 Cal. 613, to the point that "an act should not be declared unconstitutional and void unless there is a clear repugnance between the act and the constitution; and where there is a reasonable doubt whether the act is repugnant to the constitution, its constitutionality should be affirmed"; also in Gilchrist v. Schmidling, 12 Kan. 271, holding that a city ordinance, opposed to an unexpressed spirit supposed to pervade the constitution, was not unconstitutional; Southern Pacific Co. v. Orton, 6 Saw. 186, 32 Fed. Rep. 473, holding that a statute allowing a railway to change its line of road was not in violation of the constitutional provision that corporations should not be created by special acts; and note on this point in 63 Am. Dec. 519.

What is a Public Use, as regards eminent domain, seems to have been left, in large measure, to the determination of the legislature, p. 168. When the legislature has determined a given purpose to be a public purpose, we must so consider it, unless we can see at first blush that it is not possible that it could be such, p. 175.

Cited in Consolidated Co. v. Central Pacific Co., 51 Cal. 273, holding that lands of a railway company could not be condemned for use as a flume site by a mining company, because it was not a public use; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 304, holding it "safe to say" that supplying water for irrigation to "farming neighborhoods" was for a public use, and "the judgment of the legislature that it is such ought not, therefore, to be disturbed by the courts"; In re Madera District, 92 Cal. 310, 27 Am. St. Rep. 114, to the point that "if the subject matter of the legislation be of such nature that there is any doubt of its character, or if by any possibility the legislation may be for the welfare of the public, the will of the legislature must prevail over the doubts of the court"; County v. Coburn, 130 Cal. 634, affirming location by supervisors of public road; State v. Cornel, 53 Neb. 559, 68 Am. St. Rep. 631, applying rule to imposition of tax for an alleged public purpose; Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 551, to the point that while the court will incline to hold a use public for which land is condemned, it will not hesitate in a proper case to declare a statute unconstitutional, as in the present case, where private property is attempted to be taken for a private road; and notes on this point in 22 Am. Dec. 690, 691, 692, 695; 28 Am. Dec. 423; 31 Am. Dec. 372; 60 Am. Dec. 595.

Cited in Leavenworth Co. v. Miller, 7 Kan. 541, 12 Am. Rep. 465, holding that the weight of authority, and the more recent decisions, are in favor of the validity of statutes authorizing municipal aid to railways; Harcourt v. Good, 39 Tex. 472, holding that a tax to aid construction of a railway bridge was valid, and giving a long list of authorities; and note to 59 Am. Dec. 783.

Ede*, 103 Cal. 160, holding that the agent in the last preceding case had only to find a purchaser in order to be entitled to his commission; McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 163, 50 Am. St. Rep. 236, holding that where a broker was authorized to find a buyer for land, his right to the stipulated commission was not defeated by the fact that the seller's wife changed her mind about selling; and note to 17 Am. Discharge of Jury, in a criminal case, for failure to agree on a verdict, is not an acquittal of defendant, pp. 213-219.

Distinguished in People v. Cage, 48 Cal. 326, 17 Am. Rep. 437, holding that discharge of a jury for failure to agree, by adjoining the court for the term, without calling in the jury, operated as an acquittal. Cited in Dreyer v. People, 188 Ill. 49, holding second trial after such discharge not barred; People v. Smalling, 94 Cal. 117, holding that where a jury was discharged for failure to agree, the defendant could not, on a second trial, introduce the stenographer's record of such proceeding for the purpose of showing an abuse of discretion in discharging the jury; People v. James, 97 Cal. 401, holding that discharge of jury for failure to agree was no bar to subsequent conviction of defendant, notwithstanding that the court at the first trial instructed the jury to acquit and they ought to have done so. Distinguished in Ex parte Maxwell, 11 Nev. 436, holding that discharge of jury for failure to agree was equivalent to acquittal, because the record failed to show properly the reason for the discharge or an adjudication of the point. Cited in State v. Shaffer, 23 Oreg. 556, holding that defendant was not put twice in jeopardy by discharge of jury at the first trial; and notes on this point in 12 Am. Dec. 547; 61 Am. Dec. 95; 72 Am. Dec. 201; 25 Am. St. Rep. 527.

Habeas Corpus is not a proper proceeding for trying the question of whether the trial court erred in discharging a jury for failure to agree, for defendant has his remedy by appeal, p. 220.

Cited in Ex parte Hartman, 44 Cal. 35, holding that an order of the trial court, remanding defendant to await further action of the grand jury, must be reviewed on appeal, not on habeas corpus, the order being "regular on its face, and one which the court had power to make."

St. Rep. 129, 130, saying: "Whether the conveyance is to be treated as a mortgage or as a deed of trust must depend upon its essential character, as shown by its terms, and not whether the grantee is a creditor whose debt is to be paid out of the proceeds to arise from the execution of the trust which is declared"; also in Savings & Loan Society v. Sutton, 91 Mo. 530, holding that an error in a foreclosure judgment could not be attacked in a later suit of ejectment for the land; Babb v. Bruere, 23 Mo. App. 607, holding that where a circuit court issued execution on transcript from an irregular judgment of a justice of the peace, the circuit court could recall the execution and make it and the judgment conform to the law; Vantilburgh v. Black, 2 Mont. 377, holding that an irregular decree in a lien case could not be collaterally attacked; Mach v. Blanchard, 15 S. Dak. 439, default judgment erroneously granting more relief than demanded is not void and cannot be collaterally attacked; George v. Nowlan, 38 Or. 541.

41 Cal. 256-262. SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY v. REED.

Condemnation of Street for Railroad entitles the owner of an abutting lot to damages, notwithstanding that he has already received compensation for a former condemnation of the same street by another railroad, p. 261.

Distinguished in Montgomery v. Santa Ana Co., 104 Cal. 196, 43 Am. St. Rep. 97, holding that the owner of a lot abutting on a street cannot maintain ejectment against a railroad company that uses the street under a city ordinance permitting such use, because the use of the easement by the railroad does not exclude the plaintiff or the public from the street, and therefore there was no ouster; and disapproving the distinction made between street-cars and railways as to imposing an additional burden on the servitude. Cited in Colorado Co. v. Mollandin, 4 Colo. 161, holding that where a city ordinance allows a railway to cross a street, the company is not liable for injury thereby to the property and business of an abutting owner, so long as the company keeps within the bounds of its lawful authority and does nothing wantonly or negligently; Canastota Co. v. Newington Co., 69 Conn. 184, holding that the proposed construction of an electric railway on a public road, the soil of which belongs to the adjacent owners, can be enjoined, where the line proposed deviates from the route prescribed by the charter of the company; Kucheman v. C. & D. Co., 46 Iowa, 372, holding the owner of the fee in a street entitled to damages for use of the street by a railway; Chicago K. & W. Co. v. Woodward, 47 Kan. 194, holding that "the weight of authority is in support of the rule that the construction of a railroad along a highway imposes an additional burden and constitutes a taking within the constitution"; Pierce v. Drew, 136 Mass. 84, 49 Am. Rep. 15, in dissenting opinion, a majority of the court holding that the legislature may authorize the construction of a telegraph line on a highway, without compensation to owners of the fee; Detroit Railway v. Mills, 85 Mich. 669, in dissenting opinion, a majority of the court holding that a street railway does not impose an additional servitude on a street; White v. Northwestern Co., 13 N. C. 616, 37 Am. St. Rep. 644, holding that "where the public have only an easement in the street, and the fee of the soil of the street is retained in the abutting owner, a steam railroad cannot, under the constitutional guaranty of private property, be lawfully constructed and operated thereon against his will and without compensation"; Gulf Co. v. Fuller, 63 Tex. 470, holding that a railroad company, authorized to lay track in a street must pay damages occasioned to the owner of an abutting lot by depreciation of his property; and note on this point in 16 Am. St. Rep. 612.

41 Cal. 263-278. PEOPLE v. KLUMPKE.

False Call in a deed must be rejected, p. 278.

41 Cal. 278-290. GREGORY v. NELSON.

Judgment should be a simple sentence of the law upon the material ultimate facts, admitted by the pleadings or found by the court, p. 282.

Cited in Rankin v. Newman, 107 Cal. 610, holding that where plaintiff refused to receive an amount tendered to him by defendant, and the record showed the amount was due, "the appropriate sentence of the law should have emanated from the court, the previous contumacy of the plaintiff notwithstanding," and judgment should have been rendered for the amount tendered; Perkins v. Sierre Nevada Co., 10 Nev. 413, holding a judgment final in spite of a proviso therein, for the proviso was surplusage; Humboldt Co. v. Terry, 11 Nev. 243, holding that entry of judgment by the clerk was valid, though not strictly in the proper form.

Judgment, on a point entirely outside of any issues made or tendered by the pleadings, as a finding of fact, conclusion of law, or judgment of the court upon the subject matter embraced therein, is superfluous and nugatory, p. 284.

Cited in Balfour etc. Co. v. Sawday, 133 Cal. 231, as to default judgment in ejectment including property not embraced in complaint; Benton v. Benton, 122 Cal. 398, noted under Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 594, to the point that the supreme court, "on appeal from a judgment," considers only questions that arise on "the judgment-roll, and any bill of exceptions, statement on motion for new trial, and statement of the case on which the appellant relies"; White v. Douglass, 71 Cal. 119, to the point that where the answer admits an allegation of the complaint, a finding against the admission is outside the issues, and a judgment based on such finding is erroneous; Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Cal. 441, holding that a decree regarding distribution of property in a divorce suit was improper, because it was "neither consistent with the case made by the complaint nor embraced within the issues made by the answer"; Reinhart v. Luggo, 75 Cal. 640, holding that partition suits are governed by the same rule as ordinary actions, that a finding and judgment, "contrary to the facts admitted by the pleadings and outside of the issues made or tendered, are erroneous"; Noonan v. Nunan, 76 Cal. 49, holding in a suit for dissolution of partnership that "as the appellant neither asked for the judgment which it is now claimed should have been entered in the court below, nor alleged facts upon which such a judgment could properly have been entered, he cannot here demand a reversal of the judgment which responded to the issues actually made and submitted to the trial court"; Ortega v. Cordero, 88 Cal. 225, 228, holding that a finding, setting forth an agreement of a different date and consideration from that alleged in the complaint, was "entirely outside of the issues made by the pleadings"; Rudel v. Los Angeles Co., 118 Cal. 287, a suit to restrain supervisors from diverting water in a canyon, holding that a finding outside of the issues could not be regarded, and the record did not show facts sufficient to create an estoppel in favor of the findings. Cited in Brown v. Tucker, 7 Colo. 39, holding that a judgment properly omitted any order as to disposition of attached property, because there was no reference to it in the pleadings; Dutro v. Kennedy, 9 Mont. 107, holding that as the pleadings in a mortgage foreclosure raised no issue as to fixtures, the general law governed the question, and if the court had found otherwise, it would have been outside the issues; Harris v. Lloyd, 11 Mont. 405, 28 Am. St. Rep. 485, holding that findings of fact as to a partnership were not within the issues; Gaston v. Drake, 14 Nev. 183, 33 Am. Rep. 553, holding that the rule does not apply to a case where relief is denied because a contract is against public policy; Harkins v. Cooley, 5 S. Dak. 231, holding that the finding that a deed was a mortgage was outside of any issues.

Prior Occupant of a Mining Ditch is entitled to an injunction against a later holder of land over which the ditch passes, to prevent the latter from substituting a flume for the ditch for his own convenience, pp. 288, 290.

Cited in Allen v. San Jose Co., 92 Cal. 140, enjoining a water company, owning an easement in a ditch through another's land, from substituting an iron pipe for the ditch, because it "would result in the creation of a new and different servitude"; Ives v. Edison, 124 Mich. 410, 411, 83 Am. St. Rep. 335, 336, enjoining under fact stated a change in flight of stairs over which plaintiff had an easement; Geddis v. Parrish, 1 Wash. 591, to the point that a later locator on public lands cannot obstruct the water rights of a prior occupant.

41 Cal. 290-298. MONTGOMERY v. STURDIVANT.

Habendum clause in a deed may create an estate for life, though the granting clause conveys a fee simple, pp. 296-298.

Cited in Klumpke v. Baker, 68 Cal. 561, holding that a fee simple title passed by a "grant" from husband to wife, and an after-acquired title by the husband "did not inure to the community, but passed by operation of law to his wife, by virtue of his former conveyance to her by grant"; Anderson v. Yoakum, 94 Cal. 228, 28 Am. St. Rep. 122, holding that although the habendum clause in a quitclaim deed professed to convey after-acquired title, it did not have that effect, because the grantor "had no interest whatever in the realty at the date of his deed to plaintiff, and it follows that no title, either present or future, vested in her through this conveyance"; Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 200, holding that "it was the intention of the grantor that the habendum should operate as a proviso or limitation to the granting clause, and control it to the extent of limiting the estate conveyed to the plaintiff to a life estate, with a remainder to the issue and heirs of his body"; Rupert v. Penner, 35 Neb. 601, holding that a habendum and granting clause construed together conveyed a life estate; Hart v. Gardner, 74 Miss. 158, saying: "The rule which required the habendum to yield to the granting clause, when repugnant intents are expressed in the two as to the estate to be conveyed, is applicable only where these intents are both the actual intents of the grantor, and not intents arising by implication of law from the use of the words to which the statute has affixed a certain meaning. The distinction is between the actual intent of the grantor, expressed in terms of his own, selected to declare that intent, and an intent merely implied by law."

41 Cal. 298-305. McCULLOUGH v. CLARK.

Nonverification of Answer cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal, after trial on the merits, p. 302.

Cited in Hearst v. Hart, 128 Cal. 328, on point that plaintiff may in such case move for judgment on pleadings, or take default after striking out answer on motion; People v. Reis, 76 Cal. 276, holding that where the defendant to a petition for mandamus went to trial without objecting to the lack of verification of the petition, he could not raise the objection on appeal; San Francisco v. Itsell, 80 Cal. 61, holding that objection could not be raised on appeal to lack of verification of an answer; San Luis Co. v. Estrada, 117 Cal. 172, holding that plaintiff "will not be allowed to raise the point for the first time in this court that certain allegations of the complaint are not specifically denied."

Proceedings Supplementary to Execution are but a substitute for a creditor's bill at common law. Parties to the proceedings are estopped from again litigating the same matters in another form of action. The judgment debtor may appeal from the decision that a specific parcel of property should be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, pp. 302, 303.

Mex. 126, discussing nature of proceedings and holding jury trial not demandable therein; Herrlich v. Kaufman, 99 Cal. 275, 37 Am. St. Rep. 53, holding that the statutory procedure must be followed, and a creditor's bill cannot be filed unless it is shown "that remedies at law have been exhausted or would be unavailing, and with certain exceptions . . . a necessary averment in a creditor's bill is that an execution has been returned unsatisfied"; Deering v. Richardson, 109 Cal. 79, holding that an order applying money in bank to payment of a judgment was appealable; Lyons v. Marcher, 119 Cal. 383, holding that the court need not make written findings in supplementary proceedings; Hexter v. Clifford, 5 Colo. 170, to the point that the proceedings are a substitute for a creditor's bill; Hoge v. Norton, 22 Kan. 378, holding that the decision of a district court, dissolving an attachment, was conclusive in a suit on the attachment bond; Barber v. Briseoe, 9 Mont. 347, holding that an order refusing to set aside an order for examination of a judgment debtor was appealable; Hayes v. First District Court, 1 Mont. 226, holding that an order to pay money into court, on supplementary proceedings, is appealable, saying of the principal case that "this view may be obiter in the opinion, but as it is stated as a proposition too plain for argument, we have a positive expression of the sideration, but varies the terms of the note, and is inadmissible as a defense to a suit on the note, p. 325.

Cited in dissenting opinion, Ames v. S. P. Co., 141 Cal. 734, discussing modifications of railroad ticket; Bradford Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 209, 210, holding that in a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage, where the answer alleged an agreement that there should be no personal judgment for a deficiency, it was not necessary to aver that the agreement was written, but if it was not written it would not avail as a defense.

41 Cal. 325-331. KENYON v. QUINN.

Execution.—Sale of Land passes to the buyer of the land the title that the judgment debtor had "at the time of the levy, and such as he acquired between the time of the levy and sale," p. 329.

Cited in Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 303, saying: "It is the sale and deed thereunder which passes the title of the execution debtor; . . . the interest or estate of the judgment debtor in and to the property at the date of the sale passes to the purchaser, although acquired after the levy of the execution."

Equitable Title must be pleaded, if relied on as a defense in ejectment, p. 330.

Cited in Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 18; 49 Am. Rep. 682, holding that where the vendor of land brought ejectment against the vendee for failure to pay the purchase price as agreed, and the defendant's answer included a cross-complaint in equity, plaintiff was entitled to recover, because defendant could not repudiate the contract and retain the land; Arguello v. Bours, 67 Cal. 450, holding that whether defendant relies on his equities as a defense or bases on them a claim for equitable relief, the facts must be set forth in the answer "as fully as it would be necessary to allege them on the stating part of a bill in equity, praying a decree for a conveyance of the legal title"; Reed v. Roush, 2 Mont. 590, holding that a prayer in the answer for costs is for equitable relief; and Lamme v. Dodson, 4 Mont. 590, to the point that equitable title must be pleaded.

Motion for New Trial should not be granted before the statement is engrossed and certified; and an order, refusing to set aside the order granting the new trial under such circumstances, must be reversed on appeal, p. 334.

Cited in Whitney v. Lynch, 42 Cal. 367, holding that it was error to grant a new trial before the statement was engrossed; Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 454, holding that after a motion for new trial had been denied, the trial court had no power to vacate the order of denial and grant a new trial; and to same effect in Odd Fellows' Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 170; Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 598, holding that a writ of certiorari lay where a probate court, after a verdict and judgment against the validity of a will, and denial of a motion for new trial, set the proceedings aside on motion; for the lower court "was not authorized to set aside its action for mere error. . . . The objection that the court has acted in an unauthorized mode goes to the power of the court, and hence its action may be reviewed on certiorari." Cited in Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 42, holding that an order refusing to settle a bill of exceptions was appealable. Affirmed in Thomas v. Sullivan, 11 Nev. 283, and Crosby v. North Bonanza Co., 23 Nev. 75.

Equitable Defense of defective execution of a power of attorney, sustained in an action of ejectment, brought by vendor of land against his vendee, p. 348.

Cited in Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 20, 49 Am. Rep. 682, to the point that a vendee in possession, who has performed his part of the contract, has an equitable defense to an action of ejectment by the vendor.

Statute of Limitations does not run against the equitable claim of a vendee against his vendor, as to the title in the land, until after the vendor refuses to convey, p. 349.

Cited in Wormouth v. Johnson, 58 Cal. 624, holding that the statute did not run against the right of defendant in ejectment to assert a resulting trust arising from the fact that she furnished the purchase money as she had lived on the land since it was bought.

Colloquium is necessary in a complaint for libel, where the words used are not actionable per se, to explain the subject matter and to bring to light the true interpretation of the libelous words, p. 378.

Affirmed in Clarke v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 480, holding that "the want of a colloquium cannot be supplied by an innuendo."

Cited in Cole v. Naustadter, 22 Oreg. 199, holding that an innuendo did not make words in a letter libelous.

Mitigating Circumstances, provable in defense of libel, must be such as tend to rebut the presumption of malice or to reduce its degree, p. 380. Public rumors and general suspicion cannot be proved in mitigation, p. 384.

Cited in Leonard v. McPherson, 146 Cal. 621, upholding sufficiency of complaint for libel alleging publication by defendants of letter purporting to be written by plaintiff to wife of defendant charging her with boycotting plaintiff's business; Hearne v. De Young, 132 Cal. 362, holding inadmissible evidence that newspapers other than defendant's had published similar libels; and to same effect, Palmer v. Matthews, 162 N. Y. 103; Lick v. Owen, 47 Cal. 258, holding that testimony of mitigating circumstances cannot be in bar of the action, and an instruction to the jury that the presumption of malice was "fully rebutted" was erroneous, for the legal conclusion of malice cannot be rebutted, "and the court cannot assume as matter of law that the plaintiff is entitled to only nominal damages"; Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 85, holding in an action for slander that evidence of rumors as to the truth of the slanderous charge was inadmissible; to same effect in Preston v. Frey, 91 Cal. 110; Taylor v. Hearst, 107 Cal. 269, 270, to the point that such proof is not sufficient to defeat the action or to prevent the plaintiff from recovering such damages as he has actually sustained by reason of the publication, and holding that a "retraction published was properly pleaded and given in evidence, but it could operate only in mitigation of damages, and not as a full defense to the action"; Republican Co. v. Miner, 12 Colo. 87, 88, to the point that circumstances not mitigating are inadmissible; Thompson v. Powning, 15 Nev. 205, holding that circumstances were not mitigating; People v. Glassman, 12 Utah, 247, holding that evidence to rebut malice is admissible in defense of a criminal prosecution for libel; and note to 13 Am. Dec. 499, as to evidence in mitigation of damages for slander.

Defamatory publication is not privileged simply because it relates to a subject to public interest and was published from laudable motives; but the publisher should be allowed the fullest opportunity to show the circumstances under which the publication was made, the sources of his information, and the motives which induced the publication, pp. 382, 383.

Cited in Swan v. Thompson, 124 Cal. 197, holding certain evidence admissible on question of malice though not as to justification; Edwards v. San Jose Society, 99 Cal. 438, 37 Am. Cramer*, 54 Wis. 226, holding it unnecessary to decide whether a publication was privileged; Post Publishing Co. v. Hallam, 59 Fed. Rep. 542, holding that a libel against a candidate for congress was not privileged, and saying: "The danger that honorable and worthy men may be driven from politics and public service, by allowing too great latitude in attacks upon their character, outweighs any benefit that might occasionally accrue to the public from charges of corruption that are true in fact but are incapable of legal proof." Cited in notes to 86 Am. Dec. 88, 90, and 15 Am. St. Rep. 359, on libels on candidates.

There is no accurate standard by which to compute the injury, and the jury must necessarily be left to the exercise of a wide discretion, to be restricted by the court only when the sum awarded is so large that the verdict shocks the moral sense and raises a presumption that it must have proceeded from passion or prejudice, p. 386.

San Jose Co., 105 Cal. 289, 45 Am. Squires, 55 Cal. 104, holding that as an applicant was not an "actual settler," the constitution forbade the sale of state lands to him; *Rowell v. trial did not relieve the appellant from his duty to file a bill of exceptions.

Findings of Referee, on a collateral matter, do not have the effect of a special verdict, and a motion for new trial is not necessary to review such findings, pp. 404, 405.

Cited in Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 196, holding that on a reference to take an accounting between partners, it was not necessary to move for a new trial in order to have some of the referee's findings changed; Thompson v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 546, holding that errors on the face of a referee's report and findings are part of the judgment-roll, and "it is only upon an appeal from the judgments that the court can consider errors apparent on a judgment-roll, or review the verdict or decision of a case if excepted to, or errors assigned on a statement on appeal"; Faulkner v. Handy, 103 Cal. 21, criticising Thompson v. Patterson, supra, and the principal case, as to the use of the word "report," and holding that on an appeal from the judgment the report of a referee is not part of the judgment-roll and cannot be referred to; Murphy v. Patterson, 24 Mont. 583, holding referee's findings on partnership dissolution matter merely advisory and not conclusive on the court.

Interlocutory Decree, confirming referee's report and ordering judgment for plaintiff, is not appealable, p. 407.

Cited in Thompson v. White, 63 Cal. 509, holding that courts of equity have power to make interlocutory decrees under the code; *Etchebarne v. St. Rep. 494, holding that a judgment settling partnership affairs was final, and the fact that it appointed a receiver to execute it did not make it interlocutory; Rhodes v. Williams, 12 Nev. 26, holding a motion for new trial premature, because a decree dissolving a partnership was interlocutory only.

Motion for New Trial, in a case of mandamus brought in the supreme court and referred to a district court for trial, should be made in the supreme court, p. 410.

Cited in In re Philbrook, 108 Cal. 15, holding that after denial of a petition for rehearing by the supreme court, in the matter of an attorney's disbarment, a motion for new trial did not lie; People v. George, 2 Idaho, 850, holding that after the supreme court had decided a mandamus case on issues of law, a motion for new trial did not lie, because a new trial is a re-examination of questions of fact.

41 Cal. 410-420. SCOTT v. UMBARGER.

Purchaser from a Trustee, of land fraudulently sold by the trustee, is not protected if he had knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the fraud, not only at the time of purchasing but at any time before payment of the price and receipt of the deed, p. 419.

Cited in Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 167, to the point that if the purchaser "had notice, actual or constructive, at any moment of time before the payment of the money, he is not a bona fide purchaser"; Davis v. Ward, 109 Cal. 189, 50 Am. St. Rep. 31, holding that where the purchaser from a mortgager had paid only a part of the price before notice of defective title, "he was entitled to protection only to the extent that he was hurt"; Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 168, holding that the claim of the mother of a decedent to a resulting trust in his land should be preferred to the right of the administrator of the estate to sell the land to pay debts, there being no proof that creditors of the estate were induced to give credit by the fact that the land stood in the decedent's name.

41 Cal. 420-423. ENGLANDER v. ROGERS.

Tender of performance on his own part must be averred by the party claiming default of the other. To constitute a valid tender by vendee of balance of price, he "must have the money at hand, immediately under his control, and must then and there not only be ready and willing, but produce and offer to pay it," p. 422.

Cited in Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 20, 49 Am. Rep. 683, holding that "one who appeals to a court of equity to defend him against the legal title to land, of which he is in possession, must do equity by paying the price which he agreed to pay"; Heine v. Treadwell, 72 Cal. 220, holding that an averment in the answer was insufficient as to tender of purchase money by vendee; Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 319, 18 Am. St. Rep. 190, holding that where both parties to a contract of sale of land had failed to perform, time being of the essence of the contract, it was at an end, and a forfeit deposited by vendee with vendor could be recovered by the former, less any damage accruing to the latter by the noncompletion of the purchase; Dennis v. Strassburger, 89 Cal. 589, holding, in a suit by vendee to recover his deposit, that he had failed to show the vendor in default, for conceding the title to be defective, the vendor had thirty days in which to perfect it, and the time had not expired; Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 492, 493, a suit to enforce a vendor's lien, disapproving Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 319, and holding that although time was of the essence of the contract, the vendor was not bound to tender a deed except upon tender of payment by the vendee, and having tendered the deed after the payment was overdue, the vendor was entitled to recover on his lien, the vendee having refused to pay; Anderson v. Strassburger, 92 Cal. 41, holding that a vendee had no right to recover his deposit, because he was allowed ten days to examine title, and he had no right to rescind until after he had given the vendor notice of a defect and the vendor had failed within a reasonable time to remedy it, and the vendee had offered to perform on his part; Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 337, holding a vendee entitled to recover what he had paid on account, without tendering the balance due, because the vendor had placed his deed in escrow and later withdrawn it and rescinded the contract, without demanding any further payment from the vendee; Phelps v. Brown, 95 Cal. 575, holding the vendee entitled to recover her deposit; for although she was in default, the vendor had rescinded the contract; also commenting on the previous decisions of the court on this question, and saying that where a vendee had been held not entitled to recover his deposit, "the decision went upon the ground that the vendee was not only not in default, but the contract was still in force." Cited in Peckham v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 150, 151, a suit by vendee to recover damages from vendor for his failure to give a perfect title, holding that a written offer by vendee to pay the price was a sufficient tender under section 1496 of the Civil Code, which had changed the common-law rule as to actual production of the money, which was adopted by the principal case; Hansen v. Slaven, 98 Cal. 382, holding that the buyer, under an agreement for sale of shares of stock upon call, was properly nonsuited in his action against the seller for failure to deliver, because the buyer did not offer to pay for the stock when he made the call, and the reply of the seller, that the stock was hypothecated and would be delivered as soon as redeemed, was not a refusal to deliver; Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 86, 37 Am. St. Rep. 26, a case of estoppel by judgment, to the point that the covenants of vendor and vendee are mutual; Bailey v. Lay, 18 Colo. 418, holding that where it was agreed that the deed should be delivered upon payment of the first installment of price, the vendor need not deliver the deed until payment or offer to pay; Stakke v. Chapman, 13 S. Dak. 272, holding no valid tender established under facts stated; Arnett v. Smith, 11 N. Dak. 62, where covenants in contract for sale of land are mutual and dependent, vendor's obligation to convey being dependent upon cash payment and execution of notes and mortgage by vendee, tender necessary to rescission of contract by vendee; Telfner v. Russ, 162 U. S. 180, 181, holding that where the vendor of public lands was unable to perform his part of the agreement, on account of his failure to file his surveys in time, he had no right to recover the purchase price from the vendee.

Challenge for Implied Bias of juror must specify one of the statutory causes; and defendant is not prejudiced by the disallowance of such challenge if it does not affirmatively appear that defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges at the time the full panel was accepted and sworn, p. 430.

Cited in People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 196, to the point that "if the judge errs in disallowing a challenge for cause, and the defendant thereafter excuses the obnoxious juror under a peremptory challenge, and the jury is completed without the exhaustion by the defense of all its peremptory challenges, the error of the court will not be reviewed upon appeal, because no injury could have resulted to the defendant"; Shields v. State, 149 Ind. 400, to the point that the challenge must specify the ground; State v. Fourchy, 51 La. Ann. 244, noted under People v. Gatewood, 20 Cal. 146; Territory v. Hart, 7 Mont. 58, 497, holding that alienage of a juror was waived by failure to challenge on that ground; Territory v. Campbell, 9 Mont. 19, holding that refusal to allow questions to a juror as to bias was not a ground for exception, because it did not appear that he was sworn, or that peremptory challenges had been exhausted; State v. Raymond, 11 Nev. 107, 108, to the point that ground of challenge for implied bias must be specified: To same effect in People v. Hopt, 4 Utah, 250, and Southern Pacific Co. v. Rauh, 49 Fed. Rep. 701; Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. Dak. 42, to the point that no advantage can be taken of the disallowance of a challenge for cause, when peremptory challenges had not been exhausted; State v. Reddington, 7 S. Dak. 375, holding that where peremptory challenges had not been exhausted, a ruling fixing the order in which the challenges should be exercised could not be complained of.

Defendant as a Witness.—If he offers himself, counsel for prosecution cannot comment on his refusal to answer questions on cross-examination. The fact that he offers himself does not change the rules as to the limit of cross-examination, and he cannot be made a witness against himself, p. 431.

Cited in People v. Roselle, 78 Cal. 93, holding that the effect of section 1323 of the Penal Code, as to testimony by defendant, is that he can be cross-examined only as to matters about which he was examined in chief; People v. Crowley, 100 Cal. 481, holding that it was proper to ask defendant on cross-examination if he had not been previously convicted of a felony; People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 126, holding such cross-examination improper under the circumstances detailed; *Lockard v. State, 37 Ohio St. 188, in dissenting opinion, a majority of the court holding that the trial court properly compelled defendant to answer a question on cross-examination; Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 266, holding that the testimony of defendant may be impeached like that of any other witness, but the court correctly instructed the jury not to allow the impeaching testimony to weaken the presumption of defendant's innocence; and note in 88 Am. Dec. 322, on discrediting a witness.

Dak. 273, also discussing and denying right to costs on dismissal of disbarment proceedings; Reay v. Butler, 118 Cal. 114, holding that a bond, given on appeal from an order refusing to strike out a cost bill, was improperly made under section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the appeal was not from "an order directing the payment of money," but was "in effect the denial of a motion to modify a judgment"; Quitzow v. Perrin, 120 Cal. 260, holding that orders made after judgment, striking out a cost bill and retaxing costs, were proceedings "having relation to the original or final judgment and became part of it, and the error may be corrected on the appeal from the judgment"; Commissioners v. McIntosh, 30 Kan. 236, 239, holding that a motion to retax costs being an appealable order, a decision on the motion was conclusive against further trial of the question in a later suit. Disapproved in Orr v. Haskell, 2 Mont. 351, holding an order refusing to retax costs not appealable, and saying of the principal case: "No new authorities are referred to. . . . and the cases which have been heard by that court are in conflict with its doctrines are not reconsidered and overruled." Quackenbush*, 105 Cal. 306, holding that "if from a consideration of the probative facts this court should determine that they did not justify the finding of the ultimate fact, it would determine that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision. This, it has been repeatedly held, cannot be done in this mode"; Southern Pacific Co. v. Whitaker, 109 Cal. 274, to the point that "findings of probative facts, where the ultimate facts necessarily resulted from them, have been held sufficient," and holding that even if an omitted finding had been made, "it must have been in favor of defendants . . . and the plaintiff was in no way prejudiced by the failure"; McCarthy v. Brown, 113 Cal. 17, holding that "to determine the sufficiency of a finding of fact, it is only necessary to ascertain what statement of that fact is required in the pleading"; also that the force of a finding, "as a fact, is not impaired by its having been placed under the heading of conclusions of law." Cited in Chumasero v. Vial, 3 Mont. 379, holding that an appeal from the judgment-roll, "the judgment will be allowed to stand unless there is an absolute inconsistency between the express findings and the judgment"; Alder Gulch Co. v. Hayes, 6 Mont. 32, holding that on an appeal from the judgment, the question whether the findings are supported by the evidence cannot be considered; and In re Tsu Tse Mee, 81 Fed. Rep. 564, approving the principal case, and holding that the findings of a commissioner in his order deporting a Chinese immigrant were sufficient.

41 Cal. 515-519. CAMPBELL v. JONES.

Verbal Promise of Judge, out of court, to extend time for filing statement on motion for new trial, is insufficient; the order must be in writing, and either entered in the minutes of the court in open session, or signed by the judge and filed with the papers in the case, within the statutory time, p. 518.

Cited in Cooney v. Furlong, 66 Cal. 522, holding that right to move for new trial was lost by failure to file a statement; Shumway v. Leakey, 73 Cal. 262, holding that a sheriff was not entitled to fees without an order of court, and "what the judge told the defendant on the street is not an order"; First Nat. Bank v. Irvine, 2 Mont. 556, holding that where an appeal is from the judgment and refusal of new trial, a statement filed within the statutory time from date of the latter order is sufficient; Clark v. Strouse, 11 Nev. 79, holding that an order extending time for filing statement must be filed with the papers or entered on the minutes within the statutory time. Distinguished in Elliott v. Whitmore, 10 Utah, 257, holding that under the statute if an order extending the time for filing statement is granted within the statutory time, it need not be filed until later.

Form of Verdict.—Objections cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, p. 519.

Sale by Broker as Pledgee of mining stock to cover margins, without sufficient notice to pledgor, is valid if the pledgor ratifies the sale, p. 521.

Cited in *Hill v. St. Rep. 283; Sharpe v. National Bank, 87 Ala. 650, holding that where the pledgee bought the pledge at private sale, and the pledgor after receiving an account gave his note to the pledgor to cover the deficiency, this was a ratification, unless done in ignorance of material facts, in which case the pledgor might disaffirm within a reasonable time; notes to 49 Am. Legislature may compel a municipal corporation to pay in cash or by taxation the fees of commissioners for street widening, being a claim which in good conscience it ought to pay, even though there be no legal liability to pay it, p. 531.

Affirmed in Oreighton v. San Francisco. 42 Cal. 452, holding that a special act of the legislature, authorizing a city to pay a contractor for street work was mandatory; In re Market St., 49 Cal. 549, holding that commissioners for opening a street could not assess abutting owners for payment of the claim of a contractor on an abortive contract, for if the claim was one "affecting a public conscience," it "constituted a public burden, common to the state at large, or perhaps to the municipality"; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 35, 36, 21 Am. Rep. 693, saying that in the principal case "it seems to have been conceded by counsel that the legislature has power by special act to direct and control the disposition of the funds or property of a municipal corporation for a municipal purpose"; and holding, on page 34, with regard to a street assessment, that "an attempt by the state legislature to order an improvement within the limits of an incorporated city, and to levy an assessment to pay for it . . . is unconstitutional, because it is mandatory in its nature, and deprives the board of trustees, or legislative department of the city government, by whatever name it be known, of all choice or discretion in reference to the improvement"; People v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 248, 27 Am. St. Rep. 192, holding that a city "has the authority to maintain an action for the purpose of preserving the rights of the general public to the use of squares, or land claimed as such, within its limits, and that in such action it is authorized to put in issue the alleged rights of the people to such easement, and that the state itself is bound by the result of such litigation, if the same is not collusive"; Conlin v. Board of Supervisors, 114 Cal. 408, holding that under the present constitution the legislature can "make no appropriation of public moneys for which there is no enforceable claim, or upon a claim which exists merely by reason of some moral or equitable obligation which, in the mind of a generous or even a just individual, dealing with his own moneys, might prompt him to recognize as worthy of some reward." Cited in Pearson v. State, 56 Ark. 154, 35 Am. Deer Lodge Co.*, 2 Mont. 578, holding that a statute authorizing the issue of county warrants, to reimburse citizens who had made a county road, was constitutional; Wooster v. Plymouth, 62 N. Opening of Streets is clearly a municipal purpose, and whether the cost of such enterprises shall be borne by the contiguous property, or by all the property of the city, or a certain proportion by each, is a matter for legislative discretion, p. 532.

Vendor Must Tender Deed before suit by him to rescind the contract of sale for failure of vendee to pay his last installment, where the agreement was that a conveyance should be executed on payment of the purchase price, p. 535.

Affirmed in Kelly v. Mack, 45 Cal. 304, a suit on a vendor's lien. Distinguished in Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 492, 493, saying that the principal case "does not decide that [vendor] will be in default unless he tender a deed on the very day the purchase money becomes due"; and holding in a suit by a vendor to enforce her lien that she need not tender a deed "except upon tender of payment of the purchase money." Cited in Westerfeld v. New York etc. Co., 129 Cal. 84, noted under Morrison v. Lods, 39 Cal. 381; Merherin v. Tew, 7 Wash. 301, an action by vendor on notes given by vendee for purchase price. Distinguished in Loud v. Pomona Co., 153 U. S. 579, holding that the covenants in an agreement for sale of land were independent, and "the clearly expressed intention was that the payment of the purchase price of the lands should precede the performance of the . . . covenant to convey."

Vendor Cannot Rescind the contract of sale, for the vendee's non-performance, unless he restore to the vendee whatever he has paid on the contract, p. 535; and the rescission must be in toto, p. 536.

Cited in Heilig v. Parlin, 134 Cal. 102, holding vendee entitled to recover purchase money when vendor has rescinded; Henderson v. Mudd, 59 Cal. 589, saying it was obvious that plaintiff in the principal case "was not entitled to recover both the possession and the balance of the purchase price"; also that the principal case must be understood as holding that "if a vendor relies upon his right to rescind, based upon a breach of the contract by the vendee, he must show that he has in fact rescinded or sought to rescind, by restoring what he has received"; and holding that a vendee having failed to perform his part of an agreement, which stipulated that in such event his possession should terminate, the vendor had the right to bring ejectment. Cited in Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 18-20, 49 Am. Rep. 681, 682, holding that a vendor was entitled to recover in ejectment against a vendee who had refused to perform his part of the contract; to same effect in *Gates v. St. Rep. 189, holding that where both parties to a contract of sale were in default, the contract was at an end, and the vendee was entitled to recover a forfeit he had deposited with the vendor, less the vendor's damages; Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 32, 20 Am. St. Rep. 208, holding that rescission by a vendee was in toto, for "the offer was to restore everything of value on the one side, and the demand that everything be restored on the other"; Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 532, 20 Am. St. Rep. 244, holding a nonsuit properly granted in an action by a vendor to set aside a judicial sale made by him as assignee in insolvency for fraud of the vendee in preventing competition in bidding at the auction, because plaintiff had made no effort to rescind, or to return what the vendee had paid. Distinguished in Stratton v. California Land Co., 86 Cal. 361, holding that the vendor, having treated the contract as abandoned for nonperformance by the vendee, could bring an action to quiet title without returning the purchase money. Cited in Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 451, 22 Am. St. Rep. 264, holding that the vendee could recover what he had paid on account, after the rescinding of the contract, notwithstanding that the contract stipulated that such payments should be forfeited as liquidated damages in case of breach; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 509, holding that where vendor brought a bill in equity to rescind a contract of sale, for fraudulent misrepresentations of vendee as to shares of stock taken in payment, and later placed the shares in the hands of the clerk of court, but did not properly assign them until they had been sold for assessments and become worthless, this was not a compliance with the rule that the vendor must return to the vendee anything of value received from him. Affirmed in Minah Co. v. Briscoe, 47 Fed. Rep. 281, and Crosen v. Murphy, 31 Oreg. 118.

1863, will bar recovery under Mexican or Spanish titles not then confirmed; but the possession must have been continuous for the statutory period, and if interrupted, even by force or fraud, . . . the statute will begin to run only from the time of the re-entry, p. 543.

Cited in Grimm v. Curley, 43 Cal. 253, holding an alcalde grant barred by adverse possession under the act of 1863; Hayes v. Martin, 45 Cal. 563, holding that where decree of confirmation of a Mexican grant was rendered before the act of 1863, and defendant had entered adversely before that date, the running of the statute in his favor was not prevented by the fact that proceedings were pending for the approval of plaintiff's survey; Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 596, to the point that adverse possession must be uninterrupted for the statutory period; Norris v. Moody, 84 Cal. 163, holding that if the decision in the principal case, that the statute began to run in favor of an adverse occupant before the issuance of a patent to the confirmee, was correct, the statute had run in the case at bar from the date of a final decree of confirmation, even under the act of 1863; but as the code had omitted the provisions of the act of 1863, the statute had certainly run under the code. Cited in McGrath v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 626, holding that an adverse possession had not been continuous, because it was interrupted by judgment and writ of possession in ejectment against a tenant of the adverse claimant; Anzar v. Miller, 90 Cal. 245, holding that the statute did not begin to run in the case of an imperfect Mexican grant, not presented to the land commission for confirmation, until after issue of a patent, because it could not run as long as the fee was in the United States; Ohm v. San Francisco, 92 Cal. 455, holding that a claim against the city, for possession of land therein under the "Scherrebeck title," was barred by sections 318 and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that "five years of adverse possession at any time since the passage of the act of 1863 . . . bars an action by the holder of an imperfect (unpatented) title of Spanish or Mexican origin"; Altschul v. O'Neill, 35 Or. 214, quoting Hayes v. Martin, 45 Cal. 559. Disapproved in Valentine v. Sloss, 103 Cal. 221, holding that a suit by confirmee of a patent on a Mexican grant, begun within five years after issuance of the patent, was not barred by the statute, and saying of the principal case: "The views first announced in that case were modified on rehearing, and were practically repudiated in Gardiner v. Miller, 47 Cal. 570, since which decision it has been uniformly held that the statute does not begin to run until the issuance of the patent." Affirmed as to continuity of adverse possession in Townsend v. Edwards, 25 Fla. 588. Approved by Field, J., as to effect of the act of 1863 on Mexican grants, in Montgomery v. Bevans, 1 Saw. 672; but on motion for new trial, on page 685 he holds section 6 of said act invalid so far as it applies to Mexican or Spanish titles perfected after its passage, saying that "as to titles thus perfected, the ordinary period of limitation must be allowed, from the date of their consummation, which exists with reference to actions on complete title from other sources." Cited in Union Mill Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 91, holding that "an adverse use of water for the statutory period must be open, notorious, peaceable, continuous, and under claim or color of right; for if any act is done by other parties claiming the water that operates as an interruption; however slight, it prevents the acquisition of any adverse right"; and note to 99 Am. Bankruptcy.—A creditor who has proved his debt cannot maintain an action on the same demand in the federal or state courts, p. 551.

Cited in New Lamp Chimney Co. v. Ansonia Co., 91 U. S. 667, 13 Bank. Reg. 396, holding that as the bankrupt law provides that no discharge from debts shall be granted to a corporation, the payee of a note made by a bankrupt corporation, who had proved the claim and received a dividend, could sue for the unpaid balance in a state court; dissenting opinion in Eyster v. Gaff, 2 Colo. 243, a majority of the court holding that bankruptcy of a mortgagor was no bar to a suit of ejectment brought by the mortgagee against a third party, without consent of the bankruptcy court, for the assignee had never taken possession of the mortgaged premises, and the plaintiff in ejectment had filed no claim in bankruptcy; Spilman v. Johnson, 27 Gratt. 38, holding that where a judgment creditor elected to prove his debt in the bankruptcy court, this was a waiver of his right to institute any other proceedings in law or equity inconsistent with his claim in bankruptcy.

41 Cal. 552-556. EMERSON v. SANSOME.

Sheriff's Deed transfers what interest the execution debtor had at the date of levy, and does not estop the debtor from asserting a right subsequently acquired, p. 555.

Distinguished in Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 305, saying that in the principal case the subsequent rights of the debtor were acquired after the execution sale, and holding that "the legal effect of a sheriff's deed . . . is at least equal to that of a quitclaim deed of the same property executed by the debtor on the day of sale. . . . Upon a sale under execution the interest or estate of the judgment debtor in and to the property at the date of the sale passes to the purchaser, although acquired after the levy of the execution." Cited in Robinson v. Thornton, 102 Cal. 682, holding that in ejectment by purchaser at sheriff's sale, against the vendee of the execution debtor, the latter may show "not only that he has acquired a different interest or right of possession, but also that the judgment debtor himself had no interest in the lands at the time of the sale"; Shirk v. Thomas, 121 Ind. 153, 16 Am. St. Rep. 386, holding that a judgment creditor who buys the land at execution sale gets only the interest that the debtor had at the time the judgment was entered; Missouri Valley Co. v. Barwick, 50 Kan. 61, holding, with regard to a sheriff's sale, that "when the confirmation occurs and the deed is issued; they relate back to the date of the sale, and entitle the purchaser to the crops which were then unripe and growing upon the premises"; Northern Pacific Co. v. Smith, 69 Fed. Rep. 581, holding that "judgment in an action for the recovery of real property is not a bar to a subsequent action brought or defense interposed by either of the parties to it, when that action or defense is founded on an after-acquired title"; notes in 54 Am. Dec. 546, on judgment in ejectment; and note to 84 Am. Dec. 573, on after-acquired title.

Entry on Homestead, under act of Congress of May 20, 1862, gives an interest in the lands and the absolute right of possession from the paramount proprietor which possession, if actually continued for the period of five consecutive years . . . will entitle him to a patent on proof of residence or cultivation during that period, p. 556.

Distinguished in Reinhart v. Bradshaw, 19 Nev. 258, 3 Am. St. Rep. 838, holding that a tenant in common, in possession of government land for himself and cotenants, cannot acquire a homestead therein, for under the decision in Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 513, the right of pre-emption cannot be exercised on land occupied by another, and the possession of one cotenant is for the benefit of all; and saying that if the principal case is opposed to this rule, it was "decided before the decision in Atherton v. Fowler established the contrary doctrine."

Specific Performance.—Vendee, upon finding that he has received less land than the contract called for, though entitled to rescind, may elect to have specific performance to the extent of the vendor's interest, Cited in dissenting opinion in McCowen v. Pew, 147 Cal. 310 majority on hearing in bank holding where specific performance is sought of contract to convey land with timber at buyer's option for use of railroad, to be exercised within one year, and vendor prior to exercise of option, cut timber, purchaser entitle to take land and remaining timber with compensation for timber removed; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 20, 49 Am. Rep. 682, to the point that a vendee who elects to keep the land must tender the purchase money; Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 301, holding that although the complaint in an action for specific performance of a contract for exchange of lands was loosely drawn, it stated a cause of action, for "it proceeds upon the principle that where the defendant is not able to perform the whole of his contract, he may, at the option of the plaintiff, be compelled to perform it as far as he can, with compensation for the deficiencies"; Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 113, 30 Am. Northern Pacific Co.*, 13 Mont. 486, holding that upon failure of vendor's title, vendee may sue to recover the purchase money, and is not bound to wait until ousted, and then sue on the covenants of the deed.

41 Cal. 630-632. WILSON v. SHACKLEFORD.

Forcible Entry and Unlawful Detainer.—Temporary absence of the actual occupant of premises is no bar to his bringing the action, under the section providing that there must be actual occupation by plaintiff within five days before defendant's entry, p. 632.

Motion is an application for a rule or order, made viva voce to a court or judge. Making out and filing the application itself is not to make the motion. The attention of the court must be called to it. The court must be moved to grant the order, p. 650.

Affirmed in Spencer v. Branham, 109 Cal. 340. Cited in Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 99, discussing sufficiency of record of grounds on motion for new trial. Distinguished in Wallace v. Lewis, 9 Mont. 403, saying that the principal case did not use the words "viva voce in their exact literal significance," and holding that "the motion itself is the application to the court." Disapproved in Freelove v. Gould, 3 Kan. App. 752, holding on stare decisis, that the filing of a motion within the statutory time was enough, and it need not be presented to the court until later.

Where an indictment charges unlawful possession of unfinished bills similar to those of a foreign banking corporation, the allegation of incorporation is unnecessary, but, if it were material, proof by reputation is sufficient, p. 654.

Cited in People v. McDonnell, 80 Cal. 288, 13 Am. St. Rep. 163, holding that an information charging counterfeiting of Bank of England notes need not aver that the bank was incorporated; People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 651, holding that where stolen property was alleged to belong to a corporation organized under the laws of Colorado, proof of such organization was not necessary, but evidence of a de facto corporation was sufficient, if given with proper detail; State v. McKiernan, 17 Nev. 229, holding it unnecessary to charge that a bank was incorporated. State v. Savage, 36 Or. 215, holding proof of de facto existence sufficient in case of larceny from such corporation.

41 Cal. 663-679; 10 Am. St. Rep. 279. MELEY v. COLLINS.

Estoppel by Delay.—Where a forged deed has been of record five years, delay of the owner of the land, having knowledge of the forgery, to attack it, does not estop her recovery of the land in ejectment from a vendee of the grantee in the forged deed, pp. 676-679.

Cited in Simpson v. Biffe, 63 Ark. 301, holding that where the grantor of land to a wife fraudulently inserted the husband's name as a grantee before recording the deed, without the wife's knowledge, she was not estopped, by her delay in attacking the forgery, from setting up the forgery as against a purchaser of the land at sheriff's sale on an execution against the husband. Distinguished in Brown v. Wilson, 21 Colo. 322, 52 Am. St. Rep. 236, holding that where title to mining property had been conclusively established by a judgment, one who might have attacked former transfers of the property for informalities was estopped by his delay, and the rule of the principal case did not apply. Cited in Chandler v. White, 84 Ill. 439, holding, as to forged trust deed, that the law does not require the owner of the title to attack the forgery within any particular period, but "he may bide his time, and trust to the strength of his title"; Bausman v. Faue, 45 Minn. 417, holding that although foreclosure proceedings were void for informality, not apparent upon the record, grantees of the mortgagor, who knew of the defect and failed to clear the record within a reasonable time, were estopped to question the validity of the foreclosure, as against buyers at the sale; Hugill v. Kinney, 9 Oreg. 251, 42 Am. Rep. 802, holding that where an advertisement offered a reward for information, and the reward was claimed by one entitled to it, but payment was refused by the advertiser on the ground that the advertisement was unauthorized by him, she was not estopped to set up the want of authority as a defense to an action to recover the reward, for his failure to publicly contradict the advertisement was not equivalent to "standing by and seeing the plaintiff act, knowing that he believed the advertisement genuine"; and note in 23 Am. St. Rep. 469, on registration of forged deeds.

41 Cal. 683-686. THOMPSON v. O'NEIL.

Where there is no statement on appeal, findings necessary to support the judgment are presumed, and to procure a reversal, the express findings must be absolutely inconsistent with the judgment, p. 685.

Affirmed in Chumaseo v. Vial, 3 Mont. 379; Alder Gulch Co. v. Hayes, 6 Mont. 32, 33; McMillan v. Carter, 6 Mont. 220, where the appeal was from the judgment and from refusal of new trial; and Sperling v. Calfee, 7 Mont. 527, as to an appeal from an order made on a referee's report in proceedings supplementary to execution. Distinguished in Gay v. Havernale, 27 Wash. 401, reversing decree against plaintiff on ground of laches which recited it is based on findings and evidence when issue of laches not raised by answer.

41 Cal. 686-693. VANCE v. PENA.

Reasonable Time.—Where the grantor in a deed covenanted to convey certain lands, or other lands in lieu thereof upon reasonable notice, a delay of eight years in performance is unreasonable, p. 693.

Cited in Hannan v. McNickle, 82 Cal. 125, holding that where a memorandum of sale of land stipulated that the price of nine hundred dollars should be paid in monthly installments, not naming the amounts, "if the purchase money did not become due at once, or at the end of two months, it became due in a reasonable time, . . . and we think that a period of nearly three years was more than a reasonable time for the payment of a sum like nine hundred dollars."

OCTOBER TERM, 1871.

REPORTS OF CASES
DETERMINED IN
THE SUPREME COURT
OCTOBER TERM, 1871

[No. 2,788.]

ANDREW GOODYEAR v. JOHN E. WILLISTON AND ISAAC HOBBS.

SEIZURE BY SHERIFF, AT DIRECTION OF JUDGMENT CREDITOR, WHEN JOINT TRESPASS.—Where a Sheriff, under an execution against McGrane, and at the direction of the judgment creditor Williston, seized upon certain property, including wheat and barley, in possession of Goodyear, who had purchased in good faith and for value of McGrane after the crop was cut and stacked; and, at the same time, the Sheriff, having in his hands a mortgage given by McGrane to Williston upon the crop while growing, took possession of the wheat and barley also under such mortgage, and placed all the property seized in possession of Casey, as his keeper, as agent of Williston: held, that these facts established a joint taking by the Sheriff and judgment creditor, which, if wrongful, would sustain an action against them jointly as trespassers.

MORTGAGE ON GROWING CROP.—The intent of the provision relating to mortgages of growing crops, in section seventeen of the Statute of Frauds (Stats. 1856, p. 87), was to protect the lien of such a mortgage, without any delivery of possession, until the crop was so far harvested as to be capable of manual delivery and transportation; but the continuance of such lien afterwards, as against a subsequent purchaser in good faith, depends upon actual delivery of the crop to the mortgagee, and his retention of the possession thereof.

PURCHASE IN STACKS OF GRAIN MORTGAGED WHILE GROWING.—Where a mortgage was given upon growing crops of wheat and barley, as provided in section seventeen of the Statute of Frauds (Stats. 1856, p. 87), and after they were cut and put into stacks and shocks the mortgagor sold and delivered them to a purchaser in good faith, and for value; held, that the lien of the mortgage, without possession in the mortgagee, extended only to a severance of the crops from the land, and that the purchaser took them relieved of the mortgage lien.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Solano.

This was an action to recover possession of eighty tons of hay, sixty tons of wheat, some in stacks and shocks, and the balance thrashed and sacked; seventy-five tons of barley, in stacks and shocks; and certain plows, farming tools, and hogs—in all claimed to be worth two thousand dollars; or their value, in case a delivery could not be had; also, damages in the sum of five hundred dollars, for alleged unlawful seizure and detention thereof.

It appears from the findings of the Court below, that in November, 1869, the plaintiff, Goodyear, being the owner of a tract of land in Solano County, made a contract with Thomas McGrane, wherein the latter agreed to enter upon said tract, cultivate as much of it as he could, and cut hay on the balance, Goodyear furnishing the necessary money and advances; that by the terms of said contract, upon the completion of the harvesting of the crops, one fourth was to be reserved and given to Goodyear as the value of the land for the season; and the balance was to be taken and disposed of by Goodyear, who, after deducting from the proceeds the amount of the advances made, and indebtedness due him, was to pay the remainder over to McGrane; that, pursuant to the contract, McGrane entered upon the tract, and planted wheat and barley, which he cut in July, 1870; and, prior to August tenth, he had it all in stacks and shocks, and was engaged in baling hay; that on said day, by a bill of sale, he sold all said wheat, barley, and hay, and all the other personal property, to Goodyear, who took possession of the same, and was in possession at the time the defendants seized it.

In April, 1870, McGrane made a promissory note to the defendant Williston for one thousand five hundred dollars and upwards, and, to secure the same, executed to him a mortgage upon his growing crops of wheat and barley, which was recorded; that on August fifteenth McGrane confessed a judgment in a Justice's Court in favor of Williston and one Brownlee; and the defendant Hobbs, as Sheriff of Solano County, about three weeks after the wheat and barley were cut and stacked, seized all the property mentioned, under an execution upon such judgment, and under said mortgage, and placed the same in possession of one Casey, as his keeper, and also as agent of Williston.

The judgment for plaintiff was against both defendants, for a return of the property or its value assessed at two thousand dollars. Both defendants appealed.

Goodwin & Gregory and J. McKenna, for Appellants.

To maintain a joint action against two parties, for the recovery of personal property, they must have joint possession of such property, and the whole thereof, at the commencement of the suit. But Casey was only Williston's agent to receive possession of the wheat and barley. Williston did not take or receive possession of the hay, farming implements, and other property, either himself or by an agent. Therefore the Court erred in rendering judgment against Williston for all the property. There was a misjoinder of the parties defendant.

The contract between McGrane and Goodyear was a lease.

Argument for Respondent.

McGrane was the owner of the produce, and could dispose of it by sale, mortgage, or it was attachable by his creditors. (Butterfield v. Baker, 5 Pick. 522; Munsil v. Carew, 2 Cush. 50; Symonds v. Hall, 37 Me. 356; Turner v. Bachelder, 17 Me. 257; Walls v. Preston, 25 Cal. 63.)

Williston was not required to take possession of the wheat and barley under his mortgage until they were harvested. (Statute of Frauds, Sec. 17; Quirique v. Dennis, 24 Cal. 154.) Mere severance from the leasehold is but one step in the harvest. "Harvested" is a comprehensive word, and expresses all the acts necessary to the acquisition and use of the matured grain, by the sower thereof, until the end and completion. It expresses the state in which the crop is put in the market—in which it can be handled, delivered, transported—and the mortgagee is not required to take possession of a crop until it is reduced to this state. (Bours v. Webster, 6 Cal. 660; Davis v. McFarlane, 37 Cal. 634; Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns. 418; Robbins v. Oldham, 1 Duval, 28.)

Wm. S. Wells and L. B. Miener, for Respondent.

There was an entry by the Sheriff in a double capacity—official, under the execution, and as an agent, representing Williston as holder of the mortgage; both defendants are joint trespassers, and there was no misjoinder. (Lewis v. Johns, 34 Cal. 629; Nichols v. Michall, 23 N. Y. 264; Symonds v. Hall, 32 Me. 354.)

Under the contract the entire property was in Goodyear, independent of the sale. (Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 546.) The defendant Williston failed to take possession of the property at the time required by law, and thereby lost the benefit of his mortgage. The case is not to be determined by defining the word "harvest;" for the statute plainly enacts that the mortgage lien shall cease as against subsequent purchasers unless possession of such crops, when harvested, be delivered to the mortgagee, as in other cases of mortgage of personal property. The meaning of the statute is that such crops shall be delivered to the mortgagees upon severance from the freehold; for they then become personal property. (Chaffin v. Doub, 14 Cal. 384; Brown on Frands, sec. 254; Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Metcalf, 818; 3 Parsons on Contracts, 81.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This is an appeal from the judgment, upon the judgment roll alone, by the defendants, who contend that the findings do not sustain the judgment. It is claimed that the findings show that the defendants were not jointly interested in the personal property sought to be recovered by plaintiff, and that they did not take joint possession of such property, or any portion thereof; hence no joint judgment could be properly entered against them. The findings show that defendant Hobbs, as Sheriff of Solano County, by virtue of an execution in his hands in favor of Williston and Brownlee, and against McGrane, on or about the 15th day of August, 1870, "under the direction of said Williston, entered upon and attached the property described in the complaint; * * * that at the time of the entry of the Sheriff on said tract he had the mortgage in his possession, and with said attachment [execution], and under said mortgage, he attempted to and did take possession of all said wheat and barley, and the other property described in the complaint, and left the same in the possession of one Casey, as his keeper and also as agent of said defendant Williston, and then took the property in the complaint described, and detained and still detains the same from the plaintiff." These facts establish a joint taking and detention by the defendants, which, if wrongful, clearly sustain a judgment against them jointly, as trespassers, whether Williston assumed to act as mortgagee of a portion of the property, or as joint judgment creditor with Brownlee. The defendant Hobbs was clearly a trespasser, upon the facts as found; as no portion of the property was at the time subject to execution as the property of McGrane; and Williston, in directing the levy, was a joint trespasser with him as to all the property except the wheat and barley. As to the wheat and barley, it is claimed that Williston was justified in taking possession thereof, under his mortgage ~~on~~ the growing crop, of April 29th, 1870. The validity of this claim involves the construction of the seventeenth section of the Act of May 19th, 1850, "concerning fraudulent conveyances and contracts," as amended April 9th, 1856, which section, as amended, reads as follows:

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

"Sec. 17. No mortgage of personal property hereafter made shall be valid against any other person than the parties thereto, unless possession of the mortgaged property be delivered to and retained by the mortgagee; provided, that a mortgage upon growing crops, executed, acknowledged, and recorded like mortgages upon real estate, shall be valid as against third parties without such delivery of possession; but the lien of such mortgage shall cease as against subsequent purchasers unless possession of such crops, when harvested, be delivered to the mortgagee, as required in other cases of mortgage of personal property." (Stats. 1856, p. 87.)

It appears from the findings that McGrane, the mortgagor, who had sown and cultivated the grain, on or about the 20th day of July, 1870, cut the same, and afterwards, and prior to the tenth day of August thereafter, had it in stacks and shocks; that afterwards, on said 10th day of August, 1870, said McGrane, by bill of sale, duly executed, bargained and sold to plaintiff all said wheat and barley, and delivered the possession thereof to him, who thereupon took and retained possession of the same, and was in possession thereof at the time the defendants entered and took possession, and that such sale to plaintiff was made in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

The question here presented is whether, under this statute, the lien of the mortgagee, Williston, as against the purchaser, Goodyear, had ceased to exist on or prior to the fifteenth day of August, when he claims to have taken possession of the wheat and barley by virtue of his mortgage. From a careful reading of the seventeenth section it seems obvious that the intent of the Legislature was to protect the lien of a mortgagee of growing crops by a recordation of his mortgage, without an actual and continued change of possession from the mortgagor to the mortgagee of the lands upon which the crop is growing, until such crop is matured and so far harvested as to be severed from the land and placed in a condition capable of manual delivery and transportation; and when this condition of the crop is attained, to make a continuance of the mortgage lien as against subsequent purchasers in good faith, dependent upon the then actual delivery of the crop to the mortgagee, and his retention of the possession thereof. This condition of the crop was attained prior to the 10th day of August, 1870, on which day the plaintiff purchased and took the actual possession of it from the mortgagor. The mortgagee does not claim to have taken, or attempted to take, possession, until the plaintiff had been in the actual possession for five days; and I am satisfied the learned Judge of the Court below was correct in his view that the plaintiff, as purchaser of the grain in the stack and shock, took the same relieved of the defendant Williston's mortgage lien.

With these views it becomes unnecessary to notice the questions discussed by counsel arising upon the original lease or cropping contract between plaintiff and McGrane.

By CROCKETT, J., concurring specially, RHODES, C. J., concurring:

I concur in the judgment, on the ground that under the contract of November, 1869, between Goodyear and McGrane, the title of the growing crop, as it was grown, vested in Goodyear, who was entitled to retain one fourth to his own use, with an absolute power of sale and disposition as to the remainder, retaining out of the proceeds his advances and all indebtedness due to him from McGrane, and accounting to the latter for the remainder of the proceeds. Under this contract McGrane never had any title to the growing crop, but only an interest in the proceeds.

I concur with Mr. Justice SPRAGUE as to the joint liability of the defendants, but express no opinion on the other point discussed in his opinion.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
AH YING.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—LEGAL SESSION OF COURT.—Under the Act of March 1st, 1864, a District Judge may adjourn a general term of his Court in one county over an intervening term in another county. The term so adjourned is a continuation of the regular term.

TERM.—The Act of April 20th, 1863, concerning Courts of justice and judicial officers, was intended to prevent the loss of a term; and it does not apply after the Judge has once appeared and commenced to hold Court.

PRESENT INSANITY—DUTY OF COURT.—No plea of present insanity is required. If, at any time during the proceedings in a criminal trial, a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant, it is the duty of the Court, of its own motion, to suspend further proceedings in the case until the question of sanity has been determined.

TERM—RIGHT AND POWER OF COUNSEL.—Counsel for the defendant cannot waive an inquiry as to the question of the sanity of the defendant, nor can he compel the Court to enter upon such an inquiry, where no ground for such doubt exists.

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, County of Shasta.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. Garter, for Appellant.

The trial was irregularly continued, because it was continued to a day not in a term of the Court. For this reason the Court had no jurisdiction at the time of the trial; and the judgment is, therefore, void. (Norwood v. Kenfield, 34 Cal. 321; Constitution of Cal. Art. III, Sec. 12; Genl. Laws, Chap. 3, Secs. 23, 24.)

The action of the Court in allowing evidence as to the present sanity of the defendant to be given on the trial, and the submission of such evidence to the jury, was error for which the verdict should be set aside. (Crim. Practice Act, Sec. 583, et seq.; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, 42; People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576.)

Attorney General Hamilton, for Respondent.

The continuance was not error. (Stats. 1863-4, pp. 118, 133; Thomas v. Forgerty, 19 Cal. 644.) The plea of present insanity was withdrawn, and that question was not before the jury.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

The defendant was indicted for murder, and the case was called for trial at the regular March Term of the District Court in and for Shasta County, when, neither party being ready for trial, the case was set for trial on the seventeenth day of April following, to which time the Court was adjourned, by an order upon its minutes.

The April Term of the Court in Trinity County, which is within the same district, intervened between the March Term in Shasta and the seventeenth day of April, to which the Court was adjourned. It does not appear affirmatively whether the Court was actually in session in Trinity County on the seventeenth day of April or not. On that day the Judge did not appear to hold Court at Shasta, but the Clerk and Sheriff, under instructions from the Judge, adjourned the Court from day to day for one week, at the end of which time the Judge appeared and held Court, and the defendant was tried, against his objections, and a conviction had. It is claimed that the Court was not then legally in session, and the verdict and judgment, therefore, void.

The Act concerning the District Courts of this State, passed March 1st, 1864, authorizes the Court, by an order entered upon its minutes, to adjourn to a day certain, although a term for another county in the same district may intervene, provided such special term do not interfere with any general term in the district. This, I think, contemplates an adjournment of the general term over the intervening term in another county. It is not properly a special term, but a continuation of the regular term. Section seventy-three of the Act concerning Courts of justice of this State and judicial officers, passed April 20th, 1863 (Stats. 1863, p. 333), was intended, as has been held, to prevent the loss of a term, if the Judge did not appear on the day appointed to hold Court. After the Judge has once appeared and commenced to hold Court this section has no application. If it authorized the adjournment from day to day by the Sheriff, in the present case, it would authorize a similar proceeding at any time in the term when the Judge failed to appear and hold Court. I think the point well taken.

On the trial, at the request of the attorney for the defendant, and against the objections of the District Attorney, the Court allowed evidence to be given as to the present sanity of the defendant, and instructed the jury that if they were satisfied, from the evidence, that the defendant was (then) insane, they would so find. There is no plea of present insanity required. If at any time a doubt arose as to the sanity of the defendant, it was the duty of the Court, of its own motion, to suspend the trial or further proceedings in the case, at whatever stage the doubt arose, until the question of sanity was determined. Common humanity requires that one should not be tried for his life while insane, and counsel for the defendant cannot waive such inquiry when the doubt exists; nor can he, by interposing such a plea, compel the Court to enter upon such inquiry where no ground for such doubt exists.

The fact that evidence upon the subject was allowed to go to the jury, and that they were instructed to find a verdict that the defendant was then insane if they were satisfied from the evidence that he was so, implies a doubt on the part of the Court as to his sanity. Under the provisions of the Criminal Practice Act the trial should have been suspended until that question was settled.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

SPRAGUE, J., concurring specially:

I concur in the judgment of reversal, upon the ground last discussed by Mr. Justice TEMPLE.

C. T. JACOBUS v. THE COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF OAKLAND.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE—STREETS IN OAKLAND.—The Legislature did not intend by the Act of January 31st, 1870, relative to the opening of streets in Oakland, to authorise the City Council to proceed to open, extend, straighten, or widen any street, except in cases where the Coun-all were satisfied that the benefits to lands affected thereby, and to be assessed therefor, would exceed the damages to private property necessarily occasioned, and the expenses of the proceeding and work.

ISSUE.—The Legislature did intend that the aggregate damages to private property, including the value of land taken for the street, and the expenses of the Commissioners, should be paid for in money by assessment upon the several parcels of land benefited by the proposed improvement, in proportion to the benefits to accrue to each.

ISSUE.—DUTY OF COMMISSIONERS.—It is the duty of Commissioners appointed under that Act to ascertain and report the damages to the owner of each specific parcel of land affected by the proposed work, which should include the value of lands taken for the street.

APPEAL from the County Court of the County of Alameda.

Under the special Act of the Legislature, referred to in the opinion of the Court, a petition was presented to the Council of Oakland, asking that Eighth street be opened, straightened, and widened, from Adaline to Wood street, to the width of eighty feet. In compliance with the petition, the city engineer was ordered to prepare a map of the proposed improvement. Upon receiving the report of the engineer, with the map prepared by him, the Council gave notice, by advertisement in a daily newspaper, of the intended improvements, and thereafter appointed three Commissioners to examine the charges necessary to be made in the premises to be affected, and to assess damages. The Commissioners reported, among other things, an award in favor of the relator for one hundred and fifty dollars, as the value of the land to be taken from him, by reason of the opening of the street, after deducting the amount of benefits which would accrue to him in the increased value of other land not taken. On application to the County Court a temporary injunction was granted, and the proceedings of the Council were brought up for review on certiorari. After hearing the matter, the Court dissolved the injunction, and confirmed the proceedings of the Council. The relator appealed.

C. A. Tuttle and S. F. Gilcrest, for Appellant.

H. H. Havens, for Respondent.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the County Court, on review upon certiorari of the proceedings of the Council of the City of Oakland, in the matter of extending and opening Eighth street, in said city, under and by virtue of an Act of the Legislature entitled "An Act to authorize the Council of the City of Oakland to lay out, open, and improve streets in said city," approved January 31st, 1870. (Stats. 1869-70, p. 38.)

It is alleged by the applicant for the writ that the Commissioners elected by the City Council to assess the damages and benefits to be caused by the opening and extension of said street did not perform their duties in that behalf according to law, but exceeded the authority conferred upon them [in this], "that they did not first ascertain the amount of damages sustained by affiant and others for property taken for said street, as by law they were required to do, but estimated and charged them for all the benefits resulting from said improvement to their remaining lands, and offset the same against the value of the land so taken, and allowed them only the difference as damages."

The return of the Council to the writ abundantly demonstrates that the principle upon which the Commissioners proceeded in making their award of damages and benefits, in reference to each particular lot by them adjudged to be affected by the improvement, was to award damages only when, in their judgment, the damages, including the value of that portion of the lot or parcel of land taken for the street, exceeded the benefits resulting from the improvement to the residue of such lot or tract, and then only for the excess of such damages over the benefits, and to award benefit only to the extent of the excess of benefit over damages, including the value of the parcel of the tract taken, if any was taken; and if the damages and benefits were, in their judgment, equal, no award of damages or benefits was by them returned as to that particular lot or tract of land.

It seems to be admitted by counsel for the city that such was the principle upon which the Commissioners proceeded in making their award of damages and benefits, and in arriving at a basis for their assessments upon the parcels of land by them thus adjudged benefited, to meet the aggregate damages thus adjudged to other parcels, and the expenses of the Commissioners; and this mode of procedure is claimed by counsel for the city to be a strict compliance with the statute under which the proceedings were had.

On the other hand, it is insisted by counsel for appellant that this mode of procedure adopted by the Commissioners, to ascertain the damages and benefits caused by the proposed improvement, is not authorized by the statute, but is in direct conflict therewith.

Although the terms of the section of the law which prescribes the duties of the Commissioners are somewhat ambiguous, yet upon a careful examination of the whole Act, it is clear to my mind that the principle adopted by the Commissioners, in ascertaining the damages and benefits resulting to the specific parcels of land by them adjudged to be affected by the improvement, was erroneous, and not authorized by the letter or spirit of the law; and necessarily, having established a basis of assessment not authorized by the statute, the specific assessments to property benefited to cover the amount of damages and costs are erroneous and illegal.

The Act is entitled "An Act to authorize the Council of the City of Oakland to lay out, open, and improve streets in said city." The first section of the Act in effect provides that, before the City Council shall proceed under the Act to lay out, open, straighten, or widen any street or highway, they shall examine into the matter and determine, by a vote of a majority of all the members elected to said Council, that the benefits to arise from the proposed improvement, in whole or in part, will exceed the damages and expenses to be caused thereby, and that the convenience of the public will thereby be promoted. The second and third sections of the Act specify certain proceedings preliminary to the election by the City Council of three Commissioners. The fourth section provides for the election by the City Council of three Commissioners, of specified qualifications, "to assess the damages and benefits to be caused" by the contemplated improvement; requires said Commissioners to give public notice of the time and place when and where they will proceed to examine the property to be effected by such improvement, and then, at such time and place, the section defines the duties of the Commissioners, as follows: "They shall proceed to examine the land and improvements to be affected by the proposed improvement, and shall first ascertain the amount of damages to be sustained, the names of the owners of the property to be damaged, and the amount to be paid to each of such owners therefor. They shall then assess upon the property to be benefited by such improvement a sum sufficient to pay the whole amount of such damages, and the fees and expenses of the said Commissioners, and shall apportion the same among the owners of the several parcels of property to be thus benefited, in proportion to the amount of benefits to accrue to each." The section then provides that the Commissioners shall take all pertinent testimony that may be offered, and call such witnesses as they may deem necessary, and require them to make report to the City Council of the "assessments and awards so made by them, with the names and amounts of the persons damaged or benefited, as aforesaid."

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

It is apparent that the Legislature, by this Act, did not intend to authorize the City Council to proceed to open, extend, straighten, or widen any street, except in cases where the Council were satisfied that the benefits to lands affected thereby, and to be assessed therefor, would exceed the damages to private property necessarily occasioned, and the expenses of the proceedings and work; and that the Legislature did intend that the aggregate damages to private property, including the value of land taken for the street and the expenses of the Commissioners, should be paid for in money, by assessment upon the several parcels of land benefited by the proposed improvement, in proportion to the benefits to accrue to each; and this is entirely defeated by the action of the Commissioners, as evidenced by their report. Whereas, had they performed their duties strictly as defined in the fourth section, they would have ascertained and reported the damages to the owner of each specific parcel of land affected by the proposed work, which should include the value of lands taken for the street. Without reference to benefits resulting to adjoining lands of the owner, and to the aggregate of damages thus ascertained, they should have added the expenses of the Commissioners, and then ascertained and reported the benefits resulting to each specific parcel of land affected by the improvement and not taken for the street, upon which they would have assessed, in the aggregate, the aggregate of damages and expenses, as first ascertained specifically upon each parcel benefited, in proportion to the amount of benefits to accrue to each; and, necessarily, if the aggregate of benefits exceeded the aggregate of damages and expenses thus ascertained, the assessment to each specific parcel benefited could not exceed or equal such benefit, but must be a per cent thereon, less than one hundred. The owner of land taken for the street would then receive, in money, the value of the land taken for public use; and if he owned adjoining or other lands benefited by the improvement, he would be required to pay, by an assessment upon such benefits, his proportionate share of the aggregate damages and expenses of such improvement, without reference to any compensation due him for lands taken; and the owner of other lands benefited, no portion of whose lands had been taken for the street, would be assessed upon his benefits in precisely the same ratio of benefits, to meet the aggregate damages and costs.

By this method the costs of the improvement would be apportioned to the parties benefited, upon terms of proximate equality, and each party whose lands were taken for the street would receive compensation therefor.

If this view of the statute be correct, the action of the Commissioners, evidenced by their report, is not sustained by the law governing such action, but is in conflict therewith, and should have been set aside.

The judgment of the County Court must, therefore, be reversed, and cause remanded.

So ordered.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment for an undivided half of a tract of land in the City and County of San Francisco, bounded by Grove, Webster, and Haight streets, and a line seventy-one and a half feet east of Fillmore street, excepting therefrom block two hundred and ninety-nine. The case was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. A motion for new trial having been denied, defendants appealed from the judgment and order. The dates and facts bearing upon the points decided are stated in the opinion.

Sharp & Lloyd, for Appellants.

There was error in the admission of Sherman's testimony as to Mrs. Bornheimer's declarations about what she wanted money for. Such declarations were no part of the res gestæ, they were mere hearsay. (1 Phil. on Ev. 152, Cowen &

Argument for Respondent.

Hill's notes.) The fact in controversy was, whether Bornheimer had paid certain money to Baldwin. On this question there was a direct conflict between Mrs. Bornheimer and Mr. Baldwin, and this evidence was therefore important, not only for its direct effect in the case, but for its effect upon the jury, in considering Baldwin's credibility.

The plaintiff pretended that there was a contract between him and defendant Baldwin to jump the land for joint benefit, and wrongfully take it from another person. Defendant Baldwin denied any such contract; but the Court below instructed the jury that if they found such a contract, and an entry thereunder and an ouster, they should find for plaintiff. Such a contract, if one had been made, would be void, as illegal and against public policy. When parties to such a contract come into Court to ask its enforcement it will refuse its aid. (Russell v. Wheeler, 17 Mass. 287; Shiffner v. Gordon, 12 East, 304; Belden v. Pilken, 2 Caines, 149; Doolin v. Ward, 8 Johns. 194; Add. on Cont. 149; Valentine v. Stewart, 15 Cal. 185; Swain v. Cherpening, 20 Cal. 185.)

E. A. Lawrence, for Respondent.

The appeal from the judgment was not taken until nearly a year and seven months after the rendition of the judgment; and it should, therefore, be dismissed, the proper exceptions having been filed.

There were two notices of appeal from the order refusing a new trial. Both notices are from the same order, and the first one is the only one that can be noticed. The plaintiff had accepted that one by refusing to require the sureties to justify; and no notice was given to him that such appeal would be abandoned, or reason stated why the second one was taken.

The proceeding on appeal is an independent proceeding, like a motion for a new trial, and when once put in motion must be prosecuted or abandoned. It cannot be disregarded, when it suits the convenience of counsel to do so. (Leroy v. Rasette, 32 Cal. 171; Prac. Act, Sec. 337; Hastings v. Halleck, 10 Cal. 31.

The question put by the Court to the witness Sherman was rendered necessary, in the mind of the Court, on account of the previous testimony, which was not objected to, and defendant did not move to strike out. The court has a right, when testimony is left in doubt by the examination of either counsel, of its own motion, to put such questions to the witness as will remove the doubt, so that the jury will not be misled or imposed upon, by considering that as testified to which was not testified to by the witness. And such questions are not the subject of exception on either side, unless there has been a gross abuse of discretion, to the prejudice of the party excepting. The question was really put for the benefit of the excepting party, and the answer was really for his advantage, and not to his prejudice.

The objection to the exclusion of Mrs. Bornheimer's testimony in the Police Court is not available, because the offer was not specific. It does not appear what she said, but simply that she had said something inconsistent with her testimony here. Whether that something was material, or was said to the defendant, or when it was said, or where it was said, or how it had any relevancy to this case, is not disclosed by the record. (Roberts v. Unger, 30 Cal. 676.)

Sharp & Lloyd, for Appellant, in reply.

The motions to dismiss the appeals are disposed of by the decisions in Hanscom v. Tower, 17 Cal. 518, and Walden v. Murdock, 23 Cal. 541; and the cases of Marziou v. Roach, 8 Cal. 522; Carpentier v. Williamson, 25 Cal. 167; and Wagenheim v. Cook, 35 Cal. 216.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

A judgment for the plaintiff was rendered in the Court below on the 7th day of May, 1868; and on the 30th day of November, 1869, an order was entered denying the motion of the defendant for a new trial. On the 2d day of December, 1869, the defendant filed and served a notice of appeal from the judgment and order; and on the fourth day of the same month he filed an undertaking as upon appeal from the judgment only, but did not, within the prescribed time, file an undertaking upon appeal from the order. On the 20th day of December, 1869, the defendant filed and served another notice of appeal, in all respects, except its date, the same as the first one; and on the same day filed an undertaking upon appeal, in due form of law, from both judgment and order.

The respondent moves to dismiss the appeal from the judgment, because it was not taken within one year after its rendition. It is insisted, for the appellant, that the motion must be denied, because of the appeal pending from the order. The cases of Hanscom v. Tower, 17 Cal. 518, and Walden v. Murdock, 23 Cal. 540, are cited in support of this position. They have, however, no applicability to the question in hand. There was no motion made in either of them to dismiss an appeal from the final judgment; indeed, in Hanscom v. Tower, no appeal from the judgment had been attempted. The point of practice decided in each of them was, that through the instrumentality of an appeal from the order denying a new trial, this Court would review the error appearing on the judgment roll.

The statute regulating appeals from final judgments as such, requires them to be brought, if at all, within one year. This limitation is peremptory. Neither the pendency of an appeal from an order denying a new trial, nor any other circumstance, can operate to prolong it; and the motion of the respondent in that respect must, therefore, prevail.

The respondent also objects to the review by this Court of the order denying the new trial, because of the failure to perfect the first appeal taken from the order. There is nothing in this objection. The second appeal was taken and perfected within the time required by the statute, and it has not provided that a failure to perfect the first appeal should be held to defeat a second otherwise well brought. In this respect lies a distinction overlooked by counsel in argument, the distinction between a failure to perfect an appeal taken, as here, and a failure to file a statement or affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial after notice of intention given, as in Leroy v. Rasette, 32 Cal. 171; for there the statute provides, in terms, that "if no affidavit or statement be filed within five days after the notice * * * the right to move for a new trial shall be deemed waived."

The principal issue determined on the trial, which was had before a jury, arose upon an allegation of the plaintiff that he was a tenant in common with the defendant Baldwin of certain lands in the possession of the latter. This alleged tenancy in common was denied by the defendant. The general features of the case, as presented by the plaintiff, were that he and the defendant Baldwin made an agreement to enter upon and hold these lands as tenants in common, and for their equal benefit—each to contribute his share towards the expenses of the common occupation; that the agreement was carried into execution, and the premises taken into possession; that he contributed towards the expenses thereof—having advanced the defendant, at one time and another, several hundred dollars in all for that purpose—the general business, including the furnishing of the money, being mostly, if not altogether, transacted upon his part by his wife, who testified as witness on the trial to several interviews between herself and Baldwin—some before but most of them after occupation began—in all of which the latter, as she stated, admitted the tenancy in common, etc. It of course becomes of great importance, in view of the general circumstances of the case, to establish that these advances in money had in truth been made to the defendant Baldwin, by or on behalf of the plaintiff, in pursuance of the alleged agreement, and as his share of the expenses of holding the possession of the premises. In the course of her cross-examination, Mrs. Bornheimer had stated that a portion of the money she had so advanced to Baldwin she had borrowed from Sherman, a son-in-law of hers, in several sums, at different times, amounting to some one hundred and sixty-five dollars. Sherman, subsequently testifying for the plaintiff, was asked the following question by the Court: "State whether or no, at any time while Mrs. Bornheimer was occupying block two hundred and ninety-nine, she borrowed any money from you, at the same time making a statement as to what use she intended it for?" To this question the defendants' counsel made objection, as being incompetent, and because the evidence it sought to elicit would be hearsay.

The objection was overruled, and the witness answered, in substance, that she had told him that she was borrowing money to pay Baldwin, when she applied to witness for it.

The question, the answer, and the ruling of the Court upon this point appear clearly enough in the record, and there can be little doubt that the Court erred in overruling the objection of the defendants. Sherman's testimony as to what his mother-in-law said to him is, in its nature, hearsay, and is, therefore, inadmissible, unless falling within some one of the exceptions to the general rule on that subject. That Mrs. Bornheimer lived at the time on block two hundred and ninety-nine, as assumed by the Court in the question put, is of no significance, for that block is no part of the property in controversy; but if it had been in controversy, the question would have nevertheless been inadmissible. That the declaration made by her to him, and of which he was permitted to testify, was made in connection with the borrowing of money by her from him, is of no more significance upon the point. Her declarations so made were not part of the res gestæ — they did not tend to elucidate or explain any fact or thing done, or assumed to have been done, in the case.

The res here — the thing done or claimed to have been done — was the furnishing of the money to Baldwin, and its receipt by him from Bornheimer; where Mrs. Bornheimer obtained it, or how, and consequently what she said when she got it, was, under the circumstances of the case, of no consequence whatever, and should have been excluded.

The offer by the defendants to prove what Mrs. Bornheimer testified to in the Police Court was properly excluded — at least, there is no such statement of the facts desired to be proven as would enable this Court to see that they were, in themselves, admissible, or that the defendant was injured by the exclusion of the testimony offered.

If the case of the plaintiff be otherwise established, the defendant cannot defeat it by the application of the maxim, Ex dolo malo non oritur actio, nor set up in his defense that both he and the plaintiff entered upon the premises wrongfully in the first instance. Upon well-settled principles he cannot be permitted, if entering and remaining in possession as a tenant in common, to assail the common title or call its validity in question.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed; the order denying a new trial is reversed and cause remanded.

Mr. Chief Justice RHODES did not participate in the foregoing decision.

[No. 2,986.]

APPEAL OF S. O. HOUGHTON.

RULES FOR CONSTRUING STATUTES AS TO APPEALS.—If a statute is capable of being so construed as to maintain the right of appeal without violating the well-established rules for construing statutes, it will be so construed.

RULE AS TO MEANING OF WORDS.—In construing statutes, words are to be taken in their usual and popular sense, unless they have a well understood technical meaning; and, if practicable, effect shall be given to all the words and provisions of the statute.

CONSTRUCTION OF ACTS OF 1868 AND 1870 RELATIVE TO STREETS IN SAN FRANCISCO.—The Acts of 1868 and 1870, to modify the grades of streets in San Francisco, in declaring that the judgment of the County Court on the second report of the Commissioners shall be "final and conclusive," means that there shall be no appeal from the judgment, and that it shall not be reviewed by the County Court, except by motion for a new trial.

SAME—CONSTITUTION CONSTRUED—NATURE OF PROCEEDING.—The proceeding under the Acts of 1868 and 1870, modifying grades of streets in San Francisco, is a special one, and not a case at law involving the legality of an assessment, in the sense of Article VI, section four, of the Constitution. If it were a case at law, it would not be competent for the Legislature to confer jurisdiction of it upon the County Court, because the Constitution, in express terms, confers upon the District Court original jurisdiction in that class of cases; and such jurisdiction is exclusive, unless there be something in the instrument evincing a contrary intent.

REMEDY FOR DAMAGES.—The only remedy for property owners who have suffered damage under the Acts of 1868 and 1870, relative to modifying grades of streets in San Francisco, is by application to the Legislature for relief.

By WALLACE, J.:

APPEAL, THE CREATURE OF STATUTORY ENACTMENT.—Independently of rules adopted by the Supreme Court, an appeal as a mere procedure is defined by statute. It is essentially the creature of the statute, and may be accorded or withheld, restrained, enlarged, or wholly abrogated, by legislative enactment.

BENEFIT OF APPEAL NOT SECURED BY THE CONSTITUTION—SUPREME COURT RULES.—The Constitution has not undertaken to define or secure the benefit of an appeal to any person against the legislative control. It has left that subject wholly to the Legislature, or, in default of legislative enactment, to the Supreme Court, through rules adopted for that purpose.

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT OVER APPEALS.—The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court exists, and is capable of effective assertion, independs on legislative aid, as to the procedure through which an appeal is to be exerted.

APPEAL MUST BE AUTHORIZED BY STATUTE OR RULE.—No appeal in cases of a particular class or character can be entertained by the Supreme Court, unless authorized by a statute, or a rule of Court, even though such cases be in themselves within the appellate jurisdiction of the Court, as defined by the Constitution.

GENERAL JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT.—Except cases arising in the Probate Court, and criminal cases amounting to felony, no case is, by the terms of the Constitution, subject to review by the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its appellate power, unless it be a case in equity, or a case at law of a defined character.

SPECIAL CASES NOT CASES AT LAW.—Special cases are special proceedings characteristically differing from ordinary suits at the common law. They do not proceed according to the course of the common law, but give new rights and afford new remedies. Such cases are not cases at law within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, as defined by the Constitution, even though they involve questions of value.

QUERY AS TO LEGISLATIVE POWER IN REFERENCE TO THE JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT.—Whether it would be competent for the Legislature to add to the class of cases over which the Constitution has declared that the appellate power of the Supreme Court is to be exercised, another and distinct class not enumerated as such in the Constitution?

By TEMPLE, J.:

JUDGMENT CONCLUSIVE AS TO ASSESSMENT.—The proceeding under the Acts of 1868 and 1870 was a proceeding in the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation, and the action of the Court was final and conclusive as an assessment.

NOT A CASE AT LAW.—Such proceeding is not a case at law of which the Constitution has vested the Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction, in terms.

CASES DISAPPROVED.—Knowles v. Yeaton, 31 Cal. 82; Conant v. Conant, 5 Cal. 252.

By RHODES, C. J.:

SPECIAL CASES NOT INCLUDED IN CASES AS USED IN CONSTITUTION.—Special cases are not included within the meaning of the word "cases," as it is used in that portion of the Constitution which defines the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT DERIVED FROM CONSTITUTION.—The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived from the Constitution alone, and the Legislature can neither enlarge nor restrict it. When a special case is devised, the question whether the Supreme Court has jurisdiction in the matter must be determined by an interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution, and not by reference to the statute.

Statement of Facts.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF SPECIAL CASES.—The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction of special cases such as that under the Acts of 1868 and 1870, relative to modifying grades of streets in San Francisco, notwithstanding the Legislature may have intended to cut off such appeal.

By SPRAGUE, J.:

CASE INVOLVING THE LEGALITY OF ASSESSMENT.—The proceeding under the Acts of 1868 and 1870 presents a case involving the legality of an assessment, and under the Constitution, and section three hundred and fifty-nine of the Practice Act, and appeal lies from the judgment of the County Court.

CONSTRUCTION OF WORDS "FINAL AND CONCLUSIVE," IN STATUTE.—The words "final and conclusive," in the Act of 1870, apply to the County Court only, and do not prohibit an appeal to the Supreme Court.

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

This was a proceeding under the provisions of an Act of the Legislature, entitled "An act to authorize the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco to modify the grades of certain streets," approved March 30th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 594), and an Act amendatory thereof, approved February 1st, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 41). After the grading had been done, the Commissioners appointed by the Board of Supervisors heard the evidence of the parties interested, and submitted their report to the County Court, fixing the amount of benefits and damages resulting to property by reason of the change of grade. Under the Acts mentioned, the expenses of the work and all damages in consequence of it were to be paid out of the fund created by the assessed benefits. Upon application of parties complaining of the report, it was set aside, and the whole matter was by the County Court recommitted to the Commissioners, with certain instructions. They proceeded to make another investigation, and presented a second report. Objections to this report were filed by a large number of persons, including the appellant, Houghton, whose property had been reported benefited in the sum of nine thousand six hundred dollars, and no damages allowed him. The Court overruled the objections and confirmed the report. This appeal is taken from the order refusing to set aside the second report, and from the judgment confirming it.

The other facts are stated in the several opinions of the Justices.

The respondent moved to dismiss the appeal.

McAllister & Bergin, for Appellant.

It is a cardinal rule in the construction of statutes, that every intendment is to be made against the taking away of the right of appeal or review. (Lawton v. Commissioners, 2 Cain's Rep. 179; Rex v. Commissioners, 2 Keble, 43; Rex v. Morley, 2 Burr, 1042.) In the case last cited the language of the Act of Parliament in question was:

"That no other Court whatsoever shall intermeddle with any cause or causes of appeal; but they shall be finally determined in the Quarter Sessions only." Yet the Court of King's Bench ruled that "the jurisdiction of this Court is not taken away unless there be express words to take it away — this is a point settled."

In Richards v. Hodges, 1 Mod. 45, Chief Justice KELLYNGE ruled that "you cannot oust the jurisdiction of this Court without particular words in Acts of Parliament."

In view of this settled rule we might stop here; for it cannot be pretended that the statute in terms takes away the right of appeal. If we correctly understand the position advanced in support of the motion, it is this: that the words, "such judgment of said County Court as to the premises shall be final and conclusive," do away with the right of appeal. But the answer is, that this language refers altogether to the County Court, and not to this Court. The Legislature had provided, in the preceding part of the statute, that upon filing of the report of the Commissioners notice should be given, and all parties interested allowed twenty days within which to object to confirmation of the report, and the County Court was empowered to hear and determine the objections, with power to recommit the matter to the Commissioners. The right of objection was reserved as to the second or amended report that the Commissioners might make; but here the Legislature determined that the right of reëxamination should end in the County Court, and accordingly the language of the statute is, not that there shall not be any right of appeal from the action of the County Court, but that "such judgment of said County Court as to the premises shall be final and conclusive." The right of appeal or review in this Court is not once alluded to in the entire Act. Had there been any reference to this Court, or to the right of review in a superior Court, contained in the Act, there might be some force in the argument; but, in absence of all such allusion or reference, a construction that would under such language take away the right of appeal is alike strained and unnatural. The judgment in the County Court, rendered upon the second or amended report, is made final and conclusive in that Court; the County Court cannot change or alter it; but there is not a word in the statute, that in terms or by fair implication, does away with the right of review in this Court. Indeed, the next succeeding sentence of this very section unmistakably shows that such was not the intention of the Legislature. The language is:

"And upon the final judgment of said County Court as to the premises, all assessments made and set forth in said report shall, from and after such final judgment, be a lien upon the respective parcels of land. * * * " The Court will observe the entire absence from this most important sentence of all words of reference to show that the final judgment of the County Court mentioned in the preceding sentence was the one that was to become a lien upon the lands. The language of the Legislature is not "and upon such final judgment," or "and upon said final judgment of said County Court as to the premises, all assessments made and set forth in said report shall, from and after such final judgment, be a lien upon the respective parcels of land." The absence of any such connecting word or phrase is the more significant when we see that immediately succeeding in the same sentence, where it is intended to make the same identical judgment a lien on the lands in the district, such connecting word is carefully inserted, "from and after such final judgment," the amount of the assessments shall be a lien upon the land charged therewith in the district. Had it been the intention to make the judgment of the County Court, mentioned in the preceding sentence of the section, the one that was to operate as a lien on the lands within the district, the inference is irresistible that the apt expression for that purpose would have been used.

It is scarcely necessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition that the intention of the Legislature must be gathered from the language employed in the statute, and that in endeavoring to ascertain the intention of the law makers effect must be accorded to every word used in the statute. (Bourland v. Hildreth, 26 Cal. 230.)

We submit, then, that there is nothing in the statute doing away with the right of appeal.

Section three hundred and fifty-nine of the Practice Act provides that an appeal may be taken from the County Court to this Court, "in an action wherein the legality of any tax, imposts, assessment, toll, or municipal fine is in question; and in any special case within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, over which the Legislature may require the County Court to exercise jurisdiction."

It would seem scarcely necessary to make an argument in support of the right of appeal in the presence of such language as this. Is it in regard to the amount involved? Judgment for nine thousand six hundred dollars has been rendered against Houghton, and in this regard there can be no doubt of the right of appeal.

Is it in respect to the legality of a tax or assessment? The statutes under which the whole proceedings were had conclusively show that they were taken under one or the other. It is unquestionably in exercise of the power to assess that the judgments were entered against the lands of the respective parties. Argument cannot make this clearer. Is not the legality of these assessments here directly involved? Is not their legality affirmed on the one hand and denied on the other? Most unquestionably. Could their legality be any more directly involved? Were an action instituted for the direct purpose of impeaching their legality, would the question be any more directly involved? Assuredly not. The very substratum of our appeal, the entire gravamen of our complaint, is, that these assessments are illegal. We challenge now, as we have done always, the legality of these assessments. Clearly the case comes directly within the language of the statute. (As to what is an assessment, see Taylor v. Palmer, 81 Cal. 253; Baudry v. Valdez, 32 Cal. 279; Hendricks v. Crowley, 31 Cal. 471.)

In any action that may hereafter be brought upon the judgment rendered upon this assessment, the only defense that can possibly be made will be, not the legality of the assessment itself, but the jurisdiction of the Court that rendered the judgment, or that of payment. It follows, therefore, that the legality of the assessment is necessarily and directly involved in the present proceedings. (Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 164; Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 228; Barnum v. Reynolds, 38 Cal. 646; Sullivan v. Triumfo M. Co., 39 Cal. 465; Bernal v. Lynch, 36 Cal. 143; People v. Doe G., 36 Cal. 222.) But take a more comprehensive view of the nature of these proceedings, and the provisions of the

Argument for Appellant.

Constitution upon the subject. These proceedings, in effect, amount to an order upon all the property owners within the designated section of the city to show cause, if any they can, in the County Court, why an assessment of thousands of dollars should not be imposed upon them. They appear. They challenge the legality of the action of the Court, and the validity of the attempted assessment. They are overruled, and appeal to this Court. Is not this precisely the thing, the right to review the legality of which in this Court it was the manifest intention of the Constitution to insure to them? What is the meaning of the phrase "in all cases," as it occurs in section four of Article VI of the State Constitution? The Constitution of the United States contains, substantially, the same expression: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity." (Const. Art. III, Sec. 2.) In Osborn v. U. S. Bank, 9 Wheat. 819, the Court, in speaking upon this point, says: "This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, when any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting on it. That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law. It then becomes a case; and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States." (2 Story Const. Secs. 1646-1858.) In Weston v. City Council of Charleston, 2 Pat. 449, the Court held an application for a writ of prohibition to be a case; and in Ex Parte Mulligan, 4 Wall. 113, the Court held an application for a writ of habeas corpus to be a case. A case is a legal controversy prosecuted according to the forms of law. Thus insolvency proceedings are deemed cases. (People v. Shephard, 28 Cal. 117.) So with contested elections. (Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 82; see, also, Lake Merced Water

Argument for Appellant.

Co. v. Cowles, 31 Cal. 215; Day v. Jones, 31 Cal. 263; Winter v. Fitzpatrick, 35 Cal. 273; Morley v. Elkins, 37 Cal. 456; Will v. Sinkwitz, 39 Cal. 573; Briggs v. McCullough, 36 Cal. 549; The Beale Street Case, 39 Cal. 498.) So, likewise, in cases of condemnation. (Sacramento, Placer, and Nevada R. R. v. Harlan, 24 Cal. 289; San Francisco and San Jose R. R. v. Mahoney, 29 Cal. 115; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229; s. c. 19 ib. 47; Contra Costa R. R. Co. v. Moss, 23 Cal. 325.)

We here beg to call the attention of the Court to the fact that neither the general railroad law, nor the Act authorizing condemnation of Lime Point, gave any express right of appeal, nor was such right expressly conferred in the Act authorizing water companies to condemn private land, yet in all of those cases this Court has affirmed the right of appeal. (Stats. 1859, p. 26; Stats. 1861, pp. 619-622; Stats. 1858, p. 219; Stats. 1853, p. 172; Heyneman v. Blake, 19 Cal. 580; Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 23 Cal. 434.)

But to proceed with the argument. The case at bar is, therefore, a case—it is a legal controversy, prosecuted according to the forms of law. Is it a case at law? Most unquestionably; all cases are such that do not fall within the domain of equity or admiralty. Does it not involve the requisite amount to come within the jurisdiction of this Court in that particular? Judgment for nine thousand six hundred dollars has been rendered against the lands of Houghton. But were it otherwise, this is a case in which the jurisdiction of this Court does not depend upon the question of amount—it is a case involving the legality of a tax, an assessment. (People v. Mier, 24 Cal. 61, 66, 71, 72; Bell v. Crippen, 28 Cal. 328; Mahlsted v. Blanc, 34 Cal. 579.)

This case, therefore, comes within the letter of the Constitution, and that instrument emphatically declares that this Court shall have appellate jurisdiction. This jurisdiction it is not in the power of the Legislature to take away — legislation may prescribe the mode of its exercise, but cannot take it away. (Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 300.) Nor does the fact that the proceedings are somewhat special in their character affect the jurisdiction of the Court. If the constitutional elements essential to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court exist, it is not material whether the proceedings be special or otherwise. If the sum involved be of the requisite amount, if the proceeding partake of the character of a suit in equity, or if it involve the legality of a tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, it matters not what the nature or character of the proceedings in other respects may be, this Court, in the language of the Constitution, "shall have appellate jurisdiction." The purpose of that instrument was, in all cases in which questions of the grave and important character usually arising where the amount is large, the suit is of an equitable nature, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine is involved, to reserve to the parties the right of appeal to this Court, regardless of the mere form in which the case might be presented. (Knowles v. Yeates, 31 Cal. 82.)

"The primary meaning of the word 'case,' according to lexicographers, is, 'cause.' When applied to legal proceedings it imports a state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court of justice. In this, its generic sense, the word includes all cases, special or otherwise." (Kundolff v. Thalheimer, 2 Kern. 596; Benson v. Cromwell, 26 Barb. 221; Ricks v. Reed, 19 Cal. 572-574; McNeil v. Borland, 23 Cal. 148; Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 58.) The qualifying expression, "at law," is used in contradistinction to equity, and should not be so construed as to limit the jurisdiction of this Court to actions purely inter partes. Such a construction would be inadmissible, because, opposed to the received practical construction, would do violence to the letter and spirit of the text of the Constitution, and strip this Court of all its usefulness. (People v. Mier, 24 Cal. 66.)

In regard to the material cases cited in support of the motion, we beg to make but a few remarks. As to the New York cases: The Constitution, of 1846, of New York is entirely unlike ours in its distribution of judicial power. The first section of the sixth article of that Constitution creates a court for the trial of impeachments; the second provides for the creation of the Court of Appeals, but does not define its jurisdiction; the third, that there shall be a Supreme Court, having general jurisdiction in law and equity; the fourth, for the creation of Supreme Court districts; the fifth, that the Legislature shall have the same power to alter and regulate jurisdiction and proceedings in law and equity, as they have heretofore possessed; the fourteenth, among other things, that the Legislature may confer equity jurisdiction upon the County Judge; and the twenty-first section declares that the Legislature may authorize the judgments, decrees, and decisions of any local inferior Court of record of original jurisdiction, established in a city, to be removed for review directly into the Court of Appeals. (American Constitutions, 144, 145—Constitution of New York.) These are its material provisions upon the subject of the jurisdiction of the judiciary, and the Court will at once see that the entire matter is left in the power of the Legislature to define and regulate. Unlike our Constitution, that of New York made no specific enumeration of the jurisdiction of its Courts, and, of course, the right of appeal there depended not upon the Constitution, but upon the statute expressly conferring it. Such was the Constitution of New York in force at the time the cases cited were decided.

Bearing this in mind, let us consider those cases.

In McAllister v. The Albion Plank Road Company, 6 Seld. 354, the statute authorized the original application to be made to the County Court, and allowed an appeal from its judgment to the Supreme Court, and declared that the judgment of the Court upon the appeal "shall be final and conclusive in the matter." Upon this case we remark that there was no constitutional right of appeal, and the statute expressly providing for our appeal, and declaring the judgment rendered upon that appeal "final and conclusive of the matter," clearly showed the intention of the Legislature not to allow of any further appeal. In our Act of the Legislature the word appeal does not once occur, and there is nothing from which to infer an intention on the part of the Legislature to take it away if it existed.

In the New York Central R. R. Co. v. Marvin, 1 Kern. 278, the statute authorized an appeal from the appraisal of the Commissioners to the special or general term of the Supreme Court, and empowered the Court, in its discretion, to recommit the matter to the Commissioners, but the second report of the Commissioners was declared "final and conclusive." The Court was not allowed to alter or interfere with the second report—the statute made it final and conclusive. Under the laws of New York an appeal would lie from the judgment of the general term, but not from the special term of the Supreme Court, to the Court of Appeals; and as the party might, at his election, appeal from the first appraisal to the special or general term of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeals held that it was evidence of the intention not to allow an appeal to that Court at all, inasmuch as none was expressly provided for—that should it uphold the right of appeal from the general term, it would still be in the power of the party by appealing to the special term, from which no further appeal would lie in any case to cut off the right of appeal to the Court of Appeals, and therefore the right of such appeal at all was inadmissible. How widely different from the statute in the case at bar, where no provision is in terms made for an appeal, and where there is nothing from which to show any intent to take the right away.

The Court of Appeals further dwell upon the fact that the statute indicated an entire system for ascertaining the value of the lands taken. In the statute here in question there is no such system. In Mahoney v. The San Francisco and San Jose R. R. Co., 29 Cal. 115, this last argument was urged upon the Court against the right of review, and this very case, and others cited in support of it, but the Court overruled it, and maintained the right of review. The same observations apply to the other New York cases cited. The same remarks apply to the Constitution of the United States that have been made in regard to that of New York. Appellate jurisdiction is conferred upon the Supreme Court of the United States, "both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." (Const. U. S., Art. III, Sec. 2, Subd. 2.)

The Act of Congress involved in the U. S. v. Nourse, 6 Pet. 493, allowed no appeal, nor had the Supreme Court any appellate jurisdiction in absence of such express allowance. Hence the case is not in point. (U. S. v. Circuit Judges, 3 Wall. 676, 677, 678.)

In conclusion, we insist that the law does not favor repeal by implication. By implication alone are we sought to be deprived of the right of appeal. By implication alone is the jurisdiction of this Court sought to be abridged. This is inadmissible; yet were the implication as strong as the rule requires, we submit that under the Constitution we cannot be divested of our right of appeal, nor can the appellate jurisdiction of this Court be abridged. (Crosley v. Patch, 18 Cal. 442.)

Argument for Respondent.

James H. Hardy, Jos. M. Nougues, and R. D. Sawyer, for Respondent.

The judgment of the County Court in the premises is final and conclusive, and no appeal is allowed therefrom by law. It is not questioned that this is a special case, or special proceeding; or that the County Court had jurisdiction of the entire matters contained in the Acts of the Legislature. The appeal is from the orders and the judgment of the Court, "made and entered in the said proceedings." Being a special case or proceeding (Stats. 1869-70, p. 42; Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 152; Hicks v. Reed, 19 Cal. 574, and cases there cited), it is a "special creation of the statute," and within the legitimate scope and power of the Legislature to vest the County Court with jurisdiction, absolute and final, and independent of review by the Supreme Court.

The language of the statute is, "such judgment of said County Court as to the premises shall be final and conclusive." The proper interpretation to be given to the words "final judgment" is, that it is such a judgment as at once puts an end to the proceeding.

In the case of McAllister et al., Commissioners v. The Albion Plank Road Company, 10 N. Y. (6 Seld. 353), the language used in the statute under which the proceedings originated and culminated was, "and such judgment shall be final and conclusive." The Court of Appeals, on motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the order of the Supreme Court was not appealable, say:

"We are of the opinion that it was the intention of the Legislature that the decision of the Supreme Court upon appeal from the County Court, under the plank road Acts, should be an end of the controversy, and that no appeal will lie to this Court therefrom. The Act of 1847 declares that such decision shall be final in the matter, and the Act of 1851 that it shall be final and conclusiva. It is not perceived how any effect can be given to these expressions unless it be to take away and prevent any further appeal or review. They certainly add nothing to the force or validity of the decision, which would be just as binding and operative, in all respects, without as with them, and it will hardly do, after they have been inserted in the original Act and repeated in the amendment, to treat them as redundant and meaning nothing."

In the case of New York Central Railroad Company v. Marvin, 11 N. Y. (1 Kern. 277), an appeal was taken from a judgment of the Supreme Court affirming the report of Commissioners. The Act of the Legislature in reference to the subject matter of the proceeding provided that the judgment of the Supreme Court should be "final and conclusive." The Court of Appeals granted the motion to dismiss, and stated that "the whole proceeding is a special creation of the statute, and seems designed to form a complete system of itself, entirely independent of the general provision of the statute authorizing appeals to this Court."

In the case at bar, "the proceeding is a special creation of statute;" there is no general law authorizing the proceeding, and it undoubtedly was "designed to form a complete system of itself;" and, there being no appeal provided for, no machinery by which it can be brought to the Supreme Court, "it is entirely independent of the general provision of the statute authorizing appeals." (In the Matter of Extending Canal and Widening Walker Streets, 12 N. Y., 2 Kern. 406; King et al. v. Mayor of New York, 36 N. Y., 9 Tif. 182; New York Central Railroad Company v. Marvin, 1 Kern. 276.)

If the general provisions of the Practice Act apply, why have not the parties appellant the right to move for a new trial in the County Court. Under what view of the law are they debarred from this right? And if they have failed to exercise it, how can they hope for remedy by appeal?

We submit that the proceeding in question is not governed by any of the requirements or provisions of the Practice Act, but that it is a special statutory proceeding; and, in the absence of express legislative enactment, the statute regulating appeals has no application. (The Bowery Extension Case, 2 Abb. Pr. 368, 370; opinion of PEABODY, J.) In the matter of contempts, the action of the Court cannot be reviewed. (Cohen v. Jones, 5 Cal. 494.) And if, in contested election cases, the statute did not specially authorize appeals, it would be questionable if this Court would consider them.

This is not a case at law involving the legality of a tax or assessment.

The Practice Act, section one, provides: "That there shall be in this State but one form of civil actions for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress or prevention of private wrongs." "Sec. 2. In such action the party complaining shall be known as the plaintiff, and the adverse party as the defendant." The word "case" means an action, or suit at law, or in equity. (Burrill's Law Dictionary, 185; Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 243; 1 Wheat. 352; 3 Story on Const. 507; 9 Wheat. 819; 9 Peters, 223.) Does it need argument or illustration to prove that this special proceeding is not an action, or suit at law, or in equity? We imagine not. Is it in the form recognized in the prosecution of suits at law or in equity? Who has filed the complaint? No one; because there has been no complaint filed. No summons or process was issued under the seal of the Court, or hand of the Clerk of the county. Who, may we be permitted to inquire, was the party plaintiff, or known as the party plaintiff? and what persons stood in the relation of parties defendant? There is not in the whole proceeding any of the essential prerequisites of an action at law or in equity. It is special proceeding. (Parsons v. Tuolumne Water Co., 5 Cal. 43; Hicks v. Reed, 19 Cal. 574; McNiel v. Borland, 23 Cal. 147.) Before the legality of a tax or assessment can be involved, there must be a case at law; or when equitable relief is asked, a case in equity. (Bell v. Crippen, 28 Cal. 327.) In what manner can be said the legality of a tax, etc., is involved in this proceeding at this time, and in reference particularly to the respective positions of parties appellant? No complaint is made as to the judgment rendered against the appellant's property. The illegality of an assessment, or tax, must be founded upon want of constitutional power to create, and nonfulfillment of the requirements of the provisions of the statute authorizing the levy; and in either contingency, the party seeking to evade payment must plead, and show to the Court in what the illegality of the tax consists.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The motion to dismiss the appeal in this case must be controlled in its decision by a solution of the following questions:

First — Does the special Act of February 1st, 1870 (Stats. 1869-70, p. 41), by necessary implication, or reasonable intendment, prohibit an appeal in this case?

Second — If not, does section three hundred and fifty-nine of the code authorize an appeal in this class of cases?

If the first question shall be answered in the affirmative, it may be necessary to consider the further question, whether the Constitution has conferred upon this Court appellate jurisdiction in cases of this character, in which event the Legislature would not have the power to take it away, or to prohibit us from exercising it.

In considering the first question it is our duty so to interpret the Act of February 1st, 1870, if practicable, as to uphold the right of appeal; for it is not lightly to be assumed that the Legislature intended to deny a right of appeal in a case involving so large an amount and affecting the interests of so many persons. If, therefore, the statute is capable of being so construed as to maintain the right of appeal without violating the well established rules for construing statutes, I should deem it to be my duty to give it that construction.

On the other hand, if the Legislature has clearly expressed its intention that there shall be no appeal in this case, the Courts have no right to defeat this manifest intention by torturing or disregarding the language of the statute. One of the rules for construing statutes is, that the words are to be taken in their usual and popular sense, unless they have a well understood technical meaning; and another rule is, that, if practicable, effect shall be given to all the words and provisions of the statute.

It is not to be presumed that the Legislature employed language which was intended to be meaningless, and to perform no useful office. Section thirteen of the Act under consideration, after providing for a publication of notice of the filing of the report of the Commissioners, provides that within twenty days after the publication of the notice, any person interested may file in the County Court objections to the report; and if no such objections are filed within that period, the report "shall be final and conclusive on all parties interested; and all assessments made and set forth in said report shall be a lien upon the respective parcels of land and property in said district upon which said assessments are charged by said report."

If the proceedings had stopped here, and no objections to the report had been filed within the twenty days, it is clear that all parties would have been concluded, and the report could not have been reviewed, either by the County Court or on appeal. The meaning of the words "final and conclusive," as here employed, is unmistakable. But this section further provides that if objections are filed within the twenty days, the County Court shall proceed to hear them, and may either set aside or modify the report, or may recommit it to the Commissioners with instructions, in which latter event a new, or amended report, shall be made; on the coming in of which "the same right of objection by any party interested shall exist, as to said second, or amended report, as hereinbefore provided as to said first report."

But the power of the County Court over the second report is limited to the rendering of "a judgment as to said report, or as to any of the matters therein contained, and such judgment of said County Court, as to the premises, shall be final and conclusive; and upon the final judgment of said County Court, as to the premises, all assessments made and set forth in said report shall, from and after said final judgment, be a lien upon the respective lands and property in the district upon which said assessments are charged by said report."

On the hearing of the objections to the second report the County Court could either confirm it or set it aside entirely, and perhaps might modify it, but had no power to recommit it with instructions for another report. This is perfectly obvious, from the fact that whilst the power to recommit the first report is expressly given, the statute is not only silent in this respect as to the second report, but limits the power of the Court to the rendering of "a judgment as to said report, or as to any of the matters therein contained." If the second report had been set aside by the judgment of the Court, the proceedings for the assessment must have been commenced de novo. Nor could there have been any appeal from the judgment. The objecting parties could not have appealed from a judgment in their favor relieving them entirely from the assessment, and the city and county has no interest in the question of the assessments. The judgment, in the language of the statute, would have been "final and conclusive." But the Court confirmed the second report, and the appellant, Houghton, one of the objectors, has appealed. It is urged on his behalf, that when the Act of February 1st, 1870, declares that the judgment of the County Court on the second report shall be "final and conclusive," it was not thereby intended that it should be absolutely final and conclusive for all purposes, so as to prohibit an appeal, but only that it should be the final action of the County Court in the matter; that it should conclude and terminate the proceedings before that tribunal so completely that it could take no further step in them, not even for the purpose of hearing and deciding an application for a new trial of the objections to the report. But I think it could not have been the intention of the Legislature to deny to the County Court the power to hear and decide a motion for a new trial. If the objectors had discovered, for the first time, after the trial, that the Commissioners had been bribed, and had made a fraudulent report, or new and material evidence, showing the report to be clearly erroneous, or if the objectors and their counsel had been prevented by inevitable accident from attending the trial and offering evidence in support of the objections, I cannot attribute to the Legislature the intention to prohibit them by statute from setting up these facts on a motion for a new trial. In my opinion, the provision as to the final and conclusive effect of the judgment has no reference whatever to a motion for a new trial, and I have no doubt whatever that it was competent for the County Court to hear and decide a motion of that character, and if the motion was granted to retry the cause. What, then, does the statute mean when it declares that the judgment of the County Court on the second report shall be "final and conclusive?" It is apparent that if these words had been wholly omitted the judgment would have been "final" in that Court. It would have ended the proceeding before that tribunal, which had no power to recommit the report with a view to further action in the matter. When it rendered a judgment on the second report its power was exhausted, except to grant a new trial, which the statute was not intended to prohibit. The judgment, therefore, was "final" in that Court, even though the Act had not so pronounced it. But the statute provides that it shall not only be final but "conclusive." On whom, and for what purposes? In that Court, being a final judgment, it was "conclusive," proprio vigore, on the Court and the parties, so long as it remained in force; and it would have been a work of supererogation for the Legislature to declare that a judgment should be final and conclusive in that Court, when it would have been equally so without the declaration. To give to these words so limited an effect would be to impute to the Legislature the folly of incorporating into the statute a meaningless phrase, without force or effect, and accomplishing nothing. This would be to disregard one of the most thoroughly established rules for construing statutes. It is our duty to give effect, if practicable, to every portion of the statute; and we cannot presume that, in declaring the final and conclusive effect of the judgment, the Legislature intended to announce only what would have been equally apparent without that clause. We must seek for some other and more effective meaning in the phrase "final and conclusive," and none other has been suggested or occurs to me than that the judgment shall be final and conclusive for all purposes whatsoever, and shall end the litigation. This, in effect, is to deny an appeal from the judgment, and to make it absolutely conclusive on the parties. It is not our province to discuss the wisdom and policy of such legislation. This belongs solely to the legislative department, whose enactments it is our duty to expound, in accordance with the expressed will of the Legislature. In support of this construction of the statute I refer to the following adjudged cases, which, though founded on statutes perhaps not strictly analogous to ours, nevertheless strongly support the views here expressed. (McAllister et al., Commissioners, v. Albion Plank Road Company, 10 N. Y., 6 Seld. 353; King et al. v. Mayor of New York, 36 N. Y., 9 Tif. 182; New York Central Railroad Company v. Marvin, 11 N. Y., 1 Kern. 277; Matter of extending Canal and Widening Walker Streets, 12 N. Y., 2 Kern. 406; Matter of Widening Wall Street, 17 Barb. 617.)

But it is claimed by the appellant that, if the statute be construed as prohibiting an appeal, it is, pro tanto, unconstitutional, inasmuch as the Constitution confers upon this Court appellate jurisdiction in this class of cases. The Constitution, Art. VI section four, confers upon this Court appellate jurisdiction "in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine." Section six confers upon the District Courts original jurisdiction in all these cases, in precisely the same language; and section eight confers upon the County Courts original jurisdiction, "of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for." The argument is that this is a "case at law," which involves the legality of an assessment, in the true sense of Article VI, section four, of the Constitution, and not a "special proceeding," in the proper sense of section eight. But it is too plain to admit of debate that this is not a "case at law," within the meaning of section four, and that it is a "special proceeding," within section eight, of which the County Court has original jurisdiction. From an early period in the history of the State down to the present time proceedings for the opening, grading, extension, paving, and alteration of streets, and the assessment of damages caused thereby, have been treated by the Legislature and the Courts as "special proceedings," and not as "cases at law." This Court, in numerous decisions, has acquiesced in and directly affirmed this view of these cases; and the doctrine has become too firmly established to be open to discussion at this late day. This, therefore, must be deemed a "special proceeding," of which the County Court could properly take jurisdiction, and not a "case at law," involving the legality of an assessment, of which the Constitution confers upon this Court appellate jurisdiction. But if it were otherwise, and if this were to be deemed a case at law, involving the legality of an assessment, I do not perceive how it would benefit the appellant in respect to the damages which he claims. For, if this be a case of that character, it was not competent for the Legislature to confer jurisdiction of it upon the County Court, inasmuch as the Constitution, in express terms, confers upon the District Courts original jurisdiction in that class of cases; and it is well settled that the jurisdiction in such cases is exclusive, unless there be something in the instrument evincing a contrary intent. If the appellant had succeeded in convincing us that this is a case at law, involving the legality of an assessment, we would have been constrained to hold that the Act conferring jurisdiction on the County Court was unconstitutional and void, and the whole machinery for enforcing the assessment would have fallen with the Act.

If the appellant and other property owners have suffered the grievous damage of which they complain, from reducing the grade of Second street, it has doubtless resulted from faulty legislation; but in the present condition of the case, their only resource would appear to be an appeal to the Legislature for the appropriate relief.

late jurisdiction of the Court, as defined by the Constitution. Should we even assume, therefore, that the case at bar is included within the expression of section three hundred and fifty-nine of the Practice Act; that it involves the "legality of an assessment;" or that it is "a special case within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court;" and so, in the one way or the other, the subject of an appeal to this Court, if respect were had only to section three hundred and fifty-nine itself; yet, as we hold, that that section of the Practice Act has become inoperative as to the judgment of the County Court now in question (because of the provisions of the Acts of 1868 and 1870 specially applicable to that judgment, and declaring it conclusive), it follows that the appeal taken can derive no support from section three hundred and fifty-nine; and there is no other statute brought to our attention, which is supposed or claimed to give an appeal in the case at bar.

If, then, it be true that an appeal in the case at bar must exist, if at all, by reason of section three hundred and fifty-nine, and if that section has, as to this case, been itself repealed, or rendered inoperative by the statutes of 1868 and 1870, it results that the appeal must fall with the statute, upon which alone it rested for support. Irrespective, however, of the question of procedure involved, I come now to inquire whether or not the case under consideration be, in itself, one which is subject to the appellate power of this Court, were an appeal or writ of error provided for that purpose. If we are to look to the Constitution alone as being the source of the appellate jurisdiction of the Court, we find that it extends that jurisdiction to all cases in equity; not to all cases at law, but to such of them only as involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of a tax, toll, impost, assessment, or municipal fine, or in which the value of the property in controversy exceeds a named sum of money, etc. (Const., Art. VI, Sec. 4.) It will be seen, upon examination of the Constitution, that the cases to which the appellate power extends are carefully defined, and that (with the exception of cases arising in the Probate Court, and criminal cases amounting to felony), no case is, by its terms, subject to review here in the exercise of our appellate power, unless it be a case in equity, or a case at law of a defined character.

Opinion of Wallace, J., specially concurring.

It is argued by the appellant that the case is a "case at law," one involving the legality of an assessment, and, therefore, within the jurisdiction of this Court to hear and determine. But even if it can be said to involve the legality of an assessment, I think it clear that it is not a case at law within the intent of the Constitution. It is said that it is a legal controversy, prosecuted according to the forms of law, and that, therefore, it is a case at law; but though it be such controversy, and so prosecuted, it does not follow that it is a case at law in the sense of not being a special case. A special case may be said to be a legal controversy, prosecuted according to the forms of law, and yet the Constitution itself has distinctly provided that the jurisdiction in special cases shall be in the County Court, unless otherwise provided for. A special case can no more be said to be a case at law, in a constitutional sense, merely because it is a legal controversy prosecuted according to the forms of law, than it could be said to be a case in equity, because its solution might involve a consideration of the principles of equity, or the judicial proceedings provided for its determination were similar in form to those usually observed in Courts of equity.

But the case at bar does not belong to either one of the two grand divisions of civil cases mentioned in the Constitution as subject to be reviewed here, in the exercise of appellate power, but does unmistakably belong to another and well defined class of cases which are accustomed to be principally designated and distinguished from the others by the fact that they are "not cases for which the Courts of general jurisdiction had always supplied a remedy." (Parson v. Tuol- umne County Water Company, 5 Cal. 43.). Special cases are special proceedings characteristically differing from ordinary suits at the common law (Jackson v. Day, 15 Cal. 91); special proceedings do not proceed according to the course of the common law; they give new rights and afford new remedies (Saunders v. Haynes, 18 Cal. 145), etc. This distinction between "cases at law" and "special cases" was already established and enforced by this Court when, in 1862, the Constitution was amended, and "cases at law" and "special cases" again provided for; "the County Courts shall have original jurisdiction * * * of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for" (Art. VI, Sec. 8), is the language of the constitutional amendment of 1862. I can attribute to this expression no other meaning than that which, as we have already seen, had been theretofore fixed to the term "special cases" in this Court before the amendment of 1862 was adopted; and it results that "special cases," that is, cases which grow out of special proceedings authorized by statute creating rights not theretofore existing, and providing remedies not accustomed to be administered by Courts of law or equity as such, are not cases at law within the appellate jurisdiction of this Court, as defined by the Constitution, even though they may involve questions or values which, if involved in a case at law, would constitute it one to be reviewed here on appeal or writ of error.

The case at bar not being a case in equity nor a case at law, within the constitutional designation, is not within the appellate jurisdiction of this Court as defined by the Constitution. Had the Acts of 1868 and 1870, out of which this controversy has arisen, provided that an appeal from the judgment in question might be taken to this Court, a question would then have arisen as to whether or not it is competent for the Legislature to add to the class of cases over which the Constitution has declared that our appellate power is to be exercised, another and distinct class not enumerated as such in the Constitution, but omitted, it may be, ex industria, therefrom. But as the case here does not present that question, I am not to be understood as expressing any opinion upon that point.

I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed.

TEMPLE, J., concurring specially.

I am inclined to agree with Mr. Justice CROCKETT in his construction of the statute under which the proceedings were had in this case. The proceeding is merely to levy an assessment to provide certain revenues for the Government. In such matters it is not usual to permit an appeal to the Courts while the proceedings are in fieri. The right to supervise the officers whose duty it is to make the assessment would, more naturally, perhaps have fallen to the Board of Supervisors, as in the case of other assessments. It is, however, a proceeding of the same nature as though it had been had in the Board of Supervisors. It is a proceeding in the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation. As I have said, these matters are usually conducted outside of the Courts, and the regularity of the acts of the officers is usually tested in collecting or resisting the collection of taxes. The mere fact that the County Court was allowed to act as a supervising Board, does not, therefore, in my opinion, raise the presumption that it was intended that there should be an appeal. It is final and conclusive as an assessment, and is the end of that proceeding. It then becomes an assessment and the lien immediately attaches to the land.

I agree with the Chief Justice that this is not a "case at law," and, therefore, it is not a case of which the Constitution has vested this Court with appellate jurisdiction in terms.

Opinion of Temple, J., specially concurring.

In Knowles v. Yeates, 31 Cal. 82, this Court held that the Constitution gives the Court appellate jurisdiction in special cases. They rely, to some extent, upon Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 252. I have never been satisfied with the reasoning in Knowles v. Yeates, and although the Court have often entertained jurisdiction in similar cases, where the question has not been raised, I do not understand that it has been expressly affirmed, except in Day v. Jones, 31 Cal. 261, decided at the same term.

The case of Conant v. Conant was an action of divorce, in which no rights of property were involved. It was contended that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction, because it did not fall within any of the classes mentioned in section four, Article VI, of the Constitution, as it then stood. It conferred upon the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction "in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds two hundred dollars," and where the legality of any tax, toll, etc., was in question. The Court say, in effect, that this was not intended to define, and, therefore, to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court, but merely to limit that jurisdiction in cases capable of pecuniary computation. No such construction can possibly be given to the language of the Constitution as amended. That section now reads as follows: "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars; also, in all cases arising in the Probate Courts; and also, in all criminal cases amounting to felony, on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself, or the Supreme Court, or before any District Court, or any County Court, in the State, or before any Judge of said Courts."

The qualifying clause cannot possibly apply to "cases in equity," nor to cases arising in Probate Courts. If the doctrine of Knowles v. Yeates be correct, these provisions in the Constitution are perfectly meaningless. Cases in equity were certainly not mentioned for the purpose of limiting the jurisdiction of this Court to such cases as involved an amount greater than three hundred dollars. The rules by which this section of the Constitution must be construed are familiar and obvious. In the absence of circumstances which indicate a different rule of construction, the enumeration of the cases to which the appellate jurisdiction of the Court extends excludes others. In Knowles v. Yeates the Court did not by "rational conjecture" or otherwise, in my opinion, supply the presumed intention of the framers of that instrument, but they have stricken out words which have an obvious meaning, and which, in an important matter, affect the character of the instrument.

The very able Judge who wrote the opinion in Knowles v. Yeates evidently felt that the case of Conant v. Conant was not altogether in point, for he has fortified his position by a lengthy and eloquent argument, but from the reasoning of which I differ toto celo. A provision of the Constitution, which I think clear beyond the possibility of doubt, is set aside, partly because it was thought that a free people, in forming a Government for their protection and to secure to themselves the blessings of liberty, must have intended to provide an appeal in cases of grave concern to the Court of highest authority. An appeal to this Court, of course, affords a great degree of protection to the citizen, but certainly the framers of the Constitution have shown that they did not consider such right essential to secure the liberties or property of citizens. There is no appeal in criminal cases not amounting to felony, and yet the citizen may be fined to the extent of thousands of dollars, and kept for years in jail under a conviction for a misdemeanor.

If it be admitted that the Constitution fails to express the full meaning of the people in adopting it, and we are left to "rational conjecture" to supply what has been omitted, it does not seem to me reasonable to suppose that it was intended that an appeal to this Court should be allowed in all special proceedings. In a matter like the present proceeding the whole history of the Government is opposed to the idea that an appeal is allowed. It is a mere executive proceeding to levy a tax. In such proceedings the exigencies of the Government do not permit the delays which would be inevitable if the case could drag its slow length through the Courts. It is a mere administrative proceeding, in which the action of the officers may be reviewed on certiorari, if they exceed their powers. This has been the universal practice in the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation. The powers of the officers must be strictly pursued, or the assessment cannot be collected, and the regularity of these proceedings may ordinarily be questioned collaterally. Now, as the practice of the Government has been that these matters should not be subject to judicial revision, while in fieri, there is a strong presumption that no appeal was intended to be allowed, nor is the presumption changed because, on this occasion, the County Court is made to perform the office of a Board of Equalization. If the action of the officers, whose duty it is to make the assessment to raise the taxes by which the Government is supported, could be revised by the Courts in the first instance, as to the correctness of the manner in which valuations were made, and many other things usually trusted entirely to their discretion, and the case be subject to the law's delay on appeal from the lowest to the highest Court, the Government would share the fate of many other suitors, and perish, while its case is kept in Court poised on nice points and legal subtleties.

RHODES, C. J., dissenting:

The question presented is, whether an appeal lies to this Court from the judgment of the County Court confirming the report of the Commissioners. The appellate jurisdiction of the Court extends to all "cases" in equity, also to all "cases" at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, etc. The former Constitution conferred upon the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction in all "cases" where the matter in dispute exceeded two hundred dollars, and when the legality of any tax, etc., was in question. By that Constitution (Art. VI, Sec. 9) original civil jurisdiction was granted to the County Court in such "special cases" as the Legislature might prescribe. The present Constitution (Art. VI, Sec. 8) grants to the County Court original jurisdiction of all such "special cases and proceedings" as are not otherwise provided for; but neither the former nor the present Constitution expressly grants to the Supreme Court jurisdiction of "special cases." Are "special cases" included within the meaning of "cases," as that term is employed in defining the jurisdiction of this Court? I am of the opinion that they are not. If they are, jurisdiction of no special case could be entertained by the County Courts, because as soon as a special case is created by statute, jurisdiction would at once vest in the District Courts, by force of the term "cases," which is employed in the section defining the jurisdiction of the District Courts. "Special cases" would thus be provided for by the Constitution, and none would be left for the County Courts. "Special cases," it is held in Parsons v. Tuolumne, 5 Cal. 43, "must be confined to such new cases as are the creation of statutes, and the proceedings under which, are unknown to the general framework of Courts of law and equity," and that the term "special cases" was not meant to include any class of cases for which the Courts of general jurisdiction had always supplied a remedy. (Dorsey v. Barry, 24 Cal. 449; Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145.)

The Supreme Court, from an early day, has entertained jurisdiction of special cases. In some of them, the statute under which the proceedings were had provided for an appeal, and in others no mention of an appeal was made. In Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 248; Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229; s. c., 19 Cal. 47; Contra Costa Railroad Company v. Moss, 23 Cal. 323; Sacramento P. and N. R. R. Co. v. Harlan, 24 Cal. 334; Stanford v. Worn, 27 Cal. 171; S. F. and S. J. R. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 29 Cal. 112; S. F. A., and S. R. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 31 Cal. 36; C. P. R. R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 24 — the statutes under which the proceedings in those cases were had not allowing an appeal; and in S. V. R. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 6 Cal. 74; Hyne-man v. Blake, 19 Cal. 580; Spring Valley Water Works, 17 Cal. 132; s. c., 22 Cal. 434; The Kearny Street Cases, 32 Cal., and many other cases of a similar character, the statute granted an appeal. In Knowles v. Yeates, 31 Cal. 82, which was a contested election case, and which arose under the present Constitution, the jurisdiction of the Court was challenged, but it was held that the Court had jurisdiction — that jurisdiction was conferred by the Constitution, though words of express grant were not formed in that instrument. Much reliance was placed on Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 252, which was an action for a divorce. The reasoning in the latter case sustained the appellate jurisdiction, which had been entertained from the organization of the Court, in suits for divorce, suits to prevent threatened injuries, suits to determine the right to honorary offices, and writs of quo warranto, and other actions in which the matter in dispute was not susceptible of a pecuniary measurement, or in which the legality of a tax, toll, impost, or municipal fine was not in question; although such cases did not fall within the classification of actions mentioned in the section conferring appellate jurisdiction, but came within the general grant of appellate jurisdiction. The classification of the subject matter of jurisdiction is more complete in the present than in the former Constitution; but it admits of serious doubt whether the words, literally interpreted, will comprehend all cases of the character of those above mentioned, without resorting to a more liberal interpretation of the general words granting appellate jurisdiction — the interpretation adopted in Conant v. Conant and Knowles v. Yeates.

The position cannot be maintained that the Court has or has not jurisdiction of special cases accordingly as the Legislature in providing for them has or has not allowed an appeal. The jurisdiction of the Court is derived from the Constitution alone, and the Legislature can neither enlarge nor restrict it. When a special case is devised, the question whether this Court has appellate jurisdiction in the matter must be determined by an interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution. In view of the numerous instances in which the Court under both the former and the present Constitution, has entertained jurisdiction of special cases, and of the interpretation of the Constitution adopted in Conant v. Conant and in Knowles v. Yeates, and the reasoning upon which that interpretation is based, I am of the opinion that the Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction in "special cases."

It therefore becomes unnecessary, in this case, to determine the meaning and effect of the words "final and conclusive," as applied by the thirteenth section of the Act to the judgment of the County Court. If the purpose was to cut off all appeals to this Court, it failed of accomplishment for the want of competent power in the Legislature.

The motion to dismiss the appeal should, in my opinion, be denied.

SPRAGUE, J., dissenting:

The proceedings authorized by the statute of March 30th, 1868, entitled "An Act to authorize the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco to modify the grades of certain streets," and the Act of February 1st, 1870, amendatory and supplemental thereto, are special proceedings, dependent for validity entirely upon these statutes in every step of their progress.

The powers and duties of the Board of Supervisors, the Commissioners appointed by such Board, and the Superintendent of Public Streets and Highways, as also the jurisdiction and powers of the County Court in the premises, are confined to and controlled by these special statutes.

This appeal is from the judgment of the County Court affirming the report of the Commissioners appointed by the Board of Supervisors to assess the benefits and damages to each separate lot of land within the limits of the district as defined by the statute, and the only questions as yet presented arise upon a preliminary motion to dismiss the appeal.

Without entering into a discussion of the provisions of the statute, which would be out of place in the decision of this preliminary motion, I deem it sufficient to state that some of the objections filed by the appellant to the second report of the Commissioners did present to the County Court questions involving the validity of the assessment of benefit to his property, as made by such Commissioners. By section eleven of the Act as amended, it is made the duty of the Commissioners to "first ascertain and determine the amount of damages resulting to any property injured or affected by said work over and above all benefits, and * * * then proceed to assess the whole amount thereof, together with the amount due for all of said work, and also the costs and expenses of all proceedings had under this Act and the Act of which this is amendatory, including the fees of said Commissioners and of the counsel and clerk employed by said Commissioners, upon the lands and premises benefited by said change of grade, and which lie within the district aforesaid, as near as may be in proportion to the benefit which shall have accrued to such lot."

From the above extract, it will be observed that the Commissioners are first required to "ascertain and determine the amount of damages resulting to any property injured or affected by said work over and above all benefits." This involves an assessment of benefits and damages to each separate lot or parcel of land affected by the modification of grade contemplated by the statute, and to the aggregate excess of damages over benefits, thus ascertained, is to be added the cost and expense of all proceedings had under the Act, including the fees of the Commissioners and of the counsel and clerk employed by the Commissioners, and the aggregate of these several items is the amount which the Commissioners are required to assess upon the lands and premises benefited by said change of grade within the district, as near as may be, in proportion to the benefit which shall have accrued to each lot. Any error, therefore, or departure from the requirements of the statute in determining the aggregate amount to be assessed upon the property benefited, must, of necessity, involve the validity of the assessment upon any specific lot as its proportionate share of the aggregate amount to be assessed. Indeed, every act and duty required of the Commissioners, up to and including their final report, is a step involving the validity of their final assessment of benefits to each separate lot, and any lot owner whose interest is affected by any intermediate or final step of the Commissioners, may challenge the legality of their assessment upon the ground of error or non-compliance with the statute in any step of their proceedings, and such challenge would necessarily involve the legality of the final assessment upon each lot as its proportionate share of expenses.

The Legislature, then, having conferred upon the County Court jurisdiction of these special statutory proceedings, and devolved upon it a supervisory control of the acts of the Commissioners in making and returning an assessment, the legality of which is challenged in that Court; and the Constitution of this State having in express terms conferred upon this Court appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving the "legality of any tax, impost, assessment or municipal fine," it would seem that section three hundred and fifty-nine of the Practice Act fully authorized this appeal.

It is, however, claimed that the special statute under which these proceedings were had do not provide for an appeal — on the contrary, in effect, prohibit an appeal from the final judgment of the County Court in the premises. But if the Constitution of the State expressly confers appellate jurisdiction upon this Court of the subject matter involved in the judgment of the County Court, no Act of the Legislature can oust such jurisdiction; and it would require the most direct and unmistakable language in an Act of the Legislature to justify this Court in attributing to that department an intent to divest this Court of jurisdiction in any case or proceeding within its constitutional grant of jurisdiction. The language relied upon as in effect prohibitory of an appeal in the present case, is found in the thirteenth section of the amendatory Act, and, with its context, is as follows: "Within twenty days after the publication of said last mentioned notice, any interested party or parties dissatisfied with the report of said Commissioners, or any part thereof, may file with the Clerk of the County Court of said city and county written objections to said report, or any part thereof, setting forth his or their grounds of objections. If no such objections are so filed within said period of twenty days, the report of said Commissioners shall be final and conclusive on all parties interested; and all assessments made and set forth in said report shall be a lien upon the respective parcels of land and property in said district upon which said assessments are charged by said report. But in case any such objections are so filed within said period of twenty days, the County Court of said City and County of San Francisco shall assign a day for the hearing and trial of said objections, and on the day assigned, or on such other day or days to which the same shall be adjourned, said Court shall hear the allegations of the party or parties so objecting, and shall take proof in support of and against said objections, and of said report and the assessments therein, and shall confirm the said report, or may modify the same, or may set the same aside, either in whole or in part, or, in its discretion, may refer the matter back to the same Commissioners with instructions, who shall thereupon proceed as hereinbefore provided, or according to said instructions. Upon the hearing of said objections before said County Court, it shall be competent for any party to introduce evidence, either in support of said objections or the report of said Commissioners; and in case said report should be referred back to said Commissioners by said County Court, then, upon a second report being made by said Commissioners, the same right of objection, by any party interested, shall exist as to said second or amended report as is hereinbefore provided as to said first report; and upon the coming in of said second or amended report (in case there should be any second or amended report), the said County Court shall have power to render a judgment as to said report, or as to any of the matter therein contained, and such judgment of said County Court as to the premises shall be final and conclusive. And upon the final judgment of said County Court as to the premises, all assessments made and set forth in said report shall, from and after such final judgment, be a lien upon the respective lands and property in the district upon which said assessments are charged by said report."

It will be observed, by a careful reading of this section, that even after the report of the Commissioners of assessment has first been filed with the Clerk of the County Court, the jurisdiction of the County Court is not invoked and does not attach until, under the notice published by the Clerk of the Court, some party interested in the proceedings has filed with the Clerk of the Court objections to the report of the Commissioners, or some part thereof. Until this is done there is no case in Court, and no occasion for the action of the Court; but when objections to the report are properly filed, there is a case or matter in Court of which the statute requires it to take jurisdiction, the parties to which are substantially the municipal corporation of the City and County of San Francisco, affirmatively proceeding under the statute on the one side, and the persons filing objections to the report of the Commissioners on the other. The issues are made by the report and objections thereto, and the Court is required to proceed to hear the allegations of the parties objecting to the report, and take evidence in support of and against such objections, and of said report and the assessment thereon, and shall confirm said report, or may modify the same, or may set the same aside, either in whole or in part, or, in its discretion, may refer the matter back to the same Commissioners, with instructions, etc.; and, in case such report should be referred back, then, upon a second report being made, the same right of objection by any party interested shall exist as to said second or amended report as to the first report; and, upon the hearing of objections to the second or amended report of the Commissioners, the County Court is empowered to render a judgment as to said report, or as to any matter therein contained; and such judgment of the County Court as to the premises shall be final and conclusive. This judgment of the County Court upon the second or amended report of the Commissioners is the final and conclusive act of that Court in the premises, and terminates its power and jurisdiction therein. It has no power to further review the action of the Commissioners, to re-refer any matter to them, or hear further objections, nor in any manner, on motion for new trial or otherwise, to review its own action in the premises.

This, in my judgment, is the extent of the restriction imposed, and the language of the statute should not be construed as prohibiting a review of the final judgment of the County Court in the premises by a Court upon which the Constitution has conferred appellate jurisdiction of the specific matter involved therein, or as repealing by implication a general law authorizing appeals from such judgments.

The motion to dismiss, I think, should be denied.

JOSEPH S. PAGE v. LOUIS VILHAC.

WHEN DEED WITH AGREEMENT TO SELL BACK NOT A MORTGAGE.—Where Page conveyed land to Vilhac on December 12th, 1864, by deed absolute on its face, in consideration of Vilhac's satisfying a mortgage for two thousand five hundred and twenty-two dollars, which he held against Page upon the property, and paying off a previous mortgage for five thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars, held by a third party on the same property, and at the same time Vilhac gave Page a contract, agreeing to sell back the whole or any part of the property, on payment of eight thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars or a proportional part thereof, on or before November 1st, 1865, at which time the agreement was to "cease to be in force and become entirely null and void," and it appeared that the eight thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars to be paid represented moneys actually paid and to be paid by Vilhac, on the property, and no part of it to be made up of interest to accrue during the interim, and that the attorney who drew the papers was directed by the parties to draw a full deed and not a mortgage, but to give Page a privilege of buying back the whole or any part, if he was able to do so by November 1st, 1865, and that both parties so understood the arrangement: held, that the transaction was one of sale and not of mortgage, and that after November 1st, 1865, without anything having been done, Page had no right or equity in the property.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The land conveyed by the plaintiff to the defendant consisted of three tracts in San Joaquin County, embracing in all about four hundred and ninety acres. The complaint alleged that the conveyance was intended by way of mortgage to secure the indebtedness of plaintiff to defendant, with interest, and prayed for an accounting between the parties and a redemption of the property, in favor of the plaintiff, upon his payment of what on such accounting might be found due to defendant.

The complaint was filed January 12th, 1869. April 16th, 1870, the findings copied in the opinion were filed, and afterwards judgment was entered to the effect that plaintiff was not entitled to redeem; that the defendant was the owner of the property in fee simple absolute, and dismissing the complaint. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he then appealed from the judgment and order.

Pringle & Pringle, for Appellant.

Whether the contract between the parties was a mortgage or a conditional sale is a mixed question of law and fact. In doubtful cases, the leaning of the Courts is in favor of holding a transaction a mortgage. The deed and contract here were a mere device to avoid the process of foreclosure. In such cases the maxim of the Courts is, that the debtor shall not be allowed to deprive himself of his equity of redemption by any device to which his creditor may obtain his consent. (Story's Equity, Sec. 1019; Henry v. Davis, 7 John. Ch. R. 41.)

The relation of debtor and creditor continued to exist after the conveyance of the land. The words of the agreement, that "on and after the first day of November next this agreement shall cease to be in force, and shall then be entirely null and void," are the ordinary words to carry out the form of swift security, which the creditor endeavored to adopt. They are not stronger than in the old form of a mortgage, and in this transaction mean nothing more.

The relation of debtor and creditor, the simultaneous execution of the deed and of the covenant for reconveyance, the continuance of the indebtedness—these circumstances control all other features, and compel the recognition of the mortgage. (Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538; Hickox v. Low, 10 Cal. 197; Brown v. Dean, 3 Wend. 298; Brown v. Dewey, 1 Sandf. Ch. 56; Barton v. May, 3 Sandf. Ch. 450; *Reitenbaugh v. W. L. Dudley and J. H. Budd, also for Appellant.

The transaction between Page and Vilhac, including the conveyance and written agreement to reconvey, constituted a mortgage, and remains a mortgage, and the mortgaged premises are subject to redemption.

In Friedly v. Hamilton, 17 S. & R. 70, it was held that an absolute deed and defeasance made at the same time, constituted a mortgage. (See, also, 1 Hilliard on Mortgage, 39; Brown v. Nickle, 6 Barr, 390; Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 545; Newcomb v. Bonham, 1 Vern. 7; Erskine v. Townsend, 2 Mass. 493; Carey v. Rawson, 8 Mass. 159; Eaton v. Whitney, 3 Pick. 484; Manlove v. Ball, 2 Vern. 84.)

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

George & Loughborough, for Respondent.

Though Courts of equity permit parol evidence to prove that a conveyance, absolute upon its face, was intended as security, and in doubtful cases they will lean in favor of the right of redemption, and permit slight circumstances to determine the transaction to be one of mortgage, still they inquire into all the facts and circumstances to ascertain the intention of the parties, and will not do violence to their understanding. (See Hickox v. Low, 10 Cal. 197; People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 428, and 18 Cal. 117; Green v. Butler, 26 Cal. 595; West v. Hendricks, 28 Ala. 226; Leading Cases in Eq. 624, notes.)

James C. Carey, also for Respondent.

The agreement shows, and the testimony was, that the relation of debtor and creditor ceased to exist on the delivery of the deed; it was taken in satisfaction of the debt, and not as security for a loan. A prior existing debt may be the consideration of a sale, and there is no presumption that the deed is given to secure its payment. (Eckford's Ex. v. De Ray, 26 Wend. 36; West v. Hendricks, 28 Ala. 234.)

The debts were extinguished by the deed. (26 Ala. 312; Leading Cases in Eq. 637; People v. Irwin, 14 Cal. 435; Ford v. Irwin, 18 Cal. 119; Barker v. Thrasher, 4 Denio, 495.) If not by the deed, then by the release of record executed by Vilhac and Hazelton. A release is not only evidence of extinguishment, but it is the extinguisher itself. (McCrea v. Purmot, 16 Wend. 473.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

On the 3d day of December, 1864, Page, by deed of that date, absolute in form, and reciting a consideration of seven thousand five hundred dollars, conveyed to Vilhac the premises in controversy. On the same day Vilhac executed and delivered to Page an instrument in the nature of a defeasance, referring to the conveyance so made, and agreeing, in terms, to sell to Page, at any time before the succeeding first day of November, which would be in the year 1865, the whole, or any portion less than the whole, of the premises embraced in the deed, at the price of eight thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars for the whole, should the whole be purchased, and if less than the whole, then at such price for such less portion as the parties might agree upon as the relative value thereof — concluding with the stipulation “that on or after the first day of November next the agreement shall cease to be in force, and shall then be entirely null and void.” The premises having advanced greatly in value, in 1868, an action was brought in January, 1869, and the question made by the pleadings is, whether the transaction is to be considered as amounting to a mortgage, or to a sale with an agreement for a reconveyance, upon the conditions and within the period already named.

Upon the trial, each party was examined as a witness in his own behalf, and several other persons also testified, and the Court found the facts to be as follows:

“1. That on the 3d day of December, A. D. 1864, the plaintiff, Joseph S. Page, being the owner of the premises described and referred to in the plaintiff's complaint, and being indebted to W. P. Hazelton in the sum of five thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars gold coin, the same being the amount of principal and interest then due by said plaintiff to said Hazelton, upon a certain note secured by first mortgage upon said premises, and of certain moneys expended by said Hazelton in the payment of certain taxes on said premises, and of certain costs, including attorney's fees, that had accrued in a certain action then pending for the foreclosure of said mortgage, and the said Page being at the same time indebted to the said defendant, Louis Vilhac, in the sum of two thousand five hundred and twenty-two dollars, gold coin, the same being the amount of principal and interest then due by said Page to said Vilhac, upon a certain note secured by second mortgage upon said premises, did make and enter into a verbal agreement with Vilhac to sell and convey to him the said premises in fee simple, and free of all incumbrances, in consideration that he, the said Vilhac, would pay to the said Hazelton the said sum of five thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars, gold coin, and would release to said Page the said debt of two thousand five hundred and twenty-two dollars, gold coin, and would cancel the note and mortgage last aforesaid, which said two sums amounted to seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven dollars; and in further consideration that the said Vilhac would, by written agreement, give to said Page the privilege to purchase the said premises at any time before the first day of November, A. D. 1865, for the sum of eight thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars, gold coin, or to purchase any part of said premises at any time before the day last aforesaid, for a proportionate price to be agreed upon between the said parties.

"2. That in pursuance of said verbal agreement the said Vilhac did, on the 12th day of December, 1864, pay to the said Hazelton the said sum of five thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars, gold coin, who did thereupon surrender to said Page the note first aforesaid, and did cancel the said note and release and discharge the mortgage first aforesaid, and did dismiss the said foreclosure suit, and did accept the said sum in full payment and satisfaction of the said indebtedness; and at the same time and in further pursuance of the said verbal agreement the said Vilhac did release to said Page the said debt of two thousand five hundred and twenty-two dollars, gold coin, and did surrender to said Page the note second aforesaid, and did cancel the same, and did release and discharge the said mortgage, whereby the said note was secured as aforesaid, and that in pursuance of said verbal agreement the said Page did, thereupon, on the said 12th day of December, A. D. 1864, deliver to the said Vilhac a deed, signed and sealed by him, the said Page, wherein and whereby he did sell and convey to said Vilhac, in fee simple, the premises aforesaid, free of all liens and incumbrances, which said deed bears date the 3d day of December, A. D. 1864, and is the same deed of conveyance mentioned and referred to in the pleadings filed in this action; and that the said Vilhac did, thereupon, and in pursuance of said verbal agreement, deliver to said Page, on the said 12th day of December, 1864, a written contract, duly signed by him, the said Vilhac, and sealed by him, wherein and whereby he did give to said Page the privilege to purchase the said premises, at any time before the 1st day of November, A. D. 1865, for the sum of eight thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars, gold coin, or to purchase any part thereof at any time before the said day, for a proportionate price, to be agreed upon between the said parties, which said agreement bears date the 3d day of December, A. D. 1864, and is the same that is referred to in said complaint, and is made part of the defendant's answer.

"3. That it was not agreed between said Page and said Vilhac, nor understood or intended by either of them, that the said money, or any part thereof, that was paid, as aforesaid, to said Hazelton, should be advanced by said Vilhac as a loan to said Page, or that the same should be repaid by said Page to said Vilhac, but on the contrary thereof, it was understood and agreed between them, and intended by each of them, that the same should be paid as a part of the price to be paid by said Vilhac for the purchase of said premises.

"4. That the said deed of conveyance was made and delivered by said Page to said Vilhac in payment of the said debt, which was due as aforesaid, by said Page to said Vilhac, and the same was accepted by said Vilhac in full payment and satisfaction of the said debt.

"5. That immediately upon the delivery of said deed of conveyance the relation of debtor and creditor ceased to exist between the said Page and the said Vilhac.

"6. That it was understood, agreed, and intended by each of the said parties, that the said deed should operate as a sale and conveyance of said premises to the said Vilhac.

"7. That it was not understood or intended by said Page or by the said Vilhac that the said Vilhac should hold the said premises, under the said deed or otherwise, as security for any purpose whatever, or that the said deed or conveyance and the said contract for a reconveyance, should operate as a mortgage.

"8. That the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars was not the real consideration for said conveyance, as recited in said deed, but that the real consideration thereof was the sum of seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven dollars, which was paid by said Vilhac to said Page in the manner hereinbefore set forth, that is to say: by releasing and discharging the said debt, which was due to him as aforesaid, and paying to said Hazelton as aforesaid the amount that was due to him as aforesaid by said Page.

"9. That the said Page was not indebted to the said Vilhac as set forth in said complaint, or otherwise than is hereinbefore set forth, and that all debts from said Page to said Vilhac were paid and extinguished by and upon the delivery of the said deed.

"10. That the time limited in said contract for the purchase of said premises by said Page was understood, agreed, and intended by and between the said parties as of the essence thereof.

"11. That the said Page never paid, or offered to pay, to said Vilhac any money whatever for the purchase of said premises, or any part thereof, and that he never in any manner offered to buy the said premises, or any part thereof, from the said Vilhac, under the said written agreement or otherwise."

Subsequently, upon exception being taken for the want of a finding as to the value of the lands when the deed and agreement were made, the Court added a finding to the effect that the value of said land was then eight thousand dollars, or thereabouts, and that the consideration paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, as stated in the findings, was not inadequate to the value of said land. Judgment for the defendant having been thereupon rendered, a motion for a new trial was made and subsequently denied, and this appeal is taken from the judgment and the order denying the motion.

The facts as found, bring the case clearly within the general principles recognized here in the case of Farmer v. Gross, post, page 169. In that case the principal question was, whether or not the conveyance made by Barry and wife to Farmer, and the contemporaneous agreement in writing by which Farmer undertook to reconvey to Barry upon the receipt of certain sums of money to be paid by Barry within the period of time in the agreement limited, amounted to a mortgage, or to a sale, with a covenant to reconvey upon conditions. In that case, as here, the grantor was in necessitous circumstances; the premises were doubly mortgaged, the grantor was unable to remove these mortgages, and the mortgagees, or one of them, threatened a foreclosure. Under the agreement in that case, made contemporaneously with the conveyance, the grantor was to have the possession of the premises in the meantime, and a right to remove the crop thereon, and the sum which he was to pay upon reconveyance was the exact amount expressed as the consideration in the deed, with interest at an agreed rate, with addition of such taxes as the grantee might in the meantime pay or become liable to pay on account of the premises, and also such sum or sums as might be expended by him in the prosecution of any action or actions to recover the possession of the premises. The significance of these circumstances, considered of themselves as tending to raise the presumption of a loan and a mortgage to secure its payment, was remarked in that case, but the presumption was held to be overcome by the other facts there appearing. These were, that the conveyance was absolute upon its face; that the agreement itself recited the fact that the grantee had bought the premises from the grantor and had paid him the purchase price; that Barry was not to be entitled to a reconveyance, unless he should comply with the conditions prescribed in the agreement on or before the first day of October following — after which time neither party was to be “held or bound by the terms of the same.”

In the case now under consideration the conveyance is absolute on its face — the agreement is “to sell” — to sell the whole or any portion less than the whole premises; that at the expiration of the period of time therein limited “this agreement shall cease to be in force, and shall then be entirely null and void.” No portion of the sum to be paid by Page upon reconveyance was made up of interest to accrue during the intervening period — the consideration named in the deed was seven thousand five hundred dollars — the sum to be paid upon reconveyance was eight thousand three hundred and seventy-seven dollars; the evidence shows that this sum was made up of a debt due from Page to Hazelton, and paid by Vilhac with interest, taxes on the premises, advanced by Hazelton as mortgagee, and secured to him by the terms of the mortgage, attorney’s fees, and costs incurred in the pending foreclosure suit which Hazelton had instituted, and in which Vilhac, as the holder of a former mortgage was made a party defendant, also of a debt from Page to Vilhac, amounting, principal and interest, to some two thousand five hundred dollars, with interest at the rate of two and one quarter per cent per month, secured by note and mortgage on the premises, which note and mortgage Vilhac surrendered to Page at the time, and released the mortgage of record; to these amounts was added the sum of six hundred dollars, representing the rent of the premises for the current year, which rent Page had already received from Hodges, the tenant in possession.

The agreement for the reconveyance was prepared by an attorney to whom the parties jointly applied for that purpose, and with whom they talked it over. In relating what was said by both parties in his presence together, he says: "The understanding was that Vilhac should receive a full deed of the property; he had a mortgage already, and would not take another mortgage, but would give Page the privilege of buying the property back — give him the refusal of it for one year, or eleven months; that if he could turn himself and get it back, or buy any part of it at a proportionate value, he was to do it," * * * "Vilhac had stated distinctly he would not have another mortgage, and must have it so provided that it would not be a mortgage." * * * "The conditions were settled clearly by Vilhac, if I recollect, as I have stated before, and Page said that that was his understanding; that that was his agreement, words to that effect — an assent that was clear and unequivocal."

The record abounds with evidence of the most persuasive character, such as the conduct of the plaintiff at the time, and for long afterwards, his repeated statements made to others, etc., establishing with unusual clearness that he himself distinctly understood the transaction to amount to an agreement for a resale at his option, and nothing more, as

E. P. ATKINS v. ALEXANDER GAMBLE.

SALE OF MINING STOCKS BY BAILLEE.—A. and G. each owned shares of stock in a mining company, all the shares being of equal value; A. delivered a number of his shares to G., to be held as collateral security for money advanced by G., to pay assessments upon the stock of A., and to be sold by G. whenever he could obtain not less than five hundred dollars per share; G. transferred certain of A.'s shares for less than the price named, in fulfillment by G. of a contract for a sale of his own stock, and, on settlement with A., G. transferred an equal number of his own shares to A., exchanging receipts with him in full of all demands. Subsequently A. sued G. for the amount of money received for the shares sold, alleging that the settlement had been procured by false representations on the part of G.; and G. defended by showing that he transferred the shares in fulfillment of a contract for the sale of his own stock, and that he at all times had and held for A.'s use an equal number of shares of equal value, and that he had so replaced them. Held, that G. did not become responsible for the proceeds of the sale of the shares. The technical breach of trust presents a case of damnum absque injuria.

RIGHT OF BAILOR TO DEMAND PROCEEDS OF WRONGFUL SALE.—If the bailee of personal property sell it, in violation of his authority, the owner may ordinarily ratify the transaction and demand the proceeds of the sale.

RIGHT OF OWNER TO RECOVER SPECIFIC PROPERTY.—The owner of personal property which has been wrongfully converted is ordinarily entitled to recover his specific property, or its value, and cannot be compelled to accept other property of the same kind and equal value in lieu of that which was converted.

IDEM.—Shares of stock in a corporation stand upon a different footing, because they are mere evidence of interest in the business of the corporation; and, if all the shares are of equal value, there can be no reason for preferring one share to another.

Argument for Respondent.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

S. M. Wilson and A. P. Crittenden, for Appellant.

A share of stock in an incorporated company is, in its very nature, incapable of identification. No ear-mark can be placed upon it. One share is as good as another share, all shares being of equal dignity. (Nourse v. Prince, 4 John. Ch. R. 496; Arnold v. Ruggles, 1 R. I. 165; Ang. & Ames on Cor., Secs. 557, 558, 560, 561, 562, 565; Wildman v. Wildman, 9 Ves. 177; Kerby v. Patter, 4 Ves. 751; Planter's Bank v. Merchant's Bank, 4 Ala. 753; Denton v. Waite, 6 Law Rep. 165; Gunter v. James, 9 Cal. 660, and cases cited.)

A share means a part. Ten shares out of one hundred shares and ten parts out of a hundred parts mean the same thing. To enter into a contract by which you become entitled to ten parts out of a hundred parts of the profits of an enterprise is the same as ten shares of the stock of the enterprise. If the right to collect one tenth of the profits of a corporation—that is, one tenth of the dividends—be vested in A, and he assigns or transfers that right to an agent, or debtor, or creditor, and he receives back the right to collect one tenth, we perceive no injury.

for sale. Defendant could not, in lieu thereof, return to plaintiff an equal number of other shares of stock of the same company.

Identity of the thing owned is of the essence of all property under our law. Whatever a party cannot identify as being specifically his in a Court of law, he does not show to be his property. The exception is in the instance of a tortious confusion of chattels, where the law, rather than leave the innocent party without remedy, gives him the whole — an exception which proves the rule. The question of value, whether equal or superior, is an immaterial circumstance, either in respect of the right of property or the defense of a wrong done to it. In the abstract sciences, things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. In the law, which, like the science of government, of which it is an important part, is eminently a practical science, the rule, especially as to questions of property, is emphatically nullum simile est idem — whatever is like, is not the same. The element of identity pervades the whole law of sales. To a sale of personal, or even of real property, it is essential that the property shall have been identified, either by a definite description in the case of lands, or by parting it out, or marking it, etc., in the case of chattels. Until this is done no property passes, because without identity there is no property. (Hilliard Sales, second ed. 1860, p. 135-141, and cases in notes; 1 Parsons' Contr., ed. 1866, p. 527.) "The property does not pass absolutely, unless the sale be completed, and it is not completed so long as anything remains to be done * * * to identify the thing sold, or discriminate it from other things." (Bailey v. Smith, 43 N. H. 141-143; Ockington v. Richey, 41 N. H. 279-281; Aldridge v. Johnson, 7 Ellis & B. 90 E. C. L. 885, 899-903.) The exceptions to this rule are rather apparent than real, and will be found to refer generally to something else to be done after the identity is ascertained, as measuring, weighing, etc., for the purpose of

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The legal propositions involved in this case are of great practical importance, and, in arriving at a satisfactory solution of them, we have been very much aided by the able and exhaustive briefs of the respective counsel.

In 1863 the Antelope mine, in Esmeralda District, was owned by an incorporated company, established under the laws of the State, and having its principal place of business at San Francisco. The defendant was President of the company, and the plaintiff was Superintendent of the mine. The interests of the respective stockholders in the company were represented by certificates of stock, in the usual form, and the plaintiff was the owner of thirty-three and one-third shares, represented by six certificates for five shares each, and one certificate for three and one-third shares. He was also the owner of certain shares, represented by similar certificates, in the Real del Monte Company, another mining corporation. In order to meet accruing assessments on these stocks, the plaintiff borrowed from defendant a certain sum of money, which was to be refunded, with an agreed rate of interest, and hypothecated the stocks with the defendant as collateral security for the sum advanced and the accruing interest. The certificates were indorsed by the plaintiff and delivered to the defendant. The plaintiff claims that it was agreed that the defendant should sell, for the plaintiff's account, the Real del Monte stock, whenever he could obtain therefor not less than forty dollars per share, and the Antelope stock, when he could obtain for it not less than five hundred dollars per share. Ultimately the Real del Monte stock was sold by the defendant at the price limited, and he received the money therefor, of which fact the plaintiff was duly notified, and no complaint is made in respect to this transaction. The money thus received was not only of sufficient amount to refund the advances made to the plaintiff, with the interest then due thereon, but there remained in the hands of the defendant a considerable excess to the credit of the plaintiff. During all this time the defendant was the owner, in his own right, of a number of shares of stock of the Antelope Company, exceeding in amount the thirty-three and one-third shares of the plaintiff. Whilst the plaintiff's certificates for the Antelope stock so remained in the hands of the defendant, the latter sold to Edward Martin ten shares of the stock of that company, for four thousand dollars, being at the rate of four hundred dollars per share, and delivered to Martin, in fulfillment of the contract of sale, ten shares of the plaintiff's stock. The defendant claims that in the sale to Martin he sold his own stock, and not the plaintiff's; and that he delivered the plaintiff's certificates for the ten shares, instead of his own, only because, being the President of the company, he feared it would depreciate the value of the stock in the market if it should become known that he was selling his own stock; and that he used the plaintiff's certificates under the belief that no damage could result to the plaintiff, inasmuch as he (the defendant) had and continued to have more stock of the same company than was necessary to replace it, which he held for the plaintiff's use in lieu of that delivered to Martin. It further appears that the defendant caused fifteen shares of the plaintiff's stock to be transferred on the books of the company to Donohoe, Ralston & Co., to whom new certificates were issued, and who immediately indorsed the new certificates and returned them to the defendant. It also appears that the defendant on one occasion loaned to Perry, a stock broker, five shares of plaintiff's stock, and within a few days thereafter Perry returned to the defendant another certificate for the same amount of stock. The defendant further claims that after all these transactions he and the plaintiff had a full and final settlement of all matters connected with these stocks; and that after being fully informed of all that the defendant had done in the premises the plaintiff ratified his acts and the parties exchanged receipts.

The complaint, after averring the ownership of the plaintiff of the Antelope stock, and describing the several certificates, alleges that the plaintiff duly indorsed the certificates, so that the title might pass by delivery, and delivered them to the defendant, to hold the same in trust and as agent for the plaintiff, and if sold to be sold for the account and benefit of the plaintiff, and the proceeds to be paid to the plaintiff; that the defendant afterward sold ten of said shares for the market price of four hundred dollars, in gold coin, per share, and received the money therefor, to and for the use of the plaintiff; that he subsequently sold fifteen of the remaining shares for the then market price of three hundred and forty-five dollars, in gold coin, per share, and received the said sum to and for the use of the plaintiff; that he afterwards sold five of the remaining shares at the then market price of two hundred dollars, in gold coin, per share, and received said sum to and for the use of the plaintiff; that the defendant willfully and fraudulently failed and neglected to inform the plaintiff of these sales, and fraudulently concealed said transactions from the plaintiff, and thereby caused the plaintiff to believe that the stock had not been sold; that, being thereby deceived in respect to the facts, the plaintiff afterward paid to the defendant certain sums as and for so much money advanced by the defendant to pay assessments on said stock; whereas, in fact, before the assessments were levied, the defendant had sold said stocks, and had received the proceeds to and for the plaintiff's use; that during all this time the plaintiff was absent from San Francisco, and was ignorant of the dealings of the defendant in said stocks; that ultimately the plaintiff came to San Francisco, and called upon the defendant for a settlement; that the defendant then returned the certificate for three and one third shares, and informed the plaintiff that he could get the residue of the stock at the office of the company, and represented and stated that there had been some manipulation going on, which had made it necessary for him to use the plaintiff's name, but never informed the plaintiff that he had sold the plaintiff's stock, and falsely and fraudulently, and with intent to cheat the plaintiff, induced him to believe, and he did believe, that the plaintiff's stock was at the office of the company, ready to be delivered to him; that thereupon, at defendant's request, the plaintiff took from the company a certificate for thirty shares belonging to defendant, and supposing the same to belong to the plaintiff, being induced and fraudulently persuaded by the defendant to receive the same; and was also compelled to pay to the company seven hundred and fifty-five dollars, as assessment on said thirty shares, before it was delivered to him, which he would not have done if he had known that it was the defendant's stock and not his own; that the defendant had and received the said sums of money as the agent of the plaintiff, and to and for his use; that whilst the plaintiff was ignorant of these facts, and misled and deceived by the statements and concealments of the defendant, the defendant procured from the plaintiff a receipt in full of all demands; that the receipt was obtained by fraud, undue influence, and willful misrepresentation, and with the intent to secure to the defendant the money received for the thirty shares, etc.; that, on discovering the fraud, he demanded payment of the defendant, which was refused. The prayer of the complaint is for a judgment for the several sums received by the defendant, with interest.

The answer admits that the plaintiff owned the thirty-three and one third shares and delivered the certificates therefor, properly indorsed, to the defendant; but avers that they were delivered solely as collateral security for the advances made by the defendant to the plaintiff, and not upon any trust whatsoever; that the defendant was then and thereafter a large dealer in the stock of said company, having many shares standing in his own name, and holding many certificates for both large and small amounts, issued to other persons, and properly indorsed, so as to pass by delivery; that desiring to make sale of a portion of his own stock in said company, he ordered his broker to sell the same; and in performing the contract of sale he delivered to the purchaser, amongst other certificates, two of those of the plaintiff for five shares each; that he delivered them as his own certificates, and not as those of the plaintiff; that the contract of sale was for his own account and for his own stocks, and not for the plaintiff, or on his account; that he had then, and has ever since had, other certificates of the same kind, and of the same amount, which he held for the plaintiff, and has at all times been ready to deliver. The answer denies the sale of the fifteen shares and of the five shares, or that the defendant ever received any sum of money therefor; and denies all the fraudulent representations and concealments charged in the complaint, or that the plaintiff was ignorant of the actual facts as they existed. It then avers that, after being fully informed of all the facts, the plaintiff accepted a certificate for the thirty shares, and gave to the defendant a receipt acknowledging payment in full of all demands to that date.

The findings are to the effect:

First — That the plaintiff owned the thirty-three and one third shares, for which he held certificates as above stated, which were so numbered as to render them easily capable of identification; and that he also owned one hundred and twelve shares of Real del Monte stock.

Second — That in October, 1862, he made an arrangement with the defendant by which the defendant agreed to receive, and did receive, the said stocks for sale under the plaintiff's instructions; and, until the same should be sold, to advance and pay for the plaintiff the assessments levied and to be levied on said stocks, holding the stocks as security for said advances and interest thereon.

Third — That up to February 28th, 1863, the defendant had in this manner advanced for the plaintiff about one thousand dollars, on which day the defendant sold the Real del Monte stock for four thousand four hundred and eighty dollars, which he received; out of which he paid himself his advances and interest; and by agreement with the plaintiff, held the balance of three thousand three hundred and seventy-eight dollars and ninety-three cents for the account of the plaintiff and as a fund from which to pay any assessments to be thereafter levied on the Antelope stock; and the said fund was more than sufficient for that purpose.

Fourth — That on the 7th of March, 1863, the defendant wrongfully sold ten shares of the plaintiff's Antelope stock for four thousand dollars in gold coin, which he received and appropriated to his own use; that on the 29th of April, 1863, without the knowledge or authority of the plaintiff, the defendant wrongfully disposed of, to his own use, fifteen other shares of said stock, which was then of the market value of three hundred and forty-five dollars, in gold coin, per share; that on the 19th of February, 1864, without the knowledge or authority of the plaintiff, the defendant wrongfully disposed of, to his own use, five other shares of said stock, which was then of the market value of two hundred dollars per share, in gold coin.

Fifth — That the plaintiff never made any ratification, confirmation, or settlement of said transactions, or any of them; that in March, 1864, the plaintiff required of the defendant that he should return to him his thirty-three and one third shares, and account with him for the moneys in defendant's hands; that the defendant did not account with the plaintiff for said moneys, or return said stock; but in lieu thereof returned to him only three and one third shares, and delivered to him an order on the Secretary of the company to transfer on the books of the company to the plaintiff thirty shares of the defendant's stock, on the payment by the plaintiff of seven hundred and fifty dollars in gold coin, being the amount of an assessment alleged by the defendant to be due thereon; and the defendant at the same time handed to the plaintiff three hundred and seventy-one dollars and thirty-nine cents in cash, as and for the balance of the plaintiff's moneys in his hands, alleging that all the rest of the plaintiff's money in the defendant's hands, being three thousand and seven dollars and fifty-four cents, had been applied by the defendant in payment of assessments on said thirty shares of the plaintiff's stock; that of the said sum, three thousand dollars had not in fact been so applied, and the assessments referred to by the defendant as those on which he had applied the three thousand dollars, were all levied after the periods when he had wrongfully disposed of said thirty shares; that at the defendant's request, receipts in full of all demands, written out by the defendant, were then and there exchanged between the parties; that the plaintiff paid to the company the seven hundred and fifty dollars in gold coin, and had the thirty shares transferred to him on the company's books; that the defendant did not then, or at any time, disclose to the plaintiff the facts, or any of them, specified in the fourth finding, but withheld the same from the plaintiff; and the plaintiff received the thirty shares, paid the seven hundred and fifty dollars and exchanged receipts with the defendant, in ignorance of said facts and by reason of such ignorance; that said facts were not discovered by the plaintiff until about the middle or latter part of June, 1864, when he immediately returned to the defendant the certificate for the thirty shares, and demanded payment of the moneys sued for, which payment was refused, and has never been made.

Sixth — That during all the period covered by these transactions the defendant had more than seventy shares of the Antelope stock standing in his name on the books of the company, and owned by him.

Seventh — That by the custom of brokers in San Francisco one share of stock is considered of no more value than another share of stock in the same corporation, and that stock brokers frequently exchange certificates for the same number of shares in the same corporation; but neither the plaintiff nor defendant was a member of the Board of Brokers, nor were said transactions, or any of them, had with reference to any custom of said Board.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

As conclusions of law, the Court finds: 1st, That from October, 1862, to February 28th, 1863, the defendant held the plaintiff's stocks as pledged, and as security for the advances made by the defendant to pay assessments on the stocks; that the bailment by way of pledge terminated on said twenty-eighth of February, after which the defendant sold the Antelope stock as the plaintiff's bailee and agent for the sale thereof, under the plaintiff's orders; 2d, That the custom of the Board of Brokers is irrelevant and immaterial to this case; 3d, That the dealings of the defendant with, and the disposition made by him of the several parcels of said stock, amounting to thirty shares, were wrongful, and were not, any of them, authorized, ratified, or confirmed, nor was any settlement thereof made by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover the four thousand dollars, proceeds of the sale of ten shares; five thousand one hundred and seventy-five dollars, the value of the fifteen shares; one thousand dollars, the value of the five shares; three thousand three hundred and seventy-eight dollars and ninety-three cents, the balance of plaintiff's money remaining in defendant's hands (less the three hundred and seventy-one dollars and thirty-nine cents paid to the plaintiff); and the seven hundred and fifty dollars paid by the plaintiff to the company; the whole sum for which judgment is ordered being thirteen thousand nine hundred and thirty-two dollars and fifty-four cents, with interest from July 1st, 1864, of which sum, seven thousand dollars and the interest thereof, is to be paid in gold coin. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff in accordance with these findings, and the defendant moved for a new trial, on the ground, amongst others, that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings, and the statement in support of the motion contains the proper specifications in that respect. The motion for a new trial was denied, and defendant has appealed.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

We have been thus minute in stating the pleadings and findings, in order to avoid any misapprehension as to the precise points to be decided on the appeal.

In respect to many of the controlling facts of the case, there is little or no contrariety in the evidence. As to the ten shares of Antelope stock, the only testimony concerning the sale of them by the defendant was to the effect that the defendant, being the owner in his own right of a large amount of the stock of that company, ordered his broker to sell a portion of it; that the broker contracted to sell twenty or more shares to Edward Martin, and in performing the contract of sale the defendant, who was President of the company, delivered to Martin ten shares of the plaintiff's stock; that in so dealing with these shares the defendant delivered them as his own, and not as the property of the plaintiff; that the sale to Martin was intended by the defendant to be of his own stocks, and not the plaintiff's; and that the defendant, during the whole time, held in his own name more than enough of the stock of the company to replace the ten shares of the plaintiff.

The argument of the counsel for the plaintiff on this branch of the case is, that inasmuch as the defendant sold these ten shares without the authority of the plaintiff, and against his orders, it was a wrongful conversion of the stock by the defendant to his own use; that it was optional with the plaintiff whether he would repudiate the sale and hold the defendant for the market value of the stock, or, waiving the wrongful conversion, ratify the sale and demand the proceeds.

There can be no doubt as to the general proposition that, if the bailee of personal property sell it in violation of his authority, the owner may ratify the transaction and demand the proceeds of the sale. If A. intrust to B. a steamboat, for sale at a limited price, and if B., in violation of his duty, sell it for a less price, A. may acquiesce in the sale and demand the proceeds. This proposition needs no argument or citation of authorities to sustain it. It would not be at the option of the bailee whether he would account for the proceeds or deliver another steamboat of equal value; nor would it be any defense for him to say that he, at all times, had and held another steamboat of equal value, which he was ready to deliver in place of the first. If certificates of stock in mining corporations are to be treated in this respect as other personal property, it is evident the defendant became liable to the plaintiff for the proceeds of the ten shares sold to Martin.

But we think such certificates stand upon a different footing. Whilst stock in corporations is denominated personal property, and is subject to seizure and sale under execution, and whilst a particular certificate may be capable of complete indentification, by its numbers or otherwise, the certificate is but the evidence that the holder of it is entitled to an undivided share in the assets and business of the corporation. The stockholders are the joint owners of the franchise and property of the corporation, each being entitled to an undivided share thereof, and the only office of the certificate is to furnish the evidence of the quantum of interest held by the owner of the certificate. "Certificates of stock are not securities for money in any sense; much less are they negotiable securities. They are simply the muniments and evidence of the holder's title to a given share in the property and franchises of the corporation of which he is a member." (Mechanics' Bank v. New York and New Haven Railroad Company, 18 N. Y. R. 626.)

If a firm, doing business as an ordinary partnership, issue certificates to each of its members, specifying the interests of the respective copartners, such certificates would have no intrinsic value, except as evidence of the quantum of interest of each copartner. The joint interest of the copartner in the property and business of the firm is the substance, of the existence of which the certificate is but the evidence. If, for example, there be three copartners, each owning an undivided interest of one third, there is no appreciable difference between the respective interests. They are in all respects precisely similar, and each several interest is an exact duplicate of the others. The same principle is applicable to corporations. The holder of ten shares of stock stands precisely upon the same footing as any other holder of ten shares. Their interests are precisely similar, and of the same value, and each holds but an undivided interest in the common property. This proposition is not new in this Court, and is substantially decided in Hawley v. Brummagem, 33 Cal. 394; Hardenburgh v. Bacon, 33 Cal. 356.

The general rule is, as we have stated, that the owner of personal property which has been wrongfully converted, is entitled to recover his specific property or its value, and cannot be compelled to accept other property of the same kind and of equal value, in lieu of that which was converted. The reason of the rule is obvious. The owner may have special reasons for desiring to retain that specific chattel; and there may be reasons why he attached a peculiar value to it beyond the value of other chattels of a precisely similar kind. If his desire in this respect be the result of mere caprice, he is entitled to be gratified in the exercise of it. Visible, tangible chattels may have secret defects which no vigilance could detect. If two visible objects be apparently precisely similar, one may have infirmities not discoverable on inspection, which would impair or destroy its value. Hence the owner of such chattel cannot be compelled to accept in lieu of it another which appears to be precisely similar and of equal value. He cannot be required to take the risk of secret defects in the substituted article. Other considerations, also, affect the general rule. If a favorite horse, a pet dog, or a family picture be converted by a wrongdoer, he could not escape responsibility by offering another horse, dog, or picture, even of greater value.

But we think the reason of the rule ceases when applied to stocks. It is impossible that any sane person should have centered his affections upon a particular stock certificate, or that any violence could be done to his feelings by requiring him to accept another certificate of precisely similar character, in lieu of it. His own certificate was only the evidence that he owned an undivided interest in the capital and business of the corporation. Another certificate of the same kind, for the same amount of stock, would entitle him to precisely the same rights as the former certificate. Each would be a precise equivalent of the other, and it is certain he could suffer no pecuniary loss by the transaction; whilst the nature of the property, or rather of his interest in it, forbids the idea, that it could be the object of personal attachment, or have a peculiar value in his estimation as contradistinguished from any other equal number of shares in the same company.

For these reasons, we think, a different rule should govern the conversion of a certificate of stock; and if the wrongdoer was at all times ready and willing to transfer to the owner an equivalent number of similar shares in the same company, by a proper and valid certificate, it would present a case for nominal damages only.

Inasmuch as we have been referred to no adjudged case precisely similar to this, and the question involved being one of great practical importance, we propose to notice briefly the authorities relied upon.

Wilson v. Little, 2 Comst. 443, cited by the plaintiff's counsel was an action to recover the value of fifty shares of New York and Erie Railroad stock, deposited with the defendant as collateral security to secure the payment of a promissory note with authority to sell the stock on non-payment of the note. The defendant sold the stock before maturity of the note, and the plaintiff afterwards tendered payment and demanded a return of the stock. It appears the company had two kinds of stock, for which it had issued certificates; one termed the "consolidated," and the other the "converted," which had different values in the market, the former being the most valuable. The stock which was pledged was the "consolidated," and the defendant offered to return "converted" stock in lieu of that which he sold. The Court very properly held that the plaintiff was under no obligation to accept a different kind of stock from that which was pledged.

In discussing this branch of the case, the Court say: "The defendants were bound to restore the identical stock pledged." And in another part of the opinion: "Although the plaintiff was strictly entitled to a retransfer of the same shares which were pledged, it appears that his broker was willing to receive other stock of the same description and value," etc. In the first paragraph quoted we understand the Court to refer to "consolidated," as contradistinguished from converted stock; but if it be conceded that in strict law the plaintiff was entitled to a retransfer of the same identical shares which were pledged, it by no means follows that he was entitled to any but nominal damages, if the defendant was at all times ready and willing to transfer to him an equal number of shares of the same kind of stock with that which was pledged.

Brookman v. Rothschild, 3 Simmons, 6 Eng. L. 153, was a bill in chancery to set aside certain transactions in stocks on the ground of fraud. The defendant was the plaintiff's agent, and rendered accounts showing large transactions in stocks for the plaintiff's account. It appeared on the trial that the stocks stood in the name of the defendant, and were never in any manner appropriated or set apart to the plaintiff. The Court held that the stocks never became the property of the plaintiff, and he was therefore not liable for losses incurred by the sale of them.

Seymour v. Wickoff, 6 Seld. 213, was an action to recover the value of a quantity of pork in barrels, left with the defendants as commission merchants, for sale, and which was sold at ten dollars per barrel; but the plaintiff was not advised of the sale, and afterwards, on discovering it, brought an action for the proceeds. The defense attempted to be set up was that the pork in question was only a portion of a much larger quantity belonging to the defendant, or consigned to him by others, and which had the same inspection brand, and was stored in the same warehouse, by reason of which it had lost its identity, like wheat mixed in a bin, and that so long as the defendant had on hand an equal quantity of pork of the same brand, he might apply the plaintiff's ownership to that parcel, and sell it on his account. This defense was held to be insufficient, as it manifestly was. But there is no analogy between pork in barrels, capable of complete identification, and having peculiar qualities, on which its value depends, and certificates of stock, having no value over other similar certificates for the same stock.

In Ford v. Hopkins, 1 Salk. 283, the plaintiff had delivered certain lottery tickets to a goldsmith to collect the money due on them. The goldsmith, having received of the defendant other tickets in the same lottery, and given his note for them, took up his note by delivering the plaintiff's tickets to the defendant.

The Court held that the goldsmith had no authority, except to receive the money due on the tickets, and had no power to sell them or exchange them for other tickets; consequently, no title passed to the defendant.

Nourse v. Prime, 4 John. Ch. R. 496, and which was more fully considered in 7 John. Ch. R. 87, is, in some respects, very similar to this case. The defendants were stock brokers, and had purchased for the plaintiff four hundred and property, of which the property in suit is a part. For the purchase money they gave a promissory note, in which they represented themselves as Trustees of the La Fayette Mining Company, but which they signed with their individual names only. The note was secured by a mortgage upon the property purchased. The note being unpaid at maturity the mortgage was foreclosed and the premises sold to the mortgagees.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Alexander Deering, for Appellant, argued that the foreclosure suit was not a suit against the company, and could not affect the title to the property which had passed into the corporation.

J. M. Corcoran and J. B. Campbell, for Respondents.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This action is brought for the purpose of perpetually enjoining the sale on execution of certain real estate by the defendant, Sheriff of Mariposa County. The property was levied upon as the property of the La Fayette Mining Company, a corporation, to satisfy a judgment against the corporation in favor of one John W. Wilcox. Plaintiffs claim that at the date of the judgment against the corporation, and ever since, they were and have been the owners of the property, and that the La Fayette Mining Company, at the date of the rendition of said judgment, had not and at no time since have had any title to or interest in the property. Upon this defendant took issue.

On the trial, plaintiffs, to establish their title to the property, offered and read in evidence, against defendant's objections, the judgment roll in a certain case wherein one of the present plaintiffs and seven other individuals were plaintiffs, and Joseph Queriola, Samuel Miller, and Simon Morrison were defendants, the order of sale issued thereon, the certificate of sale, and Sheriff's deed to the purchasers at such sale, among whom was one of the present plaintiffs. It appears by the findings of the Court that these proceedings were had and completed sometime prior to the date of the entry of the judgment in favor of Wilcox against the La Fayette Mining Company.

The question on this appeal is, whether the above evidence offered and read on the trial, established, or tended to establish, plaintiff's title to the property, the sale of which in satisfaction of the Wilcox judgment against the La Fayette Mining Company, they, by this suit, seek to enjoin.

It appears from the finding that the La Fayette Mining Company as a corporation duly organized, became the owner of the property on the 29th day of March, 1866; and this ownership continued in said company until after the levy under the Wilcox judgment against the company, unless such ownership and title of the company was divested and passed to these plaintiffs and others by virtue of the judgment sale thereunder, and Sheriff's deed offered and read in evidence on the trial, as above stated.

Without reference to the character and object of the suit resulting in the judgment, sale thereunder, and Sheriff's deed, under which present plaintiffs claim title to the property, it is sufficient to state, that, as appears from the judgment roll offered and read in evidence, one of the present plaintiffs and seven other individuals were party plaintiffs in said suit, and Joseph Queriola, Samuel Miller, and Simon Morrison, as individuals, were party defendants, and that judgment and decree was entered in said suit on the 18th day of December, 1866, against the defendants therein, to wit: Joseph Queriola, Samuel Miller, and Simon Morrison. The La Fayette Mining Company was not a party to the suit, and no judgment or decree was therein rendered against it; no title to, or interest in the property of the corporation could be divested, or in any manner legitimately affected by a judgment and proceedings thereunder to which it was not a party. It follows, therefore, that the judgment roll, certificate of sale thereunder, and Sheriff's deed, read in evidence, did not establish, or tend to establish, plaintiff's title to the property; and that the Court erred in admitting the same in evidence against objections of defendant, and in its decree perpetually enjoining the defendant from proceeding to sell the property in satisfaction of the Wilcox judgment on execution.

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The judgment involved in this appeal was in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant, and was entered on March 30th, 1868. Afterwards counsel for defendant moved for leave to offset an execution in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff David Calderwood, against the execution issued in this action in favor of plaintiffs, for their costs on a former appeal. The motion was denied April 13th, 1868. Defendant's statement on motion for new trial was struck from the files June 8th, 1868. The appeal from the order refusing to offset the executions was taken June 17th, 1868; the appeal from the judgment and order striking out statement was taken July 14th, 1868.

E. A. Lawrence, for Appellant.

By the operation of the new Constitution, and the Act of December 23d, 1863, transferring all cases pending in the old County Court into the new County Court, and the Act of April 4th, 1864, concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers, this became a special case, over which the County Court only had original jurisdiction, and, as in all other original cases, the right of appeal from a judgment extended to one year.

The action of the Court in not settling the statement on motion for new trial, but in striking out, was in direct violation of the recent decision of this Court. (Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304.)

P. G. Buchan, for Respondents.

The appeal from the judgment was not brought in time, for the reason that it was a judgment on appeal from an inferior Court. The operation of the new Constitution was not to make any difference in the case or to change its character.

The statement on motion for new trial was properly struck out, and the order striking it out was not an appealable one. The case of Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304, is directly against the appellant.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The earlier history of this case is to be found in 31 Cal. 333. Upon the return of the cause, after the order granting the new trial had been affirmed here, the defendant filed a plea puis darrein continuance, in which he set up: First, the judgment rendered in the action August 16th, 1865, as a bar—alleging to be in full force and unsatisfied; second, that prior to the recovery of that judgment the female plaintiff, Elizabeth Douglass, had transferred to Calderwood one half the rents claimed in the action; third, that on July 28th, 1865, one Brooks commenced an action against David Calderwood, Elizabeth Douglass, and her husband, William J. Douglass, in the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, and after due proceedings, on the 18th day of June, 1866, obtained a decree to the effect that he was the owner in fee of the demised premises, and that the defendants in that action had no right, title, or interest therein, nor in the possession thereof, and enjoining them from the assertion of any right or title thereto against Brooks, the plaintiff therein, and that upon appeal the decree had been affirmed here (Brooks v. Calderwood, 34 Cal. 563); fourth, that Brooks was the landlord of the defendant at the time of the commencement of the action against him in the Justice's Court by Calderwood and Elizabeth, his then wife; that the tenancy then existing had been terminated, and the possession of the demised premises had been surrendered to Brooks on May 10th, 1864, since which time the defendant had not held the possession thereof in any wise. A trial of the action was again had in the County Court, March 30th, 1868, and resulted in a judgment in favor of the female plaintiff, Elizabeth Douglass, for the possession of the premises and nine hundred and fifty-five dollars damages, with costs of action.

A motion for a new trial, made by defendant and supported by a statement filed, was not determined by the Court below — but the statement was stricken from the file upon the application of the plaintiff, because, though filed, it had not been served. The action of the Court in this respect is now represented for review, upon appeal taken from the order by which the statement was stricken from the files.

The first question to be considered concerns the appellate jurisdiction of this Court, for the respondent claims that it does not extend to the review of an order striking from the files of the Court below a statement placed there in support of a motion for a new trial, and there is no doubt that such was the view announced in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 305, upon the authority of several adjudged cases in this Court, there enumerated. The general doctrine of those cases is, that "any special order made after final judgment" (Practice Act, Sec. 336, Subd. 3), to become the subject of an appeal here, must have followed the judgment, not in mere point of time of its entry, but that the order to be reviewed must, in some way, have depended upon the judgment itself, or have followed it in logical sequence (Pendegast v. Knox, 32 Cal. 73); that it must have "followed the judgment in the same line of proceedings" (31 Cal. 365), etc.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

I am unable, however, to discover any reason upon which these distinctions can be supported. If there in reality be any, these cases have not pointed it out, but have stopped with simply announcing the supposed distinctions themselves.

Shortly after I came here the case of Kimball v. Semple, yet pending upon other points because of the disqualification of one of the Justices of this Court to set in the case, came before the Court for decision.

One of the points in that case concerned our appellate jurisdiction, and it arose substantially upon the following facts: Judgment had been rendered in the District Court in favor of Kimball, for the recovery of the possession of the premises there in controversy. A motion for a new trial had been made by the defendant, and denied by the Court, and an appeal having thereupon been brought to this Court from the order of denial, a judgment was subsequently rendered here to the effect that the order be affirmed. After the return of the cause to the District Court, Semple, the defendant, moved that Court to set aside its order denying the new trial, so that he might perfect the statement which had been filed in support of the original motion; the Court below entered an order that this motion be denied, and an appeal to this Court was thereupon brought. It will be seen that the order thus appealed from, like the one at bar, was "a special order made after final judgment," in the language of section three hundred and thirty-six, as well as of section three hundred and forty-seven of the Practice Act, and did not "follow the judgment," in the sense of being dependent upon it. The point thus raised was the same now under consideration, and the authorities upon which it was rested, the case of Quivey v. Gambert and the others already mentioned.

In the case of Kimball v. Semple, I said:

"I think that the views announced in those cases, in respect to the point now under consideration, ought not to be maintained. The appellate jurisdiction of this Court is declared by the Constitution to extend to all cases in equity, to all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, etc. (Art. VI, Sec. 4.)

"The case at bar is one involving the title of certain real estate, and, as a case, is therefore clearly embraced within the appellate jurisdiction of this Court. A case is a state of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court of justice; to the existence of such a case parties are necessary, also pleadings and proceedings, trials, orders, judgments, etc., usually follow. These together constitute the case, and when, as here, that case is itself one within the appellate jurisdiction of this Court, any order made therein by the Court below becomes part of it, and must consequently be subject to the power of this Court to review it.

"This is the view upon which we entertain an appeal from the final judgment itself, or the order denying or granting a new trial, for neither such a judgment nor such an order of themselves necessarily constitute the entire case, but are only parts of it, and may be considered in this Court at different times, and upon distinct appeals.

"By an examination of section three hundred and forty-seven, supra, it will be seen that certain enumerated orders made in a case, and which respectively concern a new trial, an injunction, an attachment, or proceedings in partition, constitute of themselves distinct subjects of appeal, whether entered before or after the rendition of final judgment. So, if any order, though not included within this enumeration, be made before the rendition of final judgment, it is reviewed here through the instrumentality of an appeal taken from the judgment itself; and section three hundred and forty-seven declares that any special order made after final judgment shall also, of itself, be the subject of appeal. The necessity for this latter provision is apparent, when it is considered that an appeal from the judgment would only bring up the record of the proceedings resulting in the rendition of the judgment, and that such an appeal may have been taken, and even disposed of here, by affirmance or reversal, before the order complained of was made in the Court below; so that while an appeal from a judgment might in some instances be safely relied upon for the review of an order entered before its rendition, it would afford no reliable remedy against such an order only entered subsequently to its rendition. Accordingly, the statute allows an appeal to be taken directly from any special order made after final judgment, as the only safe and convenient method for its review. The statute declares such an order, made subsequently in point of time to the rendition of the judgment, to be the subject of a distinct appeal, and we are not at liberty to add that it must also be an order made in the direct line of the procedure. From an order refusing to dissolve an attachment, for instance, an appeal is given by designation, "from any special order made after final judgment;" a like appeal is as clearly given by definition, and I do not see why we might not upon some idea of the particular line of procedure pursued below refuse to entertain an appeal in the one case with as much propriety as in the other.

"For other reasons, too, I think that the rule laid down by the cases cited upon this point ought not to be maintained; the rule itself is so vague and indefinite that its application to cases coming here on appeal would, in many instances, be productive of the utmost confusion and the most profitless preliminary discussion. What is the required line of procedure? In what way must the order depend upon the judgment? Or, when may it be said to follow the judgment in the same line of proceeding? Can there be said to be any uniform line of proceeding at all, or one that is capable of such delineation as would make it safe or reliable as a boundary line between orders within and orders without the appellate jurisdiction of this Court? Nor does the rule in question, by its practical operation upon the substantial rights of parties, commend itself to my judgment. For under that operation a special order, if made after the rendition of judgment, and made in a case, too, within our appellate jurisdiction, though it might be clearly erroneous, and perhaps of the most oppressive and ruinous character, is nevertheless effectually withdrawn from revision in this Court, because, forsooth, it was not entered in a particular line of procedure. Its other errors are not to be inquired into here, because it has the merit of having been irregularly entered in the Court below. The case of Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304, is one that may be referred to as an illustration of this view. In that case Gambert had made a motion for a new trial, and filed a statement in its support. The Court below struck this statement from its files. Gambert appealed from the order striking out the statement. He had no other effective remedy, for the order having removed his statement from the files, his motion for a new trial was necessarily left wholly unsupported, and had he appealed from an order denying the motion for a new trial, the order in that condition of the record must have been affirmed here.

“Upon considering the case of Quivey v. Gambert, this Court arrived at the conclusion that the Court below had erred in striking the statement from the files; but, on the authority of Leffingwell v. Griffin, Ketchum v. Crippen, etc., and because the erroneous order striking out the statement was not entered in the ordinary line of proceedings had on motion for a new trial, it held that it had no jurisdiction to correct this demonstrated error, because it could not entertain an appeal for that purpose. This Court, however, in dismissing the appeal for the supposed want of jurisdiction, advised the Court below to set aside its order striking out the statement, and to allow the motion for a new trial to proceed. This advice the Court below was, of course, at entire liberty to disregard — and, if it had chosen to do so, the consequence would have been that Gambert would, as the result of an erroneous order entered in the Court below, have been deprived of the benefit of his motion for a new trial, and placed beyond the power of this Court to relieve him from the consequences of that error.”

This was the substitution of a sort of jus precarium to supply the place of the constitutional authority which rightfully belonged to this Court, but which it had thrown aside in the assertion of a distinction, in itself impossible of maintenance, and which, if maintained, would be productive of nothing but confusion and embarrassment in the administration of justice.

These general views, as expressed in the Kimball case, received the assent of a majority of the Court at the time, and have since been followed here (Morris v. De Celis, 41 Cal. 331; Dooley v. Norton, 41 Cal. 439). The case of Quivey v. Gambert, and the others upon which it is based, must, therefore, be considered as overruled upon the question of the appellate jurisdiction of this Court to review “special orders made after final judgment.”

The Court below manifestly erred in striking the statement from its files, and its order in that respect must be reversed.

An appeal from the judgment is also presented by the record, but objection is taken by the respondent that it was not brought within the time prescribed by law, and should, therefore be dismissed.

The judgment was rendered, as we have seen, the 30th day of March, 1868, and the appeal therefrom was taken on the fourteenth day of July following. The action having been commenced originally in the Court of a Justice of the Peace, a judgment against the defendant was rendered there in May, 1863, and during the same month the case reached the County Court by appeal. If the County Court, when it rendered the judgment in question, in March, 1868, is to be considered as the Court in which the action was commenced, then, the appeal having been taken within one year after the rendition of that judgment, the objection that it was taken too late cannot prevail. (Practice Act, Sec. 336, Subd. 1.) But if, upon the other hand, the judgment rendered by the County Court is to be considered as "a judgment rendered on an appeal from an inferior Court," the appeal, not having been taken within ninety days after judgment rendered, is too late, and it must be dismissed. (Practice Act, Sec. 336, Subd. 2.)

Unquestionably the jurisdiction which the County Court first obtained over this cause, through the appeal taken on the 14th day of July, 1868, was appellate, and not original in its nature.

It is argued, however, that while the cause was yet pending in the County Court its jurisdiction over it ceased to be appellate and became original in its character. This change is said to have been effected by an Act, approved December 23d, 1863, providing for the transfer of cases to the Courts established by the constitutional amendments of 1862 (Acts 1863-4, p. 1), and by the Act of April 4th, 1864, concerning causes of action in forcible entries and unlawful detainers, as existing in 1863 (Acts 1863-4, p. 399), but upon examination of those Acts I am unable to see that any such change was effected thereby.

It is expressly declared in the first named Act, section six, that its true intent is that no suit, cause, or proceeding which may be pending in any Court shall be in anywise discontinned, but that "the same shall in all respects be proceeded in as though no change had taken place."

The provisions of the Act of December, 1873, irrespective of any question of their constitutionality (and none is made), place proceedings in forcible entry in all cases existing prior to December 31st, 1863, in statu quo "as to any act done or right accrued or established, or cause of action which existed, and as to any suit or proceeding upon or for the same, pending or in judgment," etc., except that no fine should be imposed or damages trebled.

The judgment of March 30th, 1868, was, therefore, "rendered on an appeal from an inferior Court," and the appeal therefrom to this Court, not having been taken within the time prescribed for appeals from judgments of that character, should, for that reason, be dismissed.

The appeal is taken lastly from an order refusing to set off an execution in favor of the defendant, and against David Calderwood, against an execution in favor of David Calderwood and Elizabeth Douglass, formerly Calderwood. The apparent facts being that the parties to the two executions are not the same, there was no error in denying the motion.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed; the order denying the motion to set off the executions is affirmed; and that striking the statement of the defendant from the files is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings on the motion for a new trial.

RHODES, C. J., concurring specially:

I concur in the judgment, except that portion which sustains the appeal from the order striking out the statement on new trial, and from that portion of the judgment I dissent, as I am of the opinion that Quivey v. Gambert, and the cases decided on the authority of that case, state the correct rule.

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

[A petition for a rehearing was afterwards filed, on behalf of the respondents, and in response thereto the following opinion was rendered:]

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

We understood from the record in this case, and understand now, that the Court below struck from its files the statement placed there by the defendant in support of the motion for a new trial. We understood, too, and still understand from the record, that the ground upon which the order was made by the Court below was that the statement, though filed, had never been served upon the plaintiff's attorney. We reversed this order because we held, as was held in Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 305, that such an order cannot be supported if objected to below. Even though service of a statement on motion for new trial had been required by a rule of the Court, or by statute (which it is not), the Court, while it might deny the motion for a new trial for failure to serve it (if the opposite party made it an objection to granting the motion), could not properly strike the statement from the files.

The petition for a rehearing is founded upon a total misapprehension of the decision made here, as well as of the ground upon which it rests, and it is therefore denied.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.

ASSESSMENT OF LAND AS AN ENTIRETY.—The San Pablo Rancho was assessed as an entirety to a large number of owners; some of the owners individually paid taxes upon thirteen thousand five hundred and ninety-eight acres, leaving four thousand three hundred and thirty-eight acres, owned by numerous persons, upon which the taxes were unpaid. Judgment was rendered against certain persons who were assessed, for delinquent taxes, ordering the sale of a certain number of acres undivided, without designating the interests of the judgment debtors in the land. Held, to be erroneous.

ASSESSMENT TO COPARTNERS, ETC.—Where land is assessed as an entirety to numerous persons, without designating the interest of any one of them, it is an assessment to them as copartners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, and not as owners in severalty.

ISSUE.—DUTY OF COURT TO EXONERATE OWNERS NOT DELINQUENT.—If such an assessment be legal, it would be the duty of the Court in giving judgment for delinquent taxes upon the land, to ascertain by its judgment what particular undivided interests in the land were delinquent, and to exonerate from the lien for the delinquent tax the interests of those who had already paid their proportion of the general burden.

SALE OF UNDIVIDED INTEREST IN LAND FOR TAXES. QUERY?—Whether, under an assessment to several persons of a tract of land in solido and as an entirety, an undivided interest can, in any case, be sold for a delinquent tax.

HOW ASSESSMENT SHOULD BE MADE.—It is the better practice to assess each particular person who claims an interest in a tract of land according to his interest or claim of title, and not to assess the whole tract in solido to all those who claim an interest in it.

RIGHT TO BE ASSESSED IN SEVERALTY.—When a person holds an interest in a tract of land in severalty, he is entitled to be assessed for his particular tract only.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Contra Costa County.

The San Pablo Rancho, consisting of seventeen thousand nine hundred and thirty-six acres, having been assessed as an entirety to numerous owners, without designating the individual interest, and the taxes upon a portion of it remaining unpaid, this suit was brought to enforce the payment of the delinquent taxes. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

B. S. Brooks, for Appellants, argued that the whole of the ranch having been assessed as an entirety, there was no authority for selling an undivided interest, and the judgment for that purpose was erroneous.

H. Mills, District Attorney, and Jo Hamilton, Attorney General, for Respondents.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

I have carefully reviewed the questions which are involved in this case, and am satisfied that the judgment of the Court below cannot be sustained. The San Pablo Rancho, containing about four leagues, was assessed, as an entirety, to about one hundred persons; but whether as copartners, tenants in common, joint tenants, or as owners, claimants, or occupants in severalty, does not appear on the face of the assessment. At the trial the Court found that the taxes had been paid on the whole rancho, except an undivided interest therein of four thousand three hundred and thirty-eight acres, and that the defendant, Tewksbury, had paid the tax on all his interest in the rancho. The judgment was that the lien for so much of the tax as was delinquent should be enforced by a sale of so much as was necessary of the undivided interest of four thousand three hundred and thirty-eight acres. But the judgment and the assessment do not designate to what particular persons this undivided interest was assessed. Indeed, no specific undivided interests were assessed to any particular persons; but the whole rancho, in solido, was assessed as an entirety to numerous persons, without designating the interest of any one of them. This can be regarded in no other light than as an assessment to the several persons as copartners, joint tenants, or tenants, in common, and not as owners or claimants in severalty. If it be admitted that such an assessment is unobjectionable, and in strict conformity with the statute, and that any one or more of the persons assessed may pay his or their proportion of the tax, and thus exonerate his or their interests in the land, it would be the duty of the Court, in that event, to ascertain by its judgment what particular undivided interests in the land were delinquent, and to exonerate from the lien for the delinquent tax the interests of those who had already paid their proportion of the general burden. Unless this be the proper rule there would be no method by which it could be ascertained what particular undivided interest was to be sold in satisfaction of the delinquent tax. Purchasers could not know what particular interests they were buying, and those of the owners who had already paid their just proportion of the tax would be forced to pay the whole, in order to protect their own interests from sale, for a tax which they did not justly owe. All this difficulty and hardship may be avoided by ascertaining what particular undivided interests were delinquent, and subjecting these, and these only, to sale. In this case a different course was pursued, and the Court ordered to be sold only an undivided interest equal to a specified number of acres, without designating to whom this interest belonged, or had been assessed, and without exonerating the remaining interests of those persons who had already paid their proportion of the tax.

For this reason the judgment must be reversed, but we reserve our opinion upon the point whether under an assessment of a tract of land in solido, and as an entirety, an undivided interest can, in any case, be sold for a delinquent tax. Whatever may be our ruling on this point, when it becomes necessary to decide it, we may say in advance, that it is certainly the better practice to assess each particular person who claims an interest in a tract of land according to his interest or claim of title, and not to assess the whole tract in solido to all those who claim an interest in it, as appears to have been done in this case. The mode of assessment here indicated would, doubtless, impose some additional labor on Assessors, but would greatly simplify the collection of taxes, and prevent much needless embarrassment and confusion in titles. And it is quite certain that when a person holds a tract of land in severalty, he is entitled to be assessed for his particular tract only, and not as a tenant in common with a hundred others claiming a large tract which includes the particular tract.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

JOHN A FAIRCHILD v. JOHN S. DOTEN.

JUDGMENT UPON AWARD APPEALABLE.—A judgment entered in accordance with an award is a judgment upon a proceeding commenced in a District Court, within the meaning of the Practice Act, and is, therefore, appealable.

JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT.—The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction from judgments rendered in District Courts upon awards.

CHARACTER OF PROCEEDINGS IN CASES OF AWARD.—Proceedings upon award are special in character, and they must be in substantial compliance with the statute, or the judgment upon the award will not be valid.

JURISDICTION OF COURT.—The statute provides only for entering the submission to awards, as a rule of Court. If it clearly appear that the parties meant merely that the award and not the submission should be made a rule of Court, or that judgment should be entered upon the award, the Court has no jurisdiction.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, County of Siskiyou.

The parties to this action, having failed to settle their partnership accounts, made the following agreement of submission to arbitration:

“We, the undersigned, hereby mutually agree to submit all matters and questions in difference between us, touching and concerning the settlement, liquidation, and adjustment of the accounts between us, the respective members of the firm of Fairchild & Doten, and said firm. But this arbitration is not intended to embrace and does not affect any sum or sums of money due said firm from others, or any sum or sums due from said firm to others, but is confined to accounts between the members of said firm and between said firm and the members thereof, save and excepting any indebtedness between said firm or the members thereof and their employes, which is to be considered in this arbitration, whose names are hereunto subscribed to A. P. McCarton, and E. M. Anthony; the said McCarton and Anthony, as soon after their meeting together as practicable, to select a third man, and they three or any two of them to hear and determine all questions and differences aforesaid, and to make their award in writing, at as early a day as practicable. And it is hereby further mutually agreed between the parties hereto, that judgment in the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the County of Siskiyou, may be rendered upon the award to be made pursuant to this submission, to the end that all matters in controversy between them, so far as settling, liquidating, and adjusting the accounts hereinbefore referred to are concerned, shall be finally concluded.

“Witness our hands and seals this 16th day of July, A. D. 1868.”

An award was filed December 7th, 1868, signed by A. P. McCarton and Horace Archer, stating that the two arbitrators selected by the parties had mutually agreed to appoint Archer as the third arbitrator; that they had proceeded to take testimony as to claims; had allowed some claims and rejected others; and finally agreed upon an award in favor of Fairchild and against Doten, for the sum of twelve thousand one hundred and thirty-nine dollars and thirty-two cents. Anthony refused to sign the award. Doten filed in the District Court exceptions to the award, upon the ground that Archer had not been selected until after the award was made, and then only by McCarton, and upon various other grounds. He moved to vacate the award. The Court denied the motion, and rendered judgment in accordance with the award.

Doten appealed from the order denying his motion. The appeal was dismissed (see 88 Cal. 286), and he then took this appeal from the final judgment.

George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

E. & C. A. Garter and E. Steele, for Respondent.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

There is great force and plausibility in the argument of the respondent that the evident intent of the framers of the Practice Act must have been that no appeal should be taken from a judgment rendered upon an award of arbitration; that review of the proceedings of the arbitrators should only be had upon a motion to vacate the award in the District Court, and that an appeal to this Court can only be taken from the order vacating or refusing to vacate the award.

I think, however, the judgment upon an award is a judgment upon a proceeding commenced in the District Court, within the meaning of section three hundred and thirty-six, and therefore is appealable under that statute. In that section, actions or proceedings commenced in the Court from which the appeal is taken are placed in opposition to such as might have been brought to that Court by appeal. An arbitration, for the purposes of that section, may be said to be a proceeding commenced in the District Court. The agreement submitting the matter to arbitrators takes the place of the pleadings, and the arbitrators, upon the submission being filed, become subject to the control of the Court, to a great extent, and their award is analagous to a judgment reported by a referee appointed to try a cause and report judgment. Section three hundred and eighty-eight does not, in express terms, deny an appeal from such judgment after a motion has been made to vacate the award. I think we ought not to refuse to take jurisdiction, unless it were expressly excepted from the statute granting appeals from the judgments. It is certain that the Constitution has given this Court appellate jurisdiction in cases of this character, and manifestly objections may well exist to a judgment upon an award which are not specified in the Practice Act as grounds of vacating the award. We will not presume that the Legislature has attempted to deny to parties a constitutional right, or to deprive this Court of its appellate jurisdiction.

The submission to arbitration contains a stipulation that judgment in the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, in and for the County of Siakiyou, may be rendered upon the award made in pursuance of the submission. There is no stipulation that the submission shall be entered as a rule of the Court, and it is claimed by the appellant that the District Court acquired no jurisdiction of the matter. The proceeding is a special one, and the statutory provisions must be substantially complied with or the judgment will not be valid. The statute provides only for entering the submission as a rule of Court. Numerous cases have been decided in which it has been held that an agreement that the award shall be made a rule of Court will be considered tantamount to an agreement that the submission shall be made a rule of Court. This seems very much like making a contract for the parties different from that which they have made for themselves; or at least to permit parol evidence to vary the written contract, and thus to nullify the statute, which requires the submission to be in writing. This liberal construction is only applied to those cases where it appears that the word "award" has been used by mistake, and the Court can see by the language used that the parties intended that the arbitration should be made under the statute. If it clearly appear that the parties meant merely that the award and not the submission should be made a rule of Court, or that judgment should be entered upon the award, the Court has no jurisdiction. In this case it is not even stipulated that the award shall be entered as a rule of the Court, but that judgment may be entered upon the award. The parties evidently did not intend that the arbitration should be conducted under a rule of the Court, or to avail themselves of the machinery of the Court to compel the attendance of witnesses or otherwise. The agreement was intended as authority to enter a judgment against the losing party. Upon this point the case stands upon all fours with the case of Ryan v. Dougherty, 30 Cal. 218. (See, also, Caldwell on Arbitration, 44; Cromwell v. Marsh, 1 Breese, 230.)

The Court derives its jurisdiction entirely from the statute, there being no cause pending in that Court in which judgment could be entered. The statute not having been complied with, the judgment was unauthorized.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

PRESENTATION OF CLAIM TO EXECUTOR.—An objection to a recovery on a claim against the estate of a deceased person on the ground that it was not presented to the executor for allowance, cannot be made for the first time in the Supreme Court, nor on motion for a new trial.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The action was commenced in February, 1870, on a joint promissory note for five thousand dollars. After the commencement of the suit the defendant, Coburn, died. In June, 1870, Harriet Coburn, the administratrix of his estate, was substituted as a defendant in his place, and about the end of the same month judgment was rendered against the administratrix and the other defendants jointly. A motion for a new trial having been denied, the administratrix and the defendants, Castle and Lambert, appealed.

J. H. Budd and W. L. Dudley, for Appellants.

The judgment against the administratrix of the estate of A. J. Coburn, deceased, was erroneous, because the note was never presented to her for allowance or rejection; and no recovery could be had thereon without proof of presentment. (Probate Act, Sec. 138; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555; Coleman v. Woodward, 28 Cal. 567.)

The judgment is entire, and being erroneous as to the administratrix, it is erroneous as to Castle and Lambert, and must be reversed as to all. (Camp v. Bennett, 16 Wend. 48; Easton v. Calendar, 11 Wend. 96; Richard v. Walton, 12 Johns. 434.)

Byers & Elliott, for Respondent.

The statute provides that "an action shall not abate by the death of a party," and that "in case of the death of a party * * * the Court may, on motion, allow the action to be continued by or against his representative." (Practice Act, Sec. 16; Gordon v. Sterling, 13 How. 405.)

The objection of want of presentation of the claim to the administratrix, should have been made before judgment by plea. She had an opportunity to plead any defense that might have arisen subsequent to the filing of the original answer.

If the judgment against the administratrix was improper, the judgment against the other defendants will still be maintained. The common law rule, that a judgment against a joint debtor must stand or fall, as a whole, has been modified, if not entirely changed, under our practice. (People v. Frisbie, 18 Cal. 402; Lewis v. Clarken, 18 Cal. 399; Chester v. Miller, 13 Cal. 558; Practice Act, Secs. 32, 145.)

The objection to the judgment against the administratrix is taken for the first time in this Court, and will not be considered. (Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action against the several joint makers of a promissory note, who all appeared and pleaded to the merits, except one or two, who were duly served and made default. The defendant Coburn, died after his answer was filed, and before the trial; and thereupon an order was duly entered that the action proceed against his administratrix. No additional pleadings were filed, and on the trial the Court made written findings, and entered a judgment for the plaintiff, against all the defendants, including the administratrix, from which judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, the administratrix and three other defendants prosecuted this appeal. One of the grounds of error relied upon on the motion for new trial, and on this appeal, is, that there was no proof that the plaintiff's demand had been presented to the administratrix of Coburn

Opinion of Rhodes, C. J., concurring.

Mr. Chief Justice RHODES delivered the following concurring opinion, in which Mr. Justice WALLACE and Mr. Justice TEMPLE concurred:

I concur in the opinion of Mr. Justice CROCKETT, except upon the question of the presentation of the claim to the administratrix. The doctrine of this Court is, that the objection to the recovery of a claim against the estate of a deceased person on the ground that it was not presented to the administrator, as provided in section one hundred and thirty-eight of the Probate Act, cannot be made for the first time in this Court — that it should have been first made in the Court below. (Hensch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555; Coleman v. Woodworth, 28 Cal. 567.) The purpose of the rule is to give the claimant an opportunity to supply the requisite pleadings or proof, as the case may require. In this case the objection that there was no proof of the presentation of the claim to the administratrix was made for the first time on the motion for a new trial. It was too late at that time for the plaintiff to have supplied the requisite proof. The objection must, therefore, be disregarded.

In my opinion, the judgment should be affirmed as to all the defendants, except as to Harriet Coburn, the administratrix of the estate of A. J. Coburn, deceased; and as to her the cause should be remanded, with directions that the judgment be modified by requiring the sum therein mentioned to be paid out of the estate of said deceased in due course of administration.

So ordered.

Mr. Justice SPRAGUE did not participate in either of the foregoing opinions.

MARGARET BRIODY v. T. D. CONRO AND JOSHUA HILTON.

COLLUSIVE ATTACHMENT CONFERS NO RIGHT AGAINST SUBSEQUENT BONA FIDE ATTACHMENT.—Where a member of a firm in failing circumstances made a firm note to his sister for a personal debt of his own to her, but which was barred by the Statute of Limitations, and procured her to sue the firm upon it, and attach the firm property, and he advanced the costs of suit, and had the property bid off in her name, and it was plain, from the circumstances, that the proceedings were collusive, and that the firm, as a firm, owed her nothing: held, that no title passed by such attachment and sale as against subsequent attaching creditors of the firm.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The cause was tried by jury in the Court below, and there was a verdict for the plaintiff. The main ground of defendants' motion for a new trial and on this appeal was insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict and judgment; and the briefs of counsel were chiefly directed to abstracting and discussing the weight of the evidence.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Eugene B. Drake, for Appellants.

Elisha Cook, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This is an action for the recovery of certain personal property—the liquors, groceries, etc., formerly belonging to the copartnership of Briody & Pardee, in San Francisco. The defendants, judgment creditors of the copartnership, levied an execution upon these goods, and sold them to satisfy their debt. The plaintiff (a sister of John Briody, one of the members of the firm of Briody & Pardee) thereupon brought this action, and recovered a judgment for the possession of the property, etc.; and a motion of defendants for a new trial having been denied, this appeal is taken from the judgment and the order denying the new trial.

It appears from the evidence given at the trial that Briody & Pardee were in failing circumstances; that the demand of the defendants, upon which they afterward recovered judgment, had been presented to them for collection, and that they had promised to pay it on the 16th day of June, 1865. On that day two attachments were levied upon the property of the firm of Briody & Pardee, the writs issuing in actions commenced in the Court of a Justice of the Peace—one in the name of the plaintiff Margaret as plaintiff, the other in the name of one Brower as plaintiff. The action in the name of the plaintiff, Margaret, was brought upon a promissory note executed, or purporting to be executed, to her or to her order, by Briody & Pardee, bearing date May 1st, 1865, for the sum of three hundred dollars, payable thirty days after date, without grace, and bearing interest at the rate of one and one half per cent per month from date until paid. The action brought in the name of Brower as plaintiff was brought upon another note, similar upon its face to the first in all respects, except that it bore date June 1st, 1865, and fell due fifteen days after date. It purported to have been made to the plaintiff, Margaret, as payee, and indorsed by her to Brower. The indorsement made of this note to Brower was made by the plaintiff, Margaret, at the suggestion of Harding, a Constable, who advised that both suits should not be commenced in her name, but that one of them be commenced in the name of Brower. The dates borne by the notes were false in fact—they were both of them really made on the 16th day of June, 1865, being drawn up by Harding, the Constable, and antedated by him, the very day upon which they were put in suit. It appears that upon that day one Brownell applied to Harding to have an action brought against Briody & Pardee upon "a note for five hundred dollars or six hundred dollars." Harding informed him that a demand so large in amount as that exceeded the jurisdiction of a Justice of the Peace, and thereupon the notes in suit were prepared and executed, one of the notes indorsed to Brower, and the attachments immediately issued, one in the name of the plaintiff, the other in that of Brower as plaintiff. Harding, the Constable, when executing these writs of attachment against the firm of Briody & Pardee, collected of the latter the costs of both suits—John Briody taking the money out of the drawer in the store to pay him these costs. A keeper was placed in charge, but the store was not closed; in fact, the business of the firm proceeded as usual. No defense to the actions brought by the plaintiff and by Brower being made by Briody & Pardee, judgments by default were promptly entered, to wit, June nineteenth, and executions, immediately issued thereon, were at once levied upon the liquors, groceries, etc., in the store, and also upon a horse and wagon used in conducting the business. A sale could not, however, have ordinarily taken place until after an advertisement of five days, as required by the statute regulating sales of personal property upon execution; but the defendants stipulated to waive the advertisement required by law, and the sale accordingly took place on the twenty-first of June. The proceedings at the sale seem to have fallen into some confusion, notwithstanding the evident anxiety of the defendants in execution that it should be both speedy and effective. At the request of John Briody, the Constable exposed to sale the property of the firm, consisting of liquors, groceries, etc., including horse and wagon, in one entire lot, and, according to the understanding of the Constable making the sale, the plaintiff, Margaret, and her

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action to recover the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars, the value of two hundred and sixty-nine shares of the capital stock of the Exchequer Mining Company, alleged to have been converted by the defendants. It appears that in 1867 Joseph Tilden hypothecated five hundred shares of the stock of that company with defendants, as collateral security for a debt of eighteen thousand six hundred and seventy-five dollars. Of these shares the two hundred and sixty-nine referred to stood in Tilden's name as "trustee," on the books of the company, but belonged in fact to the plaintiff.

There having been a judgment in the Court below in favor of defendants, and a motion for new trial denied, the plaintiff appealed.

J. W. Winans, for Appellant.

Defendants knew that the stock belonged to the plaintiff. But even if Tilden had hypothecated the stock for his debt to defendants, and defendants had believed the stock to be his, and there were no facts to put them on inquiry, still plaintiff is entitled to recover, under the express provisions of the statute and otherwise. (Hittell's Digest, 940; McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, 55 Barb. 59; Ballard v. Burgett, 47 Barb. 646; Weston v. Bear River and A. W. and M. Co., 5 Cal. 186; 6 Cal. 429; Naglee v. Pacific Wharf Co., 20 Cal. 523; Strout v. Natoma W. and M. Co., 9 Cal. 78.)

Again, the certificates were made to "Jos. Tilden, trustee," and the legal title to them was never transferred from Tilden to defendants by indorsement, and never became the property of defendants. (Payne v. Bensley, 8 Cal. 266.) The fact that the certificates were in the name of Jos. Tilden, as trustee, was sufficient to put defendants upon inquiry, and subject them to the equities of the true owner, even if the stock of plaintiff was otherwise hypothecated and was hypothecated to them. (Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 535; Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 571; Brockway v. Allen, 17 Wend. 40; Urquhart v. McIver, 4 Johns. 116; De la Chauvette v. Bank of England, 9 B. & C. 205; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354.)

Argument for Respondents.

The use of the word "trustee" in the indorsement, corresponding to the word "trustee" attached to the name of the party to whom the certificate was issued in the body of the certificate, made Tilden's indorsement only a qualified one, and saved the rights of the plaintiff in the paper. (1 Parsons on Bills, 95; Lawrence v. Clark, 36 N. Y. 128; Farrington v. Frankfort Bank, 24 Barb. 554; Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cowen, 538; Hicks v. Hinds, 9 Barb. 530; Sayre v. Nichols, 7 Cal. 540; Darrell v. Haley, 1 Paige Ch. 493; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 364; Holbrook v. Mix, 1 E. D. Smith, 154-160.)

John B. Harmon, for Respondents.

Brewster, having given Tilden the usual indicia of ownership, and of the right of disposal, by delivering the stock to him with power to put it in his own name, and to dispose of it, Tilden's pledge to Sime & Co. was valid; and the fact that, when pledged, the certificates stood in the name of "Jos. Tilden, trustee," did not affect the power of disposal, whether by sale or pledge.

Our statute (Hittell, 942) authorizes the party holding stock as trustee to vote it—recognizing him as the owner of the legal title. It is a matter of common notoriety that this section of the statute has given rise to the general custom, with bankers and brokers, to put stock in the name of one of their clerks, as trustee, the sole object being to vote the stock, or to keep track of it. But when such trustee indorses the certificate no one ever asks for whom he is trustee. If the person named be the real owner the word is surplusage; if he is not, then the owner has permitted the trustee to hold himself out as owner, and he is bound. (Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 399.) The rule applicable is this: Where the owner of personal property has voluntarily given to another the usual indicia of the right of disposal, the owner is bound by any disposition made to persons acting upon the faith of such indicia. (Saltus v. Everett, 20 Wend. 278; Com. Bank of Buffalo v. Kortright, 22 Wend. 361; Western Transp. Co. v. Marshall, 37 Barb. 509; Crocker v. Crocker, 31 N. Y. 507; Fatman v. Lobach, 1 Duer, 354.)

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

There are in this case but two material questions of fact, and two of law. The questions of fact are: First, Did Tilden pledge to defendants plaintiff's stock as collateral security for a loan made at the time? Second, Did the defendants then have actual notice that the stock belonged to plaintiff and not to Tilden? On both these points there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. The defendant Hastings testified explicitly that this, with other stock, was hypothecated with the defendants by Tilden, as security for a loan made at the time, and that they had no knowledge or notice that the plaintiff owned any part of it, or that it belonged to any one else than Tilden. The defendant Sime testifies substantially to the same facts; and on the first point they are corroborated to some extent by the witness Sharp. On the other hand, Tilden testifies that the plaintiff's stock was not included in the hypothecation; and his testimony tends to show that Sime had actual notice that the stock belonged to the plaintiff. It was for the Court below to weigh the evidence, and to determine what credence the respective witnesses were entitled to. In such cases it is not our practice to disturb the judgment on the ground that it is not justified by the evidence, even though we should consider it to be against the weight of evidence.

The questions of law are: First, Whether the fact that the stock stood on the books of the corporation in the name of Tilden, "trustee," was sufficient to put the defendants upon inquiry as to the plaintiff's title, and operated as constructive notice of his equitable rights. Second, Whether the fact that the plaintiff, on his departure for Europe, had placed the stock in Tilden's hands for sale, with authority to transfer it on the books of the corporation, had the effect to clothe him with such indicia of ownership as to protect the defendants, if in good faith and ignorance of the plaintiff's rights they advance money to Tilden on the hypothecation of the stock.

I am duly sensible of the gravity of these questions, in a community where transactions in stocks to a large amount are daily made, and where it is a matter of general notoriety that it is a common practice to transfer stocks into the name of some person as "trustee," for the sole purpose of concealing the name of the real owner, whose transactions in buying or selling a particular stock, if his name were known, might operate to enhance or depress its market value. To avoid this result, and also, possibly, with a view to escape assessments upon stocks of doubtful value, or to protect his credit from the damage to which it might be exposed if it were known that he was a large operator in certain stocks, the owner frequently resorts to the device of causing the stock to be transferred into the name of some other person, as "trustee." In such cases the trustee is a mere man of straw, having no interest in the stock nor any trust to perform, except to manage and dispose of it as the owner shall direct. This practice has become so notorious in this State that we cannot affect to be ignorant of it.

In view of the general prevalence of this practice, what effect in law should be given to the fact that there is appended to the name of the person to whom the certificate is issued the word "trustee?" Shall this be held to operate as constructive notice to all persons dealing with the so-called "trustee" that he is not the owner? Must they deal with him at arm's length, and if they shall purchase the stock, or loan him money upon it, do they take the hazard that on the next day, or the next month, the secret owner may disclose himself and repudiate the transaction and demand the stock? In my opinion, considerations of public policy and common justice demand that, when stock is placed in the name of a "trustee" under these circumstances, the secret owner shall be bound by the acts of his "trustee" dealing with persons who have no actual notice of the relations between the parties. If nothing more appear on the books of the corporation, or on the face of the certificate, to indicate the trust and its nature, than the mere addition to the name of the word "trustee," the owner, who has clothed his agent with the legal title, one of the highest indicia of ownership, should bear the consequences resulting from the acts of the agent, rather than an innocent person who advances the money on the faith that the agent is the real owner, or at least has authority to sell or hypothecate the stock. I am not, however, to be understood as holding that words may not be inserted in a certificate which would so clearly indicate a trust and its nature as to limit the power of the trustee, and operate as constructive notice of the equities of the cestui que trust. All that is intended to be decided is, that the mere addition of the word "trustee" after the name in the certificate is not, in this State, of itself, nothing more appearing, to be deemed constructive notice of the equities of a secret owner of the stock. If it is intended that the so-called trustee shall not have power to sell or hypothecate the stock, without the express consent of the equitable owner, it is an easy matter to limit his authority by apt words in the certificate. In the absence of such words, the mere addition of the word "trustee" after the name will not have the effect to limit the absolute power of disposition, or to operate as constructive notice of any secret equities, as against persons who, in good faith, purchase or advance money on the stock without notice. Standing alone, the mere fact that a person holding the legal title, and apparently having the right of disposition, is styled "trustee," raises no implication that he has not authority to sell or hypothecate the stock in the usual course of business. If it should be held to raise a presumption that some one else was the owner, nevertheless the inference would be, that, in clothing the trustee with the legal title, he had invested him with authority to sell and hypothecate in the usual course of business. And the rule is universal, that where the legal title and apparent right of disposition is vested in a person upon some secret trust, which restricts the powers of the trustee as between the parties, nevertheless the rights of purchasers, pledgees, and mortgagees, in good faith, for a valuable consideration paid at the time, and without notice, are unaffected by the trust.

The transaction between the plaintiff and Tilden was, in my opinion, a secret trust within the true sense and spirit of this rule. When about to leave for Europe the plaintiff indorsed his certificates of stock, so that they could be transferred in his absence, and deposited them with Tilden for sale, knowing that he, thereby, enabled him to transfer the legal title and apparent ownership into his own name. He placed Tilden in a position to represent the stock as its true owner. The indorsement and delivery of the certificates to him, so that they could pass by delivery and might be transferred at his option, clothed him with all the indicia of ownership, and enabled him to hold himself forth as the real owner. If Tilden had caused the stock to be transferred to himself, omitting the word "trustee" from the certificate, it cannot be doubted that he would, apparently, have been the real owner, with a perfect title. There would have been nothing on the face of the certificate, or in the corporate books, to awaken the slightest suspicion that he was not the owner. In that event, if the defendants, finding his title perfectly regular on its face, had loaned him money on a pledge of the stock, without notice of the plaintiff's equities, the lien for their advances would have been unquestionably good as against the plaintiff. After enabling Tilden to invest himself with a legal title, perfectly regular on its face, and apparently valid, the plaintiff would be estopped to deny Tilden's title as against purchasers or pledgees who advanced their money in good faith in the ordinary course of business, and without notice of the plaintiff's equities. If the rule were otherwise, there would be an end to transactions in stocks. If purchasers and pledgees dealing with titles strictly regular and apparently valid on their face, are to take the hazard of all latent equities existing in the hands of any antecedent holder of the stock, prudent persons would abstain from such perilous ventures. If Tilden, in violation of his agreement with the plaintiff, has caused the stock to be transferred to himself, and has hypothecated it for his own account, instead of selling it for account of the plaintiff, he is liable in damages for a breach of the contract. But after enabling Tilden to invest himself with the legal title and apparent ownership, on the faith of which he obtained advances from the defendants, without notice of the plaintiff's equities, the plaintiff occupies the relation of cestui que trust attempting to assert a secret trust against persons who, in ignorance of the trust, have made advances on the property to the trustee holding the legal title and apparent ownership. If Tilden has perpetrated a fraud, the plaintiff enabled him to do it, by placing it in his power to invest himself with the legal title and apparent right of disposition, and his equities are inferior to those of the defendants, who, in good faith, and without notice, made advances on the stock in the belief that Tilden was the owner, or, at least, had the right to hypothecate it. There is nothing new in these propositions. In this State stock is personal property, and the general rule is, that if the owner of such property places it in the possession of another, and confers upon him the usual indicia of ownership or right of disposal, he is bound by any disposition made of it, to one who acquires it, without notice, for a valuable consideration on the faith of such indicia. (Saltus v. Everett, 20 Wend. 278, 280; Com. Bank, etc., v. Kortright, 22 Wend. 361; Western Transportation Company v. Marshall, 37 Barb. 509, 515; Crocker v. Crocker, 31 N. Y. 507; Fatman v. Lobach, 1 Duer, 354; 2 Kent's Com. 621; Story's Agency, Secs. 83, 94, 228; Bridenbecker v. Lowell, 32 Barb. 17; Johnson v. Jones, 4 Barb. 373; Bank of Metropolis v. New England Bank, 11 How. 240.)

The mere delivery of the possession of personal property does not, standing alone, constitute such an indicium of ownership as will bind the owner. For example: If A. loan his horse to B. temporarily, the latter can make no disposition of it which would bind the owner. But if the delivery be accompanied by an absolute bill of sale, and if B. exhibits the bill of sale to a purchaser who buys in good faith, without notice, in the belief that B. is the owner, A. will be bound by it, even though it was secretly agreed between A. and B. that notwithstanding the bill of sale the horse was to remain the property of A. (Ballard v. Burgett, 47 Barb. 646; Coril v. Hill, 4 Denio, 327.) There must be something more than the mere delivery of the possession to constitute such indicia of ownership as will bind the owner. But in this case the plaintiff not only delivered to Tilden the possession of the certificates, but accompanied the delivery with an authority to transfer the stock on the corporate books, whereby Tilden was enabled to procure new certificates in his own name, vesting in him the legal title and apparent right of disposal. This brings the case fully within the rule already discussed, and estops the plaintiff from setting up his title in derogation of the defendants' lien.

APPEARANCE OF COUNSEL.—Where counsel appears expressly for certain defendants in an action, his signature to papers in the case after that time as the attorney for the defendants, will be construed as limited to those defendants for whom he expressly appeared.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff sued to have certain deeds from Treadway to Dellinger, and from Dellinger to Reay, set aside, on the ground that the first was made with intent to defraud creditors, and that the second was obtained by Reay with full knowledge of such fraudulent intent; and also to enjoin defendant Ellis, as Sheriff, from executing the deed for the property in suit to Reay. The Court found in favor of the plaintiff, and rendered judgment in his favor. Defendants Reay and Ellis moved for a new trial; the motion was denied, and on appeal the order denying the motion was reversed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. A. Lawrence, for Appellants.

James B. Townsend and Nathaniel Bennett, for Respondent.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The attorney for Reay and Ellis moves that the appeal in the above entitled cause be considered, and that the cause be determined as to defendants Dellinger and Treadway. On the former hearing it was considered by the Court — and such seems to have been the understanding of counsel — that the motion for a new trial had been made and the appeal taken by Reay and Ellis alone. Upon a reëxamination of the record we are satisfied that our former construction was correct. Counsel appeared expressly for Reay and Ellis. His signature to pleadings, etc., after that time, as the attorney for the defendants, will be construed as limited to those defendants for whom he expressly appeared.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventeenth Judicial District, Los Angeles County.

Ejectment for eighty acres of land in Los Angeles County. There having been a judgment for defendants, and motion for new trial overruled, plaintiff appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

A. Brunson, for Appellant.

The boundaries of the claim of Quijada, plaintiff's grantor, were well defined. They were marked by furrows and ditches, and that in a county where nine tenths of the crops are and for the last twenty years have been raised without fence or inclosure. These facts are entitled to some significance, as they enter into the reason of the law, and for that reason become a part of the law itself. It was not necessary under the Possessory Act that Quijada should have the entire tract inclosed in order to have the legal possession of the whole, or to eject a naked intruder. (Hitt. Gen. Laws, Sec. 6,795; Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291; Doran v. Central P. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 248; Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 333.)

A purchaser in good faith from a prior possessor in good faith can expel a mere naked trespasser from lands claimed by metes and bounds, whether inclosed or uninclosed, especially when the lines and exterior limits are all plainly marked on the soil and traced upon the public records of the county. Nor can we see that this principle, recognized as law by the authorities, has been overruled by Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 276.

H. T. Hazard, for Respondents.

The deed from Quijada to plaintiff was void as to the land in controversy. Quijada himself never had possession of it, and there is no pretense that plaintiff ever was on it. There was no constructive possession in the plaintiff. (Cannon v. Union Lumber Company, 38 Cal. 672.)

The decision in Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 276, is a sufficient answer to the argument on the other side. It is there clearly held that an entry on part of a tract of land under a deed which the grantee knows conveys no title, will not establish constructive possession of the whole tract. In this case, therefore, even if the plaintiff had made an entry, which he did not, it would not aid him.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

Action of ejectment, in which the plaintiff relies upon the prior possession of his grantor. On the trial the plaintiff proved a claim and affidavit made by his grantor under the Act known as the Possessory Act, passed April 20th, 1852, for a tract of land, including the tract in controversy. He also proved the occupation by his grantor of a portion of the land described in his possessory claim, but not of any portion of the land now in the possession of the defendants, except that the witness states that he had a fence on one side, and furrows were run with a plow around the whole tract, and stakes set at the corners and along the lines. This is manifestly insufficient to prove actual possession. After the conveyance to plaintiff, his grantor remained in possession, with plaintiff's consent, until he had removed his crops. Plaintiff never entered into possession of any portion of the premises under his deed. The possession of the vendor, after the deed was executed, was in accordance with the contract of sale. But if the continued possession of the vendor, with the consent of the plaintiff, can be considered as an entry under his deed on the part of the plaintiff, it does not appear that he had the actual possession of any portion sued for, and the deed, under such circumstances—the lands being public lands, were never in the possession of the vendor—would not extend his possession by construction. (Wolf-skill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 276.)

NATHANIEL GRAY v. JOSEPH C. COLLINS, LOUIS TRENCH, THOMAS CHAPMAN, WILLIAM SHERIDAN, AND S. B. THOMPSON.

PEACEABLE AND ACTUAL POSSESSION UNDER FORCIBLE ENTRY LAW.—In a forcible entry case, where it appeared that the property was a city lot; that plaintiff built a substantial fence, which, with the house and fence of a neighbor on one side, made a complete inclosure, and planted two dozen ornamental trees along two sides of it; and that this state of things continued two months, when defendants entered; held, that the plaintiff was in the peaceable and actual possession of the lot, within the meaning of the forcible entry law, without residing or having a house upon it.

A FENCE ALONE AS SHOWING ACTUAL POSSESSION.—Residence upon premises is not indispensable to their actual possession, nor is cultivation necessary, nor improvement, as contradistinguished from the erection of fences or substantial barriers, marking the line of the premises over which control is asserted.

CULTIVATION OF CITY LOT—ORNAMENTAL TREES.—The erection of a substantial fence and planting of ornamental trees around a city lot amount to actual possession and cultivation of it, as appropriate to such lot as the seasonable plowing and sowing of agricultural lands would be, and equally significant as acts manifesting control over the premises.

WHAT IS A "FORCIBLE" ENTRY?—The forcible entry statute now in force (Stats. 1865-6, p. 768) was evidently drawn to avoid nice distinctions as to the amount of force necessary to constitute an entry a forcible one within its intent.

"CIRCUMSTANCES OF TERROR" MAKING AN ENTRY FORCIBLE.—Where a large number of men were employed to take possession of premises in the possession of another, though he had no house on them, and was not personally present, and they entered hurriedly at daylight, tore down one fence, and put up another and a shanty, and fired off a pistol shot to celebrate its completion; held, that there was sufficient "circumstances of terror" to make the entry a forcible one.

Statement of Facts.

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The lot in controversy had a front of forty-eight feet nine inches on Post street, and seven feet nine inches on Sutter street, being a long strip in the middle of a block. The entry, as found by the referee, was made under the following circumstances:

"On the morning of the 17th or 18th of February, 1869, the defendant Collins, a little after daylight, with a force of ten men, eight of whom were carpenters, employed by him in putting up a building in the neighborhood, went into the lot and tore down the fence on the west line, and constructed another parallel with the east line of the lot, and also put up a cross fence, cutting out plaintiff's previous inclosure midway between Post and Sutter street lines — the lot thus inclosed being about fifty feet front on Post street, and running back half way to Sutter street. While the fence was being taken down and rebuilt on the new line, and the cross fence put up, a shanty was erected on the lot, the material of which was brought from an adjoining lot by the defendant and his men immediately on their arrival in the morning. The fence and the shanty were hurriedly put up in a rough manner, and all completed by eleven o'clock in the forenoon of the day when the work was commenced; and the completion of the job was celebrated by a pistol shot. Two men in the employ of the defendant Collins remained in charge of the property."

As conclusions of law, from the facts of the plaintiff's possession as stated in the opinion and the defendants' entry as above set forth, the referee found that the plaintiff had no actual possession of the lot, and that defendants had not been guilty of any forcible entry. Judgment having been entered in accordance with the referee's report for defendants, the plaintiff appealed.

Gray & Haven, for Appellant.

The possession of plaintiff was actual, and peaceable, and sufficient. (Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. 33; Hicks v. Davis, 4 Cal. 67; House v. Keiser, 8 Cal. 501; Preston v. Kehoe, 15 Cal. 316; Minturn v. Burr, 16 Cal. 107; Hussey v. McDermott, 23 Cal. 413; Cummins v. Scott, 23 Cal. 527; Hoag v. Pierce, 28 Cal. 187; Brummagin v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24.)

The object of the forcible entry statute is to prohibit not simply an actual breach of the peace, but everything which would tend to produce a breach of the peace. And as an entry with a strong force of men upon the possession of another would tend to or might lead to a breach of the peace, whether any person was present or not at the time of entry, all such modes of entry are prohibited. And this we understand to be the doctrine established by this Court in Brown v. Perry, 39 Cal. 23.

The entry of defendants was wrongful and forcible. The question of legal right to enter relates to the fact of possession and not of title. The law will not allow one to violate the actual, open, and peaceable possession of another, and then justify the act on the ground of a belief that he had a better title. And the quo animo must be determined by one's acts, and not by his declarations. Collins was fully aware of the possession of plaintiff, and of his claim of title. His entry, to put the best construction upon it, was made to obtain an advantage in law over the plaintiff, and consequently not made in good faith. (Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410.) The plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the findings.

Bartlett, Pratt & Bartlett, for Respondents.

Plaintiff did not have actual possession sufficient to maintain the action. There are two kinds of possession known to the law — actual and constructive. Either may, perhaps, do in ejectment, or to put the Statute of Limitations in motion. But only actual possession will suffice in forcible entry and detainer. This distinction in cases should be kept constantly in view, and care should also be had not to confound the terms “adverse possession,” “prior possession,” and “actual possession.” Thus, in ejectment, a prior possession might be sufficient, which fell far short of being actual possession. The question of its being an actual or a constructive possession might not arise, as either might be sufficient in such a case. So, a possession might be adverse, and put the Statute of Limitations in motion; which fell far short of actual possession. The Statute of Limitations has itself prescribed that a substantial inclosure shall constitute adverse possession; but nowhere in the statutes or decisions is it said that a substantial inclosure is sufficient evidence, or even any evidence, of actual possession.

The mere building of a fence and planting a few shrubs, and then abandoning the premises without any intention of making any other use of them at any definite period — the doing of these things for the mere purpose of thereby holding the premises, without any reference to any beneficial use of them — does not constitute such a possession, use, or occupation as is contemplated by the statute.

The entry was not forcible. No actual force, menace, or threat was used, either in the entry or detainer. Nor was the entry “unlawful,” within the meaning of the law. To have been so, it must have been made with a wrongful intent, without any color of title, and mala fide. (Dickinson v. Maguire, 9 Cal. 46; Thompson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 527;

Opinion of the Court — WALLACE, J.

Janson v. Brooks, 29 Cal. 214; Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This is an action of forcible entry and detainer. The case was sent to a referee to take the testimony and to report a judgment. He found the facts, and his conclusions of law therefrom, and reported a judgment for the defendants, which was, thereupon, entered. The lot in controversy is situated in the City of San Francisco, between Sutter, Post, Webster, and Fillmore streets. In November, 1868, the plaintiff built a fence, which, with the house and fence of the occupant of a lot adjoining this on the west, made a complete inclosure of it. This fence which he then constructed was built of redwood posts, three by four inches, set in the ground at proper distances, with three fence boards nailed thereon in the usual manner, and also a fourth board nailed on the top of the posts, forming a cap — the whole constituting a substantial fence about four feet high. After thus inclosing the lot the plaintiff caused some two dozen trees to be set out in line along the two sides of it. He did not reside upon the lot, and had no house thereon. This state of things continued until about the middle of February, 1869, a period of between two and three months, when the defendants entered.

The first question to be considered is as to whether these facts established in the plaintiff the peaceable, actual possession of the premises at the time the entry occurred. That his possession, such as it was, was peaceable, there is no doubt, for until the entry of the defendants, some two months after possession was taken, nothing had occurred to disturb it. Nor is there any doubt that it was actual in that sense which is contemplated by the statute of April, 1866, concerning forcible entries and unlawful detainers.

Residence upon the premises is not indispensable to their actual possession — nor is cultivation necessary — nor improvement, as contradistinguished from the erection of fences or substantial barriers, marking the line of the premises over which control is asserted. The subjection of the premises to the exclusive will and control of the possessor by means of the exercise, by him, of visible and notorious acts of dominion over them, constitute actual possession. The acts thus visibly and notoriously done upon and about the premises, and their present effect as excluding the interference of all other persons, are the evidences through which the actual possession is made to appear. These acts of possession will necessarily depend somewhat upon the nature of the premises appropriated; the character of the soil; the uses to which it may be applied; and, in a city lot especially, sometimes will depend upon its situation, as being near to or remote from a rapidly improving locality. In this case there was the erection of a substantial fence, connecting with the adjoining house and fence so as to form a complete inclosure, and the planting of ornamental trees upon the premises — this amounted to cultivation, suitable to a city lot such as this, as appropriate to such lot as the seasonable plowing and sowing of agricultural lands would be, and, as an act manifesting control over the premises, equally significant.

The first count of the complaint is for forcible entry and detainer, under the Act concerning forcible entries and detainers (Acts of 1865-6, p. 768), and the only question remaining to be considered concerns the character of the entry and detainer here, as being forcible or otherwise. The statute (section one) denounces all entries into premises, at the time in the actual peaceable possession of another, if made with violence and strong hand, whether such entry be by the actual breaking into the house situate on the premises, or by any kind of violence, or "circumstances of terror." Its aim is the conservation of the public peace, which it would prefer to the assertion of a mere private right, when made in such a manner as would be likely to provoke a breach of the peace.

The statute of this State now in force is evidently drawn with a design to avoid nice distinctions as to the amount of force necessary to constitute the entry a forcible one within its intent. "Circumstances of terror" accompanying the entry, no less than "violence," "strong hand," "breaking open doors," etc., are within the prohibition of the Act.

Here, the large number of men employed, the unusual time at which the entry was made, the hasty manner in which the possession was seized upon, the firing of small arms, etc., are "circumstances of terror," which leave no room to doubt that the entry was not of that peaceable character which the law permits to be made. No actual collision ensued in this instance, it is true, but the lawlessness of the conduct of Collins, the principal defendant, and of the other defendants who acted under his direction in making the entry, is not, on that account, less apparent. It tended strongly to produce a breach of the peace, and that it did not result in an actual collision is attributable to something else than to their deportment.

The judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to render judgment for the plaintiff upon the report of the referee, with costs of action, but without damages; and it is so ordered.

JOHN H. HILL v. J. W. HASKIN.

ADVANCES ON JOINT VENTURE — WHEN STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS COMMENCES RUNNING.— In an action by Hill, to recover one half his advances made under a contract between him and Haskin, whereby they agreed to buy and sell on joint account certain mining stock, Hill to advance all the money and Haskin to repay one half with interest, and Hill to hold all the stock purchased as security for his advances, but without specifying any time within which the repayment was to be made: held, that an offer to account and a demand for repayment by Hill were conditions precedent to his right to maintain the action, and that the Statute of Limitations would not commence running against him until such offer and demand.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Chas. H. Sawyer and G. W. Gordon, for Appellant.

It is an undoubted rule of law that the cause of action arises as soon as the party plaintiff has a right to apply to the proper tribunals for relief. In other words, the breach of contract by the defendant is requisite to quicken into life a correlative right of action in the plaintiff. But in the case at bar no such breach can be charged against defendant. He cannot be said to have been in default for not paying, when he had no notice of a liability existing against him from the only party cognizant of the fact. (1 Chitty on Pl. 330; Chitty on Con. 800; Hartland v. Jukes et al., 1 Hurlstone & Coltman Ex. 667; Sinkler v. Indiana Co., 8 Penn., P. & W. 149; Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173.)

A fair test of the accuracy of our position would be to suppose the suit at bar inverted — that defendant had sued as plaintiff, on precisely the same contract and the same facts, except that he, on the 27th day of May, 1865, for the first time had demanded from the present plaintiff an accounting, and offered performance. Would opposing counsel then be found on that side contending for a Statute of Limitations! It seems inequitable, illogical, and opposed to legal principles, that either party should be able successfully to elude liability, under the pretense that the other was not vigilant, when by his own conduct he has disarmed suspicion and constructively approved of the course of procedure.

H. F. Crane and Wm. S. Wells, for Respondent.

The obligation of defendant to repay arises clearly upon this written contract, as he there promises to pay money to plaintiff upon a certain contingency, to wit, in case plaintiff makes certain purchases of stock, and pays for the same, defendant is then to repay to plaintiff one half of the advances, and no other time of payment is specified. Upon the purchase and advance by plaintiff there immediately arose an obligation on defendant to repay to plaintiff one half his advance, and no demand was necessary, especially where the defendant had full knowledge and was consenting to the transaction. (Thompson v. Ketchim, 8 Johns. 148; Parsons on Con. 552; 5 Barn. & Adolph. 911; Chitty on Con. 733; Aden v. Rightmire, 20 Johns. 365; Nelson v. Bostwick, 5 Hill, 37; 22 Wend. 125.) In Stover v. Flock, 30 N. Y. 64, a case similar to this, the Court held that the statute commenced running from the time the advance was made. The plaintiff's theory would permit a demand of this character to run for an indefinite period of time, and then he could revive the same by a demand. A doctrine which leads to such preposterous conclusions cannot be within the terms or spirit of the Statute of Limitations.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

In 1863 the plaintiff and defendant entered into a partnership venture, for the purchase and sale, from time to time, on joint account, of the stock of a specified mining company. The contract was that the plaintiff was to advance all the money necessary for the purchases, and the defendant was to repay to the plaintiff one half of such advances, with interest at a stipulated rate; but no time was specified within which repayment was to be made. It was further provided that the plaintiff was to hold all the stock purchased, as a security for his advances, and that, if requested by the plaintiff, the defendant would deposit additional security against loss from a depreciation of the stock. The action is brought to recover one half the amount advanced by the plaintiff for the purchase of the stock; and the complaint avers that in December, 1863, and January, 1864, the several purchases of stock were made by the plaintiff, with the knowledge and consent of the defendant, and that the stock proved to be utterly worthless, and the sum invested in its purchase has consequently become a total loss. The complaint further avers that the plaintiff, before suit was brought, offered to account with the defendant concerning said stocks, and demanded payment of the amount due from the defendant.

The defense relied upon is the Statute of Limitations, the action having been commenced in 1868, more than four years after the date of the last advance of money by the plaintiff.

On the trial it appeared that in May, 1865, the plaintiff for the first time offered to account with the defendant concerning said stocks, and demanded payment of the balance due. Having proved the other allegations of the complaint the plaintiff rested, and the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was granted, on the ground that the plaintiff's demand was barred by the statute. From this judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff has appealed.

It is clear that if the plaintiff could have maintained an action against the defendant for his share of the advances immediately after they were made, without a previous offer to account concerning the stocks and a demand of payment, the action is barred by the statute. The only question, therefore, is whether a previous offer to account and a prior demand of payment were conditions precedent to his right to maintain the action, and I think they were. There appears to have been no limitation in the contract as to the quantity or price of the stock to be purchased, or of the time within which it was to be purchased. The plaintiff was at liberty to purchase any quantity of the stock, at any price, and at any time his judgment dictated, until the contract was put an end to by the action of one or both of the parties, and the plaintiff was entitled to the custody of all the stock as a security for his advances. He also had authority to sell the stock on their joint account. Until informed by the plaintiff of the result of these transactions, or, at least, until the plaintiff offered to account concerning them, and informed the defendant of the balance due, the latter was in no default. The complaint, it is true, avers that the defendant had actual notice of the purchases which were made; but he could not have known, until informed by the plaintiff, that he had made no other purchases, nor that he had made no sales of the stock already purchased. For aught that he could know, until informed to the contrary by the plaintiff, the latter may have sold the stocks within an hour after they were purchased, at a large advance, in which event the plaintiff would have been indebted to the defendant. The transactions being wholly within the knowledge of the plaintiff, the defendant had a right, under the contract, to be informed of them and of all that the plaintiff had done, before he could be put in default. He had no means of knowing, except on information from the plaintiff, what sums were advanced, or at what times, or what sales were made, or at what times or prices. It was, therefore, incumbent on the plaintiff, before demanding payment of the defendant, to offer him this information, and to offer to account concerning his transactions in the stock. Until this was done, the defendant was not liable to an action for his share of the advances. The defendant, it is true, might have obtained this information on application to the plaintiff, but neither the contract nor the law imposed this duty on him, and he was not in default for omitting to do it.

In my opinion the action was not barred, and the judgment ought to be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial; and it is so ordered.

WALLACE, J., dissenting:

The applicability of the Statute of Limitations as a bar to the action is the only question presented. On November 21st, 1863, the parties entered into the following agreement in writing:

“Agreement between Dr. John H. Hill and J. W. Haskin, for the purchase of Crockett Consolidated mining stock on joint account. All profits arising from the purchase and sale of said stock to be divided equally. Dr. Hill to furnish money for the purchase of said stock, one half of the amount so advanced to be paid to him by said Haskin, with interest at four per cent. per month. Dr. Hill to hold all stock purchased as security for money advanced; Mr. Haskin to deposit with Dr. Hill additional security at any time when called upon by Dr. Hill for security, against loss by depreciation of said Crockett stock.”

It appeared on the trial that on the day of the making of the contract, Hill made the first purchase of stock in pursuance of its terms, and advanced the purchase money; that in December, 1868, he made the second, and by far the largest purchase of this stock, and paid for it; and that in January, 1864, he made two inconsiderable payments on account of assessments imposed upon the stock so purchased. This stock turned out to be worthless, and the moneys invested in the purchase and in paying assessments were wholly lost. The defendant, Haskin, never repaid to Hill any part of these advances, but in May, 1865, upon a casual meeting between the two in the City of New York, Hill notified Haskin that he was prepared with his account, and then demanded of the latter the payment of one half of the moneys he had advanced under the contract. This action was brought in December, 1868, and the Statute of Limitations having been pleaded as a defense, the Court below, upon these facts appearing, nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that the demand was barred by the statute.

The Statute of Limitations, as to each of the sums sued for, commenced to run from the earliest period at which Hill might have maintained an action against Haskin for its recovery.

There is nothing in the terms of the contract by which the former agreed to extend the time of payment, and his right to receive of Haskin the one half of each advance, as he made it, was capable of immediate enforcement. It may be that Haskin expected indulgence at the hands of Hill, and that the latter had a purpose at the time to extend it to him, but there was no agreement, express or implied, between them to that effect, and Hill's action, if brought eo instante that he made the advance, could not have been defeated on the ground that his suit was premature. It was left optional with Hill whether he would sue immediately after the time he made the advance, or would delay enforcing his demand to some later period. Haskin, probably, did not expect to be called upon immediately, but if, contrary to his expectation in that particular, Hill had demanded immediate reimbursement, it is clear that no agreement to give credit could have been found in the contract under which the money was advanced.

I think that it results that the plaintiff's demand was barred, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE having been of counsel in the action, did not participate in the foregoing decision.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA v.
JAMES HARRINGTON AND WILLIAM MINOR.

MATTER OF REVIEW.—Any action of the Court during the progress of a trial for felony, which deprives the defendant of a substantial legal right in the premises, or to his prejudice, to any extent, withholds or abridges a substantial, legal, or constitutional privilege of a defendant, and by him claimed on the trial, is a proper subject matter of review on appeal.

RIGHT OF PRISONER TO APPEAR FOR TRIAL WITHOUT IRONS.—By the common law a prisoner is entitled to appear for trial, upon his own plea of not guilty, free from all manner of shackles or bonds, unless there is danger of his escape.

ERROR.—To require a prisoner during the progress of his trial to appear and remain with chains and shackles upon his limbs, without evident necessity as a means of securing his presence for judgment, is a violation of the common law rule and of the thirteenth section of the Criminal Practice Act.

APPEAL from the County Court of Calaveras County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George W. Tyler, for Appellants, argued that by the common law the appellants were entitled to appear for trial without shackles, and that the denial of that right prejudiced them in the minds of the jury. (Bract. 1, 8 de Caron. C. 18, Sec. 3; Flet. 1, 1 C. 31; 1 Britt. Ch. 5; 2 Hale's P. C.

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

219; 2 Hawk. P. C. 308; 4 Black. Com. 322, and notes; Waite's Case, Leach, 34; 6 State Trials, 280.) He also argued that the action of the Court was a violation of law. (Practice Act, Sec. 13.)

Attorney General Hamilton, for Respondent, argued that even if the action of the Court was erroneous, the matter of refusing to order the irons removed was no part of the trial of the cause.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The defendants were indicted, tried, and convicted of the crime of robbery, and appeal from the judgment of the Court rendered against them upon the verdict. The only point now urged by the defendants against the validity of the judgment is presented by the following bill of exceptions:

"On the 22d day of June, 1871, a jury was called, impaneled, and sworn in said cause to try said cause — the defendants at the time being in Court and in irons. The counsel for defendants asked that the irons be removed from the limbs of defendants while they were being tried. The Court refused to order the same to be done, and ruled and decided that said defendants should be tried while in irons — no circumstances or facts being shown to the Court why a different rule should be enforced in this cause than any other — the Court being of the opinion that no rights of defendants were violated by being tried in irons without their consent, to which ruling and decision of the Court the defendants, by counsel, then and there excepted."

Appellants insist that by the action of the Court in refusing, upon their motion, to direct the manacles which were upon their limbs to be removed while they were in Court upon trial, and compelling them to be tried while their limbs were shackled with irons, without any apparent or pretended necessity therefor, they were deprived of a substantial legal right, and that the judgment, for that reason, should be reversed. In answer, the Attorney General claims that this action of the Court is no part of the trial of the case, and hence cannot be reviewed on appeal.

I think there can be no question but that any action of the Court during the progress of a trial for felony which deprives the defendant of a substantial legal right in the premises, or to any extent, to his prejudice, withholds or abridges a substantial legal or constitutional privilege of a defendant, and by him claimed on the trial, is a proper subject matter of review by this Court on appeal. (People v. Keenan, 13 Cal. 584.) The question, then, is whether a prisoner placed upon his trial for a felony, can, as a legal or constitutional right, demand that during his trial, while before the Court and jury, his limbs should not be manacled, or that he should not be in vinculis during his trial, there being no pretense of necessity for such restraint to secure his continued presence in Court.

It has ever been the rule at common law that a prisoner brought into the presence of a Court for trial, upon his plea of not guilty to an indictment for any offense, was entitled to appear free of all manner of shackles or bonds; and prior to 1722, when a prisoner was arraigned, or appeared at the bar of a Court to plead, he was presented without manacles or bonds, unless there was evident danger of his escape. (2 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 219; 4 Black. Com. 322; Laver's Case, 6 State Trials, 4th edition, by Hargrave, 230, 231, 244, 245; Waite's Case, 1 Leach's Cases in Crown Law, 36.)

The Legislature of this State, at its first session, declared that "the common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of the State of California, shall be the rule of decision in all the Courts of this State." (Stats. 1850, p. 219); and by the thirteenth section of our

Opinion of the Court—Sprague, J.

Criminal Practice Act it is declared that "no person shall be compelled in a criminal action to be a witness against himself, nor shall a person charged with a public offense be subjected, before conviction, to any more restraint than is necessary for his detention to answer the charge."

The same statute also requires that at every stage of a prosecution for felony the defendant shall personally be present in Court. (Secs. 259, 320, 415, 449, Criminal Practice Act.)

By section eight, Article I, of our State Constitution, it is declared that "in any trial in any Court whatever, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel;" and further, by the Act of April 2d, 1866, in all proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crime or offense, the person so charged is granted the privilege, on request, of testifying in his own behalf as a competent witness. (Stats. 1865-6, p. 865.)

A prisoner upon his trial in Court is in the custody of the law, and under the immediate control of and subject to the orders of such Court. Should the Court refuse to allow a prisoner on trial for felony to manage and control, in person, his own defense, or refuse him the aid of counsel in the conduct of such defense, he would manifestly be deprived of a constitutional right, and a judgment against him on such trial should be reversed. In my opinion any order or action of the Court which, without evident necessity, imposes physical burdens, pains and restraints upon a prisoner during the progress of his trial, inevitably tends to confuse and embarrass his mental faculties, and thereby materially to abridge and prejudicially affect his constitutional rights of defense; and especially would such physical bonds and restraints in like manner materially impair and prejudicially affect his statutory privilege of becoming a competent witness and testifying in his own behalf.

Again, to require a prisoner during the progress of his trial before the Court and jury to appear and remain with chains and shackles upon his limbs, without evident necessity for such restraint, for the purpose of securing his presence for judgment, is a direct violation of the common law rule, and of the thirteenth section of our Criminal Practice Act.

In the present case there is no pretense of necessity for the manacles and chains upon the defendants during their trial, to secure their presence to answer the judgment.

The action of the Court, as disclosed by the bill of exceptions, was manifestly erroneous and materially prejudicial to the legal rights of defendants.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

ELIJAH T. FARMER v. CORNELIUS GROSE AND BERNARDO MUNOS.

DEED WITH DEFEASANCE BACK—MORTGAGE.—When a deed absolute on its face is given of a tract of land, and at the same time the grantee makes to the grantor a defeasance, agreeing to sell the grantor the land, if he pays a sum fixed by a certain time, the test by which to determine whether the transaction is a mortgage or a defeasible sale is the fact, whether or not, notwithstanding the conveyance, there is a substituting, continuing debt from the grantor to the grantee.

ISSUE.—If the consideration for the conveyance was an antecedent debt, and the property is to be reconveyed on the payment of the debt, and nothing more appears, prima facie the transaction constitutes a mortgage.

ISSUE.—In like manner, if there is no antecedent debt, but a loan of money to be repaid, with interest, it is a mortgage.

PAROL EVIDENCE TO SHOW DEED A MORTGAGE.—Where there is a deed absolute on its face, and a defeasance back, parol evidence is admissible to show whether the transaction constitutes a mortgage.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Sonoma County.

Argument for Respondent.

Ejectment. The defendants were indebted to one Manion, on a note secured by mortgage on the demanded premises, and obtained from Farmer the money to pay the note. Farmer relied on his paper title. The defendants appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Alexander, Armstrong & Hinkson, for Appellants.

Courts of equity regard the substance and not the form of the transaction, and though disguised under the forms of that language which describes a sale, yet if in fact the reality was a mortgage, they drag it from under its disguise and act upon it as a security for a loan.

Every conceivable phase of this case is considered and determined in our favor by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Russell v. Southard, 12 How. Rep. 145, and upon this case alone we might rest, but we cite the following cases in support of it: Brown v. Dewey, 1 Sandf. Ch. R. 60; Skinner v. Miller, 5 Littell, 84; *Pierce v. A. Thomas, for Respondent.

The deed from Barry and wife to respondent, and the bond from respondent to Barry to reconvey upon paying five thousand dollars and interest, constitute a conditional sale. By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

On the 29th of March, 1867, Barry and wife, by their absolute deed of that date, reciting a consideration of five thousand dollars, conveyed to the plaintiff the land in controversy. On the same day the plaintiff executed and delivered to Barry a writing in the nature of a defeasance, which recites that on that day Barry and wife had sold the land to the plaintiff for the sum of five thousand dollars, which was paid to them and then provides that if Barry shall pay to the plaintiff the said sum of five thousand dollars, on the first day of the ensuing October, with interest at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month, and also any taxes that may have been assessed on the land for the year 1867, if the same shall have been paid by the plaintiff or assessed to him, and for which he may be personally liable, "and also the necessary costs and expenses that may accrue by reason of any suit or suits that may be necessary to recover possession of the land," then that the plaintiff would reconvey the land to Barry by good and sufficient quitclaim deed; but in case Barry should fail to pay said sums at the stipulated time, "then the above obligation to be void, and neither party held or bound by the terms of the same." It was further provided that Barry was to retain the possession of the land until the said first day of October, and was to be entitled to the growing crop, and that, if the crop should not be harvested or removed from the land by the said first day of October, it might be removed by Barry within a reasonable time thereafter. The deed and defeasance were both duly acknowledged and recorded on the same day, and the principal question in the case is, whether the two instruments taken together constituted a mortgage, or a sale with a covenant for a reconveyance on conditions to be performed by Barry. The District Court held it to be the latter, after hearing much oral proof relating to the entire transaction between the parties. In cases of this class the well-established test by which to determine whether the transaction is a mortgage or a defeasible sale is the fact whether or not, notwithstanding the conveyance, there is a subsisting, continuing debt from the grantor to the grantee. If the consideration for the conveyance was an antecedent debt, and the property is to be reconveyed on the payment of the debt, with interest, and nothing more appears, prima facie the transaction would be a mortgage. In like manner, if there was no antecedent debt, but a loan of money, to be repaid with interest, and such was the real intention and understanding of the parties, it would be a mortgage, and not a defeasible sale, whatever may be the terms employed in the contract. It may be doubtful whether it would not have been the wiser rule to adhere to the written contract as the best and safest exponent of what the parties meant. But it is now so well established, by a long series of decisions, that parol evidence is admissible to explain the transaction and show its real character, that we would not be justified in overturning a rule so long acquiesced in and so firmly established.

If we consult the face of the deed and defeasance put in evidence in this case, without resorting to the parol evidence, we should hold the transaction to be a defeasible sale, and not a mortgage. The deed is not only absolute on its face, but the defeasance recites that "the said E. T. Farmer has this day bought of said John Barry and Nancy L. Barry, his wife, certain land," etc., "for which the said E. T. Farmer has paid to the said John Barry the sum of five thousand dollars, in gold coin of the United States." It further provides that Barry is to retain the possession until the time stipulated for repayment of the money, and is to have the growing crop, with the liberty of removing it after the expiration of the time; and in case the money was not promptly paid, the obligation to reconvey was to be void, "and neither party held or bound by the terms of the same." It was evidently intended that on a failure to pay the money on the first of October Barry was to surrender the possession, and Farmer was thenceforth to be under no obligation to reconvey. Nor do the written instruments contain any promise or agreement on the part of Barry to pay in any contingency. It was at his option whether he paid or not. It is plain that on the face of the instruments there was no obligation on Barry to pay anything. The only fact appearing on the face of the papers which could possibly raise a presumption of a loan is, that the sum to be paid by Barry, in case he desired a reconveyance, was the precise amount expressed as the consideration in the deed, with interest. That this is a circumstance tending to raise a presumption of a loan is true, but, of itself, it is insufficient to overcome the contrary presumption arising from other portions of the instrument.

Parol evidence was introduced by each party to explain the transaction, and there is a substantial conflict in the testimony in respect to the acts and intentions of the parties. Barry testifies that he distinctly understood the transaction to be a loan of money, and a conveyance by way of security; whilst the plaintiff testifies, fully and explicitly, that it was not a loan of money, but a purchase, with an agreement to reconvey on condition. It is not our province to weigh these conflicting statements; and the Court below, which heard the witnesses, having decided in favor of the plaintiff, we would not be justified in setting aside its judgment on the ground that it was against the weight of the evidence, even though we might be inclined to the opinion that the preponderance of proof was on the other side.

Points decided.

But, on the contrary, we think the finding and judgment are fully justified by the evidence.

EDWARD CHRISTY v. JULIA E. DANA, ADMINISTRATRIX OF THE ESTATE OF E. O. DANA, DECEASED, AND THE NATOMA WATER AND MINING COMPANY.

ENFORCEMENT OF MORTGAGE.—A mortgagee may enforce his mortgage as against the land, notwithstanding the personal liability of the mortgagor, for the debt may be barred by a discharge in insolvency.

PLEADING CONCLUSION OF LAW.—An averment in an answer that the plaintiff's debt is barred by a discharge in insolvency, is only a conclusion of law, and not the statement of a fact.

INTEREST ON CLAIMS AGAINST INSOLVENT ESTATE.—Section one hundred and thirty-one of the Probate Act, which provides that when the estate is insolvent a creditor can only recover interest at the rate of ten per cent after the letters of administration issue, cannot be invoked by a purchaser of the mortgaged property who buys from the mortgagor after the mortgage is given, and who is made a party in an action to enforce the mortgage. Said section is intended only for the benefit of the estate, and if the complaint waives a judgment for a deficiency, the estate has no interest in the matter.

ENFORCING MORTGAGE AFTER DEATH OF MORTGAGOR.—If the mortgagor sells the land after he gives the mortgage, and then dies, the mortgagee may enforce his mortgage as against the subsequent purchaser without presenting his claim to the administrator for allowance.

EVIDENCE OF ACTUAL NOTICE OF A MORTGAGE.—When the mortgage is recorded, so as to give constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser, there is no need of proof of actual notice in an action to enforce the mortgage.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

TITLE ACQUIRED BY MORTGAGOR FEEDS HIS PRIOR MORTGAGE.—If a mortgagor mortgages public land upon which he is residing, and afterwards obtains a patent to the same from the United States, and then sells, the title acquired by the patent inures to the benefit of the mortgagee, and the mortgage may be enforced against the subsequent purchaser.

DECLARATIONS OF THE PRESIDENT OF A CORPORATION — EVIDENCE.—The declarations of the President of a corporation may be received in evidence to show that at the time the corporation purchased land it had actual notice of a mortgage on the same.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, Sacramento County.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

C. G. W. French, for Appellant.

Robert C. Clark, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action to foreclose a mortgage made by E. O. Dana, deceased, in his lifetime, to the plaintiff, upon a tract of land which at the time was a part of the public domain, but upon which Dana resided, and which he proposed to claim as a preëmtor. The land is described in the mortgage as "fragment of southwest quarter of section twenty-four, and fragment of northwest quarter of northwest quarter of section twenty-five, township ten north, range seven east, Mount Diablo meridian, being a possessory claim under the statute of California, said land containing one hundred and twenty-five acres, more or less, and being the only possessory claim held by said party of the first part in said county."

The mortgage was dated March 3d, 1863, and was duly recorded March 9th, 1863. On the 12th of May, 1865, Dana duly filed his petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws, and after proper proceedings obtained his final discharge on the 25th of February, 1866. Dana's preëmption claim being perfected, the plaintiff furnished the money to pay the Government price for the land, and the patent was issued to Dana April 13th, 1866. On the 30th of April, 1866, Dana and his wife conveyed the land by absolute deed, to the defendants, The Natoma Water and Mining Company, for a valuable consideration, describing the land in the deed as "fractions numbered four and five of section number twenty-four, and fraction number one of section number twenty-five, township ten north, range seven east, Mount Diablo base and meridian." From the proof and findings it appears that the land included in the deed is the same land embraced in the mortgage to the plaintiff. On the 5th of May, 1866, E. O. Dana died intestate, and on the twenty-second of the same month his widow, the defendant, Julia E. Dana, was duly appointed administratrix of his estate. There is a provision in the mortgage to secure the repayment of any money which the plaintiff might pay for his greater security in procuring the title to the land, or otherwise, and for a reasonable attorney's fee in the event of a foreclosure.

The action is brought against the administratrix and against The Natoma Water and Mining Company; and the complaint prays for foreclosure of the mortgage and a sale of the land, but expressly waives a judgment against the estate for any deficiency.

The administratrix, in her answer, admits the allegations of the complaint and consents to a judgment of foreclosure as prayed for. The answer of The Natoma Water and Mining Company denies that the land included in the deed is the same land embraced in the mortgage, and denies that the whole mortgage debt remains unpaid; but admits that the plaintiff's claim was presented to the administratrix for allowance, and denies that at the time it was presented she was acting as such administratrix, and also denies that the plaintiff paid the money to the Government as he alleges.

The answer then proceeds to set up what it designates as a "further and equitable defense" to the action, and avers that Dana was regularly and duly discharged from all his debts, including the plaintiff's under the proceedings in insolvency; that Dana filed his declaratory statement as a pre-emptioner on the 3d of July, 1865, for the lands as they are described in the deed to said defendant, and paid for the land and received his certificate of purchase in October, 1865, and his patent on the 13th of April, 1866; that on the 30th of April, 1866, Dana and his wife sold and conveyed the land to said defendant for one thousand dollars, which was its full value; that said land so conveyed, embraced a portion of the land included in the mortgage; that in their deed Dana and his wife warranted the premises to be free from incumbrance done or suffered by them, with full covenants for further assurance; and prays, as affirmative relief, that the land conveyed to the defendant may be decreed to be free from the plaintiff's lien, and that the plaintiff's claim be adjudged to be null and void. No replication was filed to this portion of the defendant's answer.

On the trial the District Court found the facts to be substantially as we have recited them, and entered a judgment for foreclosure for the principal and interest due on the note together with the amount paid by the plaintiff to the Government for the purchase of the land and one hundred and fifty dollars attorney's fees, and ordered the judgment for principal and interest to bear interest until paid at the rate stipulated in the note and mortgage. The Natoma Water and Mining Company made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and it has appealed both from the order and the judgment.

The points relied upon by the appellant are in substance:

First — That there being no replication to its answer, the affirmative matter therein contained stands admitted, and no proof to the contrary was admissible.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

On examining the answer, we find no new matter which was material. It avers, it is true, that the plaintiff's debt was barred by the discharge in insolvency; but that is only a conclusion of law and not a fact, and on the facts admitted it is evident the plaintiff was entitled to enforce his mortgage as against the land, notwithstanding the personal liability of Dana for the debt may have been barred by the discharge.

Second — That Dana's estate being insolvent, the plaintiff, under section one hundred and thirty-one of the Probate Act, could only recover interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum after the letters of administration issued.

The plaintiff asks no relief against the estate, and it is, therefore, of no importance to those interested in the estate whether the interest be greater or less. The estate has no interest in the land, and could in no manner be benefited by a reduction of the interest. Section one hundred and thirty-one of the Probate Act has no application to such a case.

Third — That the land included in the deed is not the same land included in the mortgage.

This objection is answered by the finding, which explicitly declares the lands to be identical, and the proof fully supports the finding.

Fourth — That the mortgage does not authorize the money paid by the plaintiff to the Government and the attorney's fee to be included in the judgment.

We think the mortgage fully supports the action of the Court in respect to these items.

Fifth — That the plaintiff's claim was not presented to the administratrix for allowance until after the administration was closed.

There appears to be some confusion in the record on this point. But we do not comprehend how it was possible that the estate could be closed on the 5th of June, 1866, when the letters of administration were granted on the 22d of

May, 1866. The findings do not state when the estate was closed, and there was no exception to them on that ground. It is, therefore, too late for the defendant to raise this point, even if it was material. But inasmuch as no relief is demanded against the estate, and the intestate, at the time of his death, had no interest in the land, there was no need for the plaintiff to present his claim to the administratrix for allowance.

Sixth — That the Court erred in admitting certain oral testimony on behalf of the plaintiff.

But the testimony was competent to establish that the defendant, The Natoma Water and Mining Company, had express notice of the plaintiff's mortgage before taking a deed for the land, if such proof had been needed; but we do not perceive the materiality of such proof when the mortgage was duly recorded and operated as constructive notice.

Seventh — That inasmuch as Dana had no title to the land at the date of the mortgage, the title which he subsequently acquired by means of the patent did not inure to the benefit of the plaintiff as mortgagee.

This is no longer an open question in this Court, and is fully decided in Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612; Kirkaldie v. Larrabee, 31 Cal. 455. This disposes of all the points raised by the appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

Points decided.

WILLIS JONES v. ANTHONY CLARK, ROBERT WINSPEAR, JOHN M. MINER, ROBERT O. CRAVENS, MARY J. CRAVENS, JAMES WILLIS LOW, EZRA S. BRADLEE, AND ASAHIEL HUNTLEY, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF WILLIAM RUFUS LONGLEY, DECEASED.

PROMISSORY NOTE OF MINING PARTNERSHIP SIGNED BY SUPERINTENDENT.

A promissory note, purporting to have been executed for and on behalf of a mining partnership, and signed by the Superintendent as such, is binding on the partnership, provided the Superintendent had authority to execute it, or it has been subsequently ratified by the company.

POWER OF SUPERINTENDENT TO BIND MINING PARTNERSHIP.—A managing Superintendent cannot bind a mining partnership, except upon such contracts as are usual and necessary in the ordinary prosecution of the work, unless specially authorized.

FINDINGS — FACTS STATED AS CONCLUSIONS STILL FACTS — Where, on a question of ratification of a note, the findings embraced several facts tending to establish it, and then a conclusion from them that there had been a full ratification and confirmation; held, that such conclusion was the ultimate fact to be ascertained; but that it was none the less a finding of fact because stated as a conclusion.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN MINING PARTNERSHIPS AND ORDINARY PARTNERSHIPS.—Mining partnerships, where there are no partnership articles, are governed by the law of ordinary partnerships, except so far as the general usage of persons engaged in similar pursuits or the established practice of the particular company has established a different rule — the only differences generally existing being such as flow from the fact that in such partnerships there is no delectus personarum.

LIABILITY OF MINING PARTNERS ON NOTE BY SUPERINTENDENT — ESTOPPEL.

Where a promissory note, purporting to be executed for and on behalf of a mining partnership, and signed by the Superintendent as such, was given in payment for property which the partnership was using, and such use was a beneficial one, and all the members knew soon after the execution of the note of its existence, and believed it to be a company note, and acquiesced in paying interest upon it until long after the original debt would have been barred if the note were held invalid; held, that the members of the partnership should be estopped from disputing its validity.

ACTION FOR DISSOLUTION OF MINING PARTNERSHIP — FORMER PARTNER AS PARTY.— If, in the case of a mining partnership, a retiring partner still continues bound for a partnership debt, he, nevertheless, parts with his equity to have the partnership debts paid out of the partnership property; and in a suit to dissolve the partnership as among the partners, though he may be a proper, he is not a necessary party.

MINING PARTNERSHIP — DEATH OF PARTNER — NO CONTROL BY SURVIVOR.— A mining partnership is not dissolved by the death of a partner, nor has a surviving partner any right to take control of the property as survivor — this right only applying where the delectus personæ exists.

FINDINGS AS TO MORE PROBATIVE FACTS IMMATERIAL.— Where additional findings were asked for in the way of exceptions to findings, and such additions were either upon immaterial points or probative facts merely; held, that they were properly refused.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, Placer County.

There was a judgment in this case in February, 1869, dismissing the action as to the defendants Robert O. Cravens, Mary J. Craven, J. Willis Low, and Ezra S. Bradlee, dissolving the partnership known as the "Dardanelles Mining Company," existing between the plaintiff, defendant Clark, and the estate of William R. Longley, deceased, and ordering a reference to take an account as to the partnership affairs as between the said partners, and as to their transactions with the defendants Robert Winspear and John M. Miner.

In its findings upon which the foregoing judgment was based, the Court below, after reciting the facts, proceeded as follows:

"From the foregoing facts I find as matters of law: First, that said promissory note set forth in the complaint, dated August 1st, 1862, has been fully ratified and confirmed by said Dardanelles Company, and is to be held as the note of said company," etc.

Statement of Facts.

The referee, J. I. Fitch, Esq., filed his report in August, 1869. He found, among other things, that J. Russell Glover, in December, 1867, acquired from the plaintiff one half share of his said two and one half shares, and that, at an election held in that month, Glover was put in the place of Clark for Superintendent. As to the injuries occasioned by the washing away of the bed-rock, the referee reported as follows:

“XVIII—The Dardanelles Company, in working their claim, did not clean up their bed-rock very closely, but saved the rock for future working. The rock contained gold in considerable quantities in places to the depth of four or five feet, and was sufficiently soft to enable the workmen to ‘pick it up.’ The rock was of such a character that the gold could not be extracted by ordinary sluice washing. This rock was regarded by the company, and all others acquainted with it, as valuable, and had been saved by the company to be worked only when they had determined upon the proper mode, and were prepared with the means of working accordingly. Clark had, during several years, subjected this rock to various tests and experiments, to determine the proper mode of working it. The result of these experiments was the conviction that but a small part of the gold could be obtained by the usual sluice washing; that if it was to be worked by sluicing at all, that the tailings should be caught, allowed to lie and slake in the air for a considerable time, then sluiced again, and this operation to be repeated four or five times. In the experiments referred to quite satisfactory results were had, by first burning or heating the rock and afterwards washing it. The most satisfactory result, however, was obtained by crushing the rock before washing it. In the Summer of 1867 Clark was offered, by two parties, fifteen thousand dollars for this bed-rock, and desired to sell it; but plaintiff would not consent. One of the parties, the Chinaman who bought the tailings, offered eight thousand dollars cash, and the balance in installments, and the other, ten thousand dollars cash, and the balance to be paid afterwards. During the last Winter Jones and Glover have picked up and sluiced down the cañon about half of this bed-rock, and have not realized from it more than enough to pay expenses. Clark forbid Jones from working this rock. Jones and Glover knew of the experiment made by Clark, and knew that it had long been the opinion of the company that the gold could not be extracted by the ordinary sluice washing. Jones, on the trial, claimed that as much of the gold was saved in the way he worked it as in any other; that the cañon was more than a mile long, and it is owned by the company, is very steep and rocky, and that the gold would be freed in its passage down the cañon.

“XIX—On the 20th day of January, 1869, plaintiff, Jones, and said Glover, made a contract with the Oro Company, which owns mining claims adjoining the Dardanelles claims, by which it was agreed that the Oro Company could wash its dirt through a tunnel and flume of the Dardanelles Company, about seven hundred feet, until this flume united with a flume through which the Dardanelles Company washed, and that then the earth and water of the Dardanelles claims should mingle with those of the Oro, and the two companies should divide the gold that came out after they mingled, in the proportion that the amount of gold taken out of the Dardanelles above this point bore to the amount of gold that came out of the Oro above this point. The contract also allowed water which plaintiff was selling to the Oro Company, from his own ditch, to be run into the reservoir of the Dardanelles Company, and mingle with the water of the Dardanelles ditches, and run in the Dardanelles pipe from the reservoir down on to the claims, where, from the lower end of the pipe, it was used in both the Oro claims and the Dardanelles, along with the water that came through the Dardanelles ditches. Under this contract two thousand three hundred and seventy-nine dollars and thirty cents have come out of the joint tailings of the Oro and Dardanelles, which is in the hands of said Jones, and of which he charges himself with one thousand nine hundred and six dollars and ten cents, leaving a balance of four hundred and seventy-three dollars and twenty cents, which he claims he must pay to the Oro."

In reference to the reservoir, the referee found, "That during the Spring of 1869, plaintiff entered into a contract with one Story & Co., by which it was agreed that said Story & Co. should wash away the reservoir as a mining claim, and said plaintiff should furnish the water to do so out of his own ditch, called the "Miners' Ditch," and said Story & Co. should have half the gold, and plaintiff the other half; that said plaintiff has now received six hundred dollars under said contract, from Story & Co., and admits that there is considerable gold not cleaned up, which, he says, may amount to one thousand dollars; that one third of the reservoir and ground on which it stood is now washed away, and is destroyed as a reservoir, and Story & Co. are still washing away the remainder of it; that Clark, claiming to act as Superintendent, forbid Jones and Story & Co. from washing it away. The plaintiff has charged in his account of disbursements one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four dollars as cash paid to himself for water which he claims to have furnished to the Dardanelles claims from his own ditch, called the "Miners' Ditch," from the 27th of December, 1868, to the 3d of May, 1869. Clark, as Superintendent, forbid Jones from furnishing any water to the Dardanelles Company. I find, also, that Jones did not furnish but two thirds the amount of water for which he has charged."

Among his conclusions, the referee reported as follows:

Argument for Appellants.

"I find, as a fact, that the working of the bed-rock of the Dardanelles claim, by Jones and Glover, described in paragraph eighteen of this report, was done in a negligent and careless manner, and that the company thereby sustained a loss of seven thousand five hundred dollars; and, as a conclusion of law, that the work done by them was unlawful, and wrongful, and negligent, and Jones should be charged with the loss to the company, to wit: seven thousand five hundred dollars. I find, as a fact, that the Dardanelles Company sustained a loss of one thousand dollars by the washing away of the reservoir described in paragraph twenty of this report; and that, as a conclusion of law, Jones should be charged with that amount."

Upon the coming in of the report plaintiff filed exceptions to it, and especially to the allowance against Jones, above mentioned. To these exceptions defendant objected, on the ground that the only mode of remedying defects or errors (if any existed) in the report, was by motion for new trial. The Court overruled defendants' objections and sustained plaintiff's exceptions so far as they related to the items of seven thousand five hundred dollars for loss by washing the bed-rock, and one thousand dollars for loss by washing away the reservoir. Final judgment was then entered in accordance with the report of the referee, thus amended and in favor of the plaintiff. Defendants moved for a new trial, which having been denied, they appealed.

Charles A. Tuttle, for Appellants.

The note was not the note of the company on its face. It was the promise of Longley alone. The words "Superintendent of company" were mere descriptio personæ. (Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 199; Jaques v. Margnand, 8 Cow. 497; Logan v. Bond, 13 Georgia, 192; 8 Ala. 59.)

Argument for Appellants.

Although a mining and ditch company may be bound for supplies bought by its Superintendent to carry on work, yet it would not be bound to pay a note given for such supplies, when suit is brought on the note alone. (McConnell v. Denver, 35 Cal. 365.)

It is true the Court found that the note had been ratified by the company; but it was found not as a fact, but as a conclusion of law. The whole case is thus rested upon a ratification which is nowhere found as a fact. Ratification is an ultimate fact; and if it can be inferred, the acts from which it can be inferred are evidence, and have no place in findings of fact.

Again, Jones here seeks to enforce a lien on the company property for a note given him by the Superintendent four years before he had any interest in the company property. As to this note, he was an outside creditor. It constituted no part of the assets he paid into the firm, nor was it an advance made by him to the firm, or any of its members. He became a partner under the rule that a member of a mining partnership may bring in a new partner without the knowledge of the old partners; but when he came in a new partnership was created, and it was not liable for the old debts, unless it expressly made itself so. Here an outsider seeks to enforce a lien on the entire property as against the present partners, but one of whom was a member when the debt was created. A creditor has not the lien, but it is worked out through the partner who has it for his protection. (Story on Partnership, Sec. 358 et seq.) Here the partnership is solvent, and all those liable on the note at law are solvent. The partner who sold out to Jones lost the right to enforce a lien for the Jones note; and how could Jones, who bought the interest of such partner, acquire a lien?

As the action is for a dissolution and for an accounting back to 1863, all the old partners should have been brought in. (Collyer on Partnership, Sec. 712 and notes; Voorhies v. DeMeyer, 8 Sand. 614; Hallet v. Hallet, 2 Paige, 14; Bailey v. Judge, 2 Paige, 278; 3 Barb. Ch. 630; Elston v. Blanchard, 2 Scan. 420; Mallow v. Hinde, 18 Wheat. 193.)

We were also entitled to have Glover made a party, as it appeared that he owned in the property. (Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 649.) But, as a matter of fact, Glover was not properly elected Superintendent; because after the death of Longley, Clark was entitled to the possession and management of the property as surviving partner, and Longley's administrator had no right to vote for Glover as Superintendent. (Allen v. Hill, 16 Cal. 113; Dougherty v. Creary, 30 Cal. 290.)

It was error to strike out portions of the report of the referee, because such report stood as the finding and judgment of the Court. (Practice Act, Sec. 187; Bryan v. Maume, 28 Cal. 337; Lyons v. Leimback, 29 Cal. 129; Gifford v. Carville, 29 Cal. 589; Henry v. Everts, 30 Cal. 435; Crappe v. Brizolara, 19 Cal. 609; Allen v. Hill, 16 Cal. 113; McKoney v. Caperton, 15 Cal. 314.)

James F. Hubbard and Jo Hamilton, for Respondent.

When Jones bought the interest of Mrs. Baker in the Dardanelles Company, he came in as a partner instead of Mrs. Baker, and the partnership continued its existence. (Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569.) As such partner he had a lien upon the partnership property for the debts due the creditors of the firm, which he might enforce in equity. (Duryea v. Burt, supra.) When Jones, who was a creditor, became a partner, he was not in any worse condition in regard to his own claim than in regard to the claim of a stranger. Mrs. Baker, when she sold out, lost her right to enforce a lien for the Jones note; but Jones acquired that right, because he purchased it when he bought her note. (Story on Partnership, Sec. 262; Taylor v. Field, 4 Vesey, 396.)

Argument for Respondent.

The old partners, who were not beneficially interested in the accounting, were not necessary parties to the action, and the present defendants cannot object to the want of such parties. Nor was Glover a necessary party, as it does not appear when he bought.

There were sufficient grounds for a dissolution of the partnership; but whether so or not, it is plain that when a partnership has no fixed time for its duration, and is the ordinary mining partnership common in the mining region of California, having no agreement among its members as to its continuance, it may be dissolved at the will of either of the parties. (Collyer on Partnership, Sec. 109.)

As to liability on the note, it was sufficient to show a ratification by the members of the partnership; and all the circumstances show that they did ratify. The ratification once fairly made was final, and could not be recalled. (Story on Agency, Sec. 242.) The ratification was sufficiently stated in the findings. (Swift v. Muygridge, 8 Cal. 445; Sears v. Dixon, 33 Cal. 326.) The additional findings which were asked were not material, because the ultimate fact, to which they all looked, was found.

The doctrine that Clark had a right to the control of the property of the partnership as surviving partner, after Longley's death is not applicable. It applies only in cases of commercial partnerships, not in such a one as this, where a new partner may be brought in without the knowledge or consent of the other partners. (Story on Partnership, Sec. 343; Collyer on Partnership, Sec. 9; Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 49; Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569.)

The action of the Court below in setting aside portions of the report of the referee was correct, because there was no pretense of fraud in Jones' management of the bed-rock and reservoir; and the Court had a right to correct the errors of the referee, as it did, without adopting it. (Calderwood v. Peyser, 31 Cal. 337.)

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

On the 1st day of August, 1861, the Dardanelles Mining Company, a mining partnership, was in possession of, and was working, certain mining claims of the class known as hydraulic diggings, at Forrest Hill, Placer County.

At that time the company consisted of seven partners, one of whom, Longley, who owned nearly one half of the mine, to wit, six and one half fifteenths, was manager. On that day Longley, professing to act as the agent of the company, and for the purpose of supplying the company with water to work their claims, purchased certain ditches for the sum of fourteen thousand dollars. The plaintiff held mortgage liens upon the ditches amounting to eleven thousand dollars. By agreement between Longley, as agent of the partnership, and the owners of the ditches, the sum was to be paid to plaintiff. The plaintiff assented to the arrangement, and Longley, acting for the company, executed to him a note for that sum, due one year from date, with interest at two per cent per month. In consideration of this note plaintiff released his mortgages. It does not appear that any members of the company took part in the negotiations for the purchase of the property, or expressly agreed to the transaction, except Longley and one Clark, who at the time owned one and three fourths fifteenths in the company. Clark assisted in negotiating the trade, knew of the note given to plaintiff, and assented to it. The company took immediate possession of the property purchased, and have ever since continued to use the water of the ditches in working their claims. The members of the company must have known of the purchase at the time, and of the existence of the debt, and shortly after, as is proved and found, knew of the fact that the note had been given to plaintiff in part payment, and that the sum of three thousand dollars was paid on account of the purchase from the partnership funds. There is evidence tending to show that most, if not all, the members of the company knew of the contemplated purchase before it was consummated; but there is no express finding upon this fact.

On the 19th day of August, 1862, Longley, still acting as Superintendent, took up the first note given, and gave a new note in lieu of it, in the words and figures following:

"$11,000. For value received, one year after date, for and on behalf of the Dardanelles Mining Company, I promise to pay to Willis Jones, or order, the sum of eleven thousand dollars, with interest at two per cent per month, payable semi-annually.

"WILLIAM RUFUS LONGLEY,

"Superintendent of Company.

"Todd's Valley, August 1st, 1862."

It does not appear that Longley had express authority to execute this note from the company, or any of its members; but there is a finding that each of the members afterward knew of the fact, and assented to the giving of the note. On the 12th day of August, 1862, prior to giving the new note, Clark, at the request of Longley, paid the interest on the note out of the partnership funds.

Longley died in June, 1863. Clark then became Superintendent and manager of the mine, and as such paid upon the note from the partnership funds the following sums, upon the dates mentioned: July 28th, 1863, two thousand five hundred and forty dollars; February 1st, 1864, one thousand two hundred dollars; August 8th, 1864, two hundred dollars; August 27th, 1864, one thousand dollars; February 2d, 1865, one thousand two hundred dollars.

All these payments were known to the other members of the company, who made no objection. It does not appear that any member of the company has ever objected to the purchase, or complained that it was made without authority.

All the members of the company, also, acquiesced in the payment of the interest, and do not seem, even to the last, to have objected to these payments as made without authority; but objection was made that the note was so worded as not to bind the company, for in the answer they admit that Clark, as Superintendent, made the payments because he and the company, not having consulted counsel, supposed that the note was so worded as to bind the company.

The plaintiff, in October, 1866, became the owner of an interest in the company, and afterward commenced this action to obtain a dissolution of the copartnership, to have an account taken, and to have his note paid from the partnership assets. At the time the suit was brought Clark was the only member of the firm who was also a member at the time the purchase was made, or at the time the note was given. All who subsequently became owners by purchase knew at the time of the purchase of the existence of the debt to plaintiff, and of the note given to secure it.

The findings and judgment are in favor of the plaintiff; and defendants' motion for a new trial being denied, this appeal is taken from the order and from the judgment.

The note purports to be executed for and on behalf of the company, and is signed by Longley as Superintendent. The mode of executing it corresponds very nearly with some of the cases mentioned in section one hundred and fifty-four, Story on Agency; and there can be no doubt that it is binding on the partnership, provided Longley had authority to execute it, or it has been subsequently ratified by the company.

The company being a mining partnership, managed by a Superintendent, it follows that the Superintendent could not bind the partnership, except upon such contracts as are usual and necessary in the ordinary prosecution of the work. He could purchase the supplies and materials necessary for the usual working of the mine upon credit, but could not bind the concern by promissory notes or bills of exchange unless specially authorized. Such authority might, of course, be conferred by the articles of association, or might be established by proof of general usage of similar companies in this country; but no such proof was adduced in this case. Longley, therefore, had no authority, as Superintendent, to purchase the ditch property, or to give the company's note in payment. There must have been special authority for that purpose, or his acts must have been afterwards ratified, or the partnership would not be bound.

The answer of Clark, Winspear, and Miner denies the partnership, but admits that the ditch property was purchased by the persons alleged to be members of it as tenants in common. It denies the authority of Longley to give the note for the company, but avers that he was furnished by some of the parties interested with all the money necessary to pay for the property. It is found that the company was a mining partnership, and the evidence fully sustains that finding. The defendants failed to prove the allegation as to the advance made to Longley to enable him to make the purchase. It may be considered, therefore, as settled beyond controversy, by the admissions and by the evidence, that Longley was authorized to make the purchase, and that there remained due, on account of the purchase from the company, eleven thousand dollars. Plaintiff has not attempted to prove any special authority in Longley to execute the note on behalf of the company, and the only question in regard to it is, whether it is shown to have been ratified. The Court finds several facts, which, in the opinion of the Court, tend to establish the fact of ratification, and then finds, as a conclusion from them, that the note has been fully ratified and confirmed by the company. This was the ultimate fact to be ascertained, and it is now the less a finding of fact because it is stated as a conclusion from other stated facts.

But it is claimed that this finding is not justified by the evidence. It is true there is no evidence that the note was authorized by the company, at a company meeting, or that it was adopted in that manner after it had been executed by Longley. Nor is there any evidence either of the practice of this particular company, or of usage in similar companies, which would show the necessity of such action. Mining partnerships, where there are no partnership articles, are governed by the law of ordinary partnerships, except so far as the general usage of persons engaged in similar pursuits, or the established practice of the particular company has established a different rule. The only difference generally existing, as established by the decisions of this Court, are such as legitimately flow from the fact that in such partnerships there is no delectus personarum. (Bainbridge on Mines, 425.)

The partnership was bound for the money at the time the second note was given, even if the first were invalid. They were using the property, to purchase which the indebtedness was incurred, and the evidence shows that all agreed that the purchase was a beneficial one to the company. All knew, soon after the note was given, of its existence, and certainly then believed it to be a company note, for they aver in the answer that they supposed it was so worded as to bind the company. No one can be supposed so ignorant as to have thought it would bind the company, no matter how it was worded, if given without authority, and in a matter in which the company had no concern. All acquiesced in paying interest upon the note until long after the debt would be barred, if the note were held invalid. Under such circumstances, justice and fair dealing require that they should be estopped from disputing its validity.

The case differs widely, upon the question of ratification, from the cases of Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198, and McConnell v. Denver, 35 Cal. 365. In the first case, it appears affirmatively that Lachman did not authorize the note, and had in no way recognized its validity. In the case of McConnell v. Denver, the note was given contrary to the terms of the contract, and had not been recognized as valid in any way. The proceeds of the ditch had been paid on account of the indebtedness, in accordance with the terms of the original contract of sale.

The note being established as a valid contract, binding upon the partnership as such, the partnership continued liable, at least to the extent of the partnership assets, although some members of the company had in the meantime parted with their interests in the concern. The new members purchased with full knowledge of the indebtedness and of the note, and of course took their interests subject to the payment of the partnership debts. (Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569.)

But it is contended that Hensley, Cummings, and Baker, who were partners at the time the note was given, and who sold and transferred their shares before the commencement of this action, ought to have been made parties. If this were an action upon the note there would be some plausibility in this position. Ordinarily, when a partner retires from a firm he continues personally liable for the indebtedness, unless the new firm has assumed the debt and the creditor has taken them for it. If, in the case of a mining partnership, the retiring partner still continues bound, he nevertheless, has parted with his equity to have the partnership debts paid out of the partnership property. The purchaser, however, having taken his interest subject to the debts, has no claim to recover against his vendor for any debts which may be paid out of the partnership assets. The former partners, therefore, have no interest except consequentially, in this proceeding, and, if proper, are certainly not necessary parties to it.

At the time the note was given, it appears that a mortgage was executed by Longley upon the property of the company to secure it. This mortgage, like the note, was executed for and on behalf of the company, and purported to be an incumbrance upon the property of the partnership, and not upon Longley's interest in it. This being a proceeding by one of the partners to obtain a dissolution of the partnership, and to have the partnership assets applied to the payment of the firm debts, and there being no other creditors, it is not material to inquire whether this instrument is valid or not. The plaintiff does not appear here primarily as a creditor, but as a partner seeking a dissolution of the company and a settlement of its affairs. If he is entitled to a dissolution, the other relief must follow. There appears to have been no agreement that the partnership should continue for a fixed term, nor was any custom shown which could affect the question of duration. If it were otherwise, however, sufficient cause for a dissolution was shown. As the partnership was not dissolved by the death of Longley, Clark had no right, as survivor, to take control of the property. This rule can only apply where the delectus personæ exists, and the partnership is dissolved by the death of a partner.

The character of the interest which Glover had acquired in the partnership, if any, is not shown. Had it been, it may be that it would have appeared to the Court that he was not a necessary party. He may have had no transfer of any interest, but only a promise, from Jones. At all events, he is not shown to have been a necessary party.

The exceptions to the findings were properly overruled. The additional findings asked for were either immaterial or are the probative facts merely.

It was not necessary, upon a reference, such as was had in this case, to move for a new trial, in order to have the report modified by changing some of the findings of the referee. (Harris v. San Francisco Sugar Refinery, 41 Cal. 893.)

The facts found by the referee in regard to the inquiry by washing away the bed-rock by the plaintiff show that the damage was altogether hypothetical. There is no evidence of bad faith in the matter. Upon this state of facts the allowance was properly stricken out.

The allowance of one thousand dollars, for washing away the reservoir, seems correct. It was virtually disposing of the property of the company, and Jones should be made to account for the value of it to the company. The allowance of one thousand dollars by the referee seems reasonable, and if it were too much, this would not authorize the Court to reject the demand altogether. The decree should be modified in this particular, by charging the plaintiff with this sum of one thousand dollars, as found by the referee.

Ordered that the case be remanded, with directions to modify the decree in accordance with this opinion.

EX PARTE PETER FREDERICK BULL, ALIAS PETER WILSON, ON HABEAS CORPUS.

COMMITMENT BY A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—DISCHARGE.—A commitment by a Justice of the Peace holding a party to appear before a Grand Jury to answer upon a charge of murder, must state the name of the person alleged to have been murdered. But the omission of such name is not such a defect as will entitle the accused to be discharged on habeas corpus.

DISCHARGE FOR FAILURE TO INDICT.—Where a party who has been held to answer upon a criminal charge is not indicted by the Grand Jury at the term of Court next after his commitment, he is entitled to be discharged, unless good cause be shown for his further detention.

GOOD CAUSE FOR DETENTION OF PARTY ACCUSED OF CRIME.—The facts constituting good cause for the detention of a party not indicted at the next term, must, in a great measure, be left to the discretion of the Court, to be determined by the particular circumstances of each case; and their sufficiency, or insufficiency, cannot be examined by the Supreme Court through the instrumentality of a writ of habeas corpus.

INSUFFICIENT CAUSE FOR DETAINING A PRISONER.—The mere recommendation of a Grand Jury, that such party be detained to answer before another Grand Jury, is not of itself good cause for his detention.

PRESUMPTION AS TO DISCRETION OF COURT.—Where the record shows that the accused was detained upon the recommendation of the Grand Jury alone, the usual presumption that the discretion of the Court was exercised upon sufficient grounds, cannot be indulged.

APPLICATION to Mr. Justice WALLACE, for an order to discharge the prisoner from the custody of the Sheriff of El Dorado County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

George E. Williams, for Applicant.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

It appears by the petition and return to the writ, that the petitioner is retained in custody by the Sheriff of El Dorado County:

1. By virtue of an order of commitment in the following words:

“State of California, County of El Dorado. The People of the State of California, to the Sheriff of the County of El Dorado: An order having this day been made by me, that Peter Frederick Bull, alias Peter Wilson, be held to answer upon a charge of murder committed on the 12th day of October, A. D. 1871, at Placerville Township, you are hereby commanded to receive him into your custody, and detain him until he is legally discharged.

“Witness my hand officially, at Placerville, this 24th day of October, A. D. 1871.

“Justice of the Peace.”

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

2. By virtue of certain proceedings had in the County Court of El Dorado County: These proceedings show that a Grand Jury was regularly impaneled in that Court on the sixth day of November, and sworn to inquire into and true presentment make of all public offenses triable within the County of El Dorado, of which they might obtain evidence; the petitioner, as being a person held to answer, and charged with the commission of a public offense, appearing under the direction of the Court, and interposing a challenge to the panel, which was overruled.

The Grand Jury thus impaneled having entered upon their duties, and subsequently having made their final report to the Court, and not having found an indictment against the petitioner, were discharged from further service. The petitioner, thereupon, moved the Court "that he be discharged from custody, on the ground that the Grand Jury just discharged had failed to find any indictment against him." This motion was resisted by the District Attorney who presented to the Court a recommendation of the Grand Jury just discharged, which recommendation was indorsed upon the warrant of commitment above recited, and was in the following words: "We, the Grand Jury, beg leave to refer the case of Peter Frederick Bull, alias Peter Wilson, to the next Grand Jury, and we recommend that he be held to answer before the next Grand Jury of El Dorado County. H. B. Newell, Foreman of the Grand Jury. George M. Norton, Jr., Secretary." The record then proceeds as follows: "Thereupon the Court, without further or other cause than said recommendation being shown by the District Attorney, denied the motion of said Wilson to be discharged from custody, and granted the motion of the District Attorney; and it is ordered by the Court that the case of the said Peter Wilson be referred to the next Grand Jury, and that he be remanded to the custody of the Sheriff of said county, to await the action of the next Grand Jury."

Opinion of the Court — Wallace, J.

1. It is clear that the commitment issued by the Justice of the Peace is insufficient, in that it fails to state the name of the person alleged to have been murdered, or to state that the name of such person was unknown. (Cr. Pr. Act, Sec. 169.) But the petitioner is not entitled to be discharged merely by reason of this defect. (Act of Habeas Corpus, Sec. 21.)

2. The statute provides that "when a person has been held to answer for a public offense, if an indictment be not found against him at the next term of the Court at which he is held to answer, the Court shall order the prosecution to be dismissed, unless good cause to the contrary be shown." (Art. 1,783.)

The case in which a dismissal of the prosecution is not to follow upon the non-presentment of an indictment against the accused is exceptional—the accused has a right to depart, "unless good cause to the contrary be shown." This general provision of the statute, that the prisoner is not to be held indefinitely, is designed to secure to him a speedy trial, and this right is absolute, except some good cause be shown which may be supposed to take the case out of the operation of the general rule. What is "good cause," may be difficult to define with precision, since it must, in a great measure, be determined by reference to the particular circumstances appearing in each case. There should, undoubtedly, be some fact or circumstance disclosed to the Court upon which its authority in this respect, somewhat discretionary, could be brought into exercise. Its discretion is not to be arbitrary, but should proceed upon such knowledge or information as would enable it to determine for itself whether or not public justice requires the further detention of the prisoner, notwithstanding the delay upon the part of the prosecution. It must be admitted, too, I think, that ordinarily this discretion when exercised by the Court to which the law has intrusted it, is not subject to review, and that when exercised, the sufficiency or insufficiency of the grounds upon which it proceeded could not be examined here through the instrumentality of a writ of habeas corpus. The presumption that the discretion had been correctly exercised would ordinarily arise, if the record should state in terms that good cause appeared; so, too, if the record should recite a particular fact, or several facts, as being the facts upon which the Court had proceeded in ordering the detention of the prisoner, the import of such fact or facts as being sufficient or insufficient to amount to "good cause" would not be accurately weighed in this proceeding—it would rather be presumed that there were other existing facts not affirmatively disclosed upon the record which would support the action of the Court in making the order.

But in the case before me there can be no doubt that the circumstance upon which the Court acted in detaining the prisoner, was, in itself, wholly and absolutely insufficient to support the order. The Grand Jury, just discharged, had recommended that the prisoner be detained; therefore, he was detained. The record, too, states that the detention was "without further or other cause than said recommendation being shown by the District Attorney;" so that there is no room here for the indulgence of a presumption of the existence of some other and sufficient ground upon which the order might be supported.

The Grand Jury seem, in this instance, to have assumed the exercise of the discretion which belonged alone to the Court, and the Court seems to have made the order in mere deference to the expressed opinion of the Grand Jury, and without any investigation or information concerning the circumstances of the case before it. The statement that the order was made for no other cause than the mere presentation of this recommendation, is equivalent to the recital upon the record that no good cause—no cause at all — was shown, and where that condition appears there is no power to detain the prisoner.

It is, therefore, ordered that the prisoner be discharged from custody, and that a copy of this order be transmitted to the Sheriff of the County of El Dorado forthwith.

RAILROAD INCORPORATION — PAYMENT OF "TEN PER CENT" BY CHECK NOT SUFFICIENT.— Under the Act of May 20th, 1861, providing for the incorporation of railroad companies (Stats. 1861, p. 607), and requiring at least one thousand dollars per mile to be subscribed, and ten per cent thereof, in cash, to be actually and in good faith paid in before incorporation. Held, that payment of such ten per cent could not be made in a check on a bank, drawn by a person who had not on deposit funds sufficient to meet it, even though it appeared that such check would have been paid if presented.

PAYMENT OF "TEN PER CENT" A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO INCORPORATION OF RAILROAD COMPANY.— The provision of section one of the Act for the incorporation of railroad companies (Stats. 1861, p. 607), requiring payment of ten per cent of the amount subscribed in cash, is not merely declaratory; it is a condition precedent, without which the subscribers to a company have no power to incorporate.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

ten per cent on the amount subscribed by him, in money, and goes farther than the railroad Act of this State, for it in express terms forbids any subscriptions to be received or taken, without such payment. But it was expressly held that a check, or sight draft on a banker, is a good payment in money under the section cited. (Beach v. Smith, 28 Barb. 261.) The term "cash" payment, in the statute, must be construed according to its common acceptance in the everyday transactions of the business world. Such is the construction given it in the above cited case of Beach v. Smith, and it satisfies the spirit and accords with the reason of the statutory rule.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This is an action of quo warranto against the defendants, claiming to compose the "Oroville and Virginia City Railroad Company," in which the defendants are charged with usurping the functions of a railroad company, without having been duly and properly incorporated as such. The answer sets up the several acts which were performed by the corporators to effect an organization under the general corporation Act of this State, and avers that the statute was complied with, and the company duly organized. Judgment was entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals, both from the judgment and from the order denying a motion for new trial.

Written findings were filed, which were excepted to by the plaintiff as defective; but the exceptions were overruled, to which ruling the plaintiff excepted. This ruling is assigned as error on the appeal from the judgment; and it is further claimed that the judgment is inconsistent with the findings as they were made. The last point will be first considered.

The findings are certainly obnoxious to the objection (so repeatedly adverted to by this Court), that the findings of fact and conclusions of law are not separately and distinctly stated. Nevertheless, the facts intended to be found can be sufficiently eviscerated from the mere argument and inferences of the Court to render it apparent what facts were considered proved. Amongst other facts the Court finds that before the certificate of incorporation was signed, ten per cent of the amount previously subscribed "was paid in in cash and bankable checks." In a subsequent portion of the findings the particular manner in which this payment was made is thus explained: "The sum of ten thousand nine hundred dollars was paid by Bolinger for himself and Chambers (being the ten per cent upon the stock subscribed by them), by check drawn upon the Bank of California. The good faith of Chambers is shown by the evidence that in a short time after gold bullion was paid by him to Bolinger for his moiety of that check. The evidence of Bolinger shows that he had, prior to March 27th, 1867, a large bank account with the Bank of California; that oftentimes he overdraw his account, under arrangements with the bank, the bank charging him a certain interest on the overdrawn day's balance. Other witnesses testified that his checks upon the Bank of California had been taken by them as cash, and cash paid for them, and had never been dishonored. Bolinger says he could not now tell what the status of his account was at the bank at the time he drew this check; whether the balance then was two thousand dollars or three thousand dollars for him or against; but says absolutely and positively, that the check would have been cashed on presentation. That it never was presented, amounts to nothing. It, as all other checks drawn upon responsible parties in good faith and with money in the hands of the drawee to meet them, was only a representative of that much money, was paid by the subscribers and received by the company as money, was used by the company as cash assets, and the company could have received the money upon it any time it had been demanded. It was, then, an actual payment of money, and in good faith."

It further appears from the findings that ten per cent of the whole amount subscribed amounted to the sum of eleven thousand dollars, of which ten thousand nine hundred dollars was paid in the above named check. It is obvious that the Court intended to find as facts:

First — That the check would have been paid on presentation, whether Bolinger had funds on deposit to meet it or not.

Second — That the company received it as cash, but never presented it for payment.

Third — That when the check was drawn, Bolinger had not to his credit in bank sufficient funds to meet it.

Fourth — That the check was paid to and received by the company in good faith as cash.

Assuming these to have been the facts, the question for consideration is whether the delivery of the check was a compliance with the first section of the Act of May 20th, 1861, providing for the incorporation of railroad companies. (Stats. 1861, p. 607.)

That section requires, as a preliminary to the organization of the company, that stock to the amount of at least one thousand dollars per mile of the proposed road shall be subscribed "and ten per cent in cash so required to be subscribed shall be actually and in good faith paid to a Treasurer to be named and appointed by said subscribers from among their number."

We are not called upon, in this case, to decide whether or not a payment of the ten per cent in good faith by checks payable in presenti, and drawn against a sufficient sum on deposit to meet them, would be a compliance with this requirement of the statute, and particularly if the checks were presented and paid within a reasonable time. That is not this case; and the question here presented is whether the payment can be made in a check drawn by a person who had not on deposit sufficient funds to meet it, and which was never presented for payment, even though it be conceded that the check would have been paid had it been presented. If payment in this method can be substituted for the cash payment required by the statute, it is obvious that payment in a promissory note, payable on demand, and which would have been paid on presentation, but which was never presented for payment, or in any negotiable securities, which might at any time have been converted into cash, but were not so converted, would have been equally as valid as the method here adopted. Nothing was, in fact, paid by Bolinger, unless his personal liability as a drawer of the check can be considered payment; for it was not proved, as appears from the findings that he had any funds to his credit in bank of which the check could operate as an assignment; and it would have been purely at the option of the bank whether it would have paid the check or not. If it had refused, it could not have been coerced to pay it. It was under no legal obligation to pay it, and the case stands precisely as if Bolinger had made his promissory note to the company upon an understanding between him and the bank that, as a matter of favor and accommodation to him, the bank would pay the note on presentation; the note, however, never having been presented for payment.

It is a wholly immaterial circumstance that Bolinger was in good credit, and that his check might, and probably would, have commanded the cash in the vicinity. The same would doubtless have been true of his own, or any promissory note by responsible maker, or a good mortgage security, or marketable stocks, or any other kind of property which had a current market value. But none of them would have constituted a cash payment in the sense of a statute. The policy which dictated this provision is perfectly apparent. It was intended to prevent the formation of corporations for the construction of railroads unless the corporators should testify their good faith and earnestness in the enterprise by subscribing for stock to the amount of one thousand dollars per mile of the proposed road, and actually paying in cash ten per cent of the amount subscribed before proceeding to incorporate. It was also intended to furnish some guaranty to those dealing with the company that it was not a mere paper corporation, without any substantial basis. But whatever may have been the motive for this enactment, its language is clear and explicit, and the Courts have no authority to disregard it. It requires ten per cent of the subscription to be paid in cash; and a check drawn upon a bank by a person who had no funds to his credit, and which was never presented for payment, can in no just sense be deemed cash, however good the credit of the drawer. If the statute had intended to permit the credit of the subscriber to be substituted for cash it would have said so. But it evidently contemplated nothing of the kind. This objection arises on the face of the findings, and in my opinion is fatal to the alleged act of incorporation. The payment of ten per cent in cash was a condition precedent, without the performance of which the subscribers had no power to incorporate. An exact and literal compliance with the statute in this respect may not be indispensable. If from accident, inadvertence, or some other unintentional cause, there should be a failure to pay an insignificant portion of the ten per cent, I presume it would not vitiate the act of incorporation. But there must be a substantial compliance with the statute. In this case the whole amount to be paid was eleven thousand dollars, of which ten thousand nine hundred dollars was paid in Bolinger's check, leaving only one hundred dollars to be paid in cash. This cannot be regarded as a substantial compliance with the statute. Counsel insist, however, that the provision in respect to the prior subscription of stock, and the payment of the ten per cent, is directory only, and that the payment is not a condition precedent, the performance of which is essential to the validity of the act of incorporation, and in support of this proposition we are referred to the case of Commonwealth v. Westchester Railroad Company, 3 Grant, Pa. 200. But that decision was founded on a special statute, in many respects essentially different from ours, and does not sustain the position here contended for. But if it was directly in point, we would not be inclined to follow it. On the other hand, I think it is apparent that without a substantial compliance with this provision the subscribers acquired no jurisdiction to organize themselves into a corporate body, and this view of the law is supported by the following authorities: Eaton v. Aspinwall, 19 N. Y. 119; People v. Troy House Company, 44 Barb. 634; Haviland v. Chase, 39 Barb. 288; Taggart v. Western Md. Railroad Company, 24 Md. 588; People v. Rensselaer Insurance Company, 38 Barb. 323; Patterson v. Arnold, 45 Pa. St. R. 415.

Opinion of the Court — Crockett, J.

If these views be correct, the act of incorporation is invalid, and the defendants are not entitled to exercise corporate powers.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the District Court to enter judgment for the plaintiff on the findings.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF ELIJAH S. SILVEY, DECEASED.

HALF THE COMMON PROPERTY LEFT BY DECEASED HUSBAND GOES TO WIDOW ABSOLUTELY.—Where a husband dies, one half of the common property vests in the surviving wife, unaffected by any testamentary disposition he may have attempted to make of it.

WILL OF COMMON PROPERTY — WIDOW'S RIGHTS.—Where a husband, having only common property, left a will devising all his estate to his wife for life, and after her death to be equally divided between the children; held, that she was entitled to one half of the property absolutely in her own right, and to a life estate in the other half under the will.

CONSTRUCTION OF WILLS — DEVISES AFFECTING WIFE'S HALF OF COMMON PROPERTY.—A purpose by a husband to attempt the disposition by will of the wife's half of the common property is not to be readily inferred, and especially not where the words employed may have their fair and natural import by applying them only to that moiety of which he has the testamentary disposition.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of Solano County.

The Court below, in its decree of distribution, was of opinion, and adjudged and decreed, "that the said testator intended that said will should operate and take effect upon the whole of the community property, as well so much thereof as is by law subject to testamentary distribution as his wife's interest in the said community, and that it must operate upon the whole or upon none of the said property; that the said wife is not now entitled to take one half of the said property in her own right and the other half for life under the will, but that she must elect whether she will take and hold the whole estate for life, with the remainder to the children mentioned in the said will, or whether she will decline to take under the will and claim her half of the property as her interest in the community, and release all claim to the other half."

It was from the above portion of the decree of distribution that this appeal was taken by Mrs. Susan Riddle

Argument for Respondents.

(formerly Silvey). The estate, at the time of the decree, in June, 1871, was valued at about twenty-two thousand dollars.

John G. Pressley, for Appellant.

The case at bar was not a case of election, and the Court erred in holding that the widow should elect whether she would take the whole of the property for life under the will or her interest of one half absolutely, and renounce all claim to the other half. (See Jarman on Wills, 397, 398; 2 Story on Eq. Ju. 1086; Blake v. Banbury, 1 Ves. Jr. 523; 4 Kent. 58; Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 252; Theall v. Theall, 7 La. 226; Payne v. Payne, 18 Cal. 291; Morrison v. Bowman, 29 Cal. 350.)

The acceptance by the widow of the life estate in the husband's half of the community property was not repugnant to the provisions of the will, but strictly in accordance with the intention and purpose of the testator. The terms employed by him can refer to and operate only on his interest in the common property. This the widow takes for life, with remainder to the children; and her title to the other half of the property is absolute under the statute.

Pendegast & Stoney, for Respondents.

Silvey's will could not operate to deprive his widow of her half of the community property without her consent. So far, and only so far, do the authorities go. But the question of the effect and operation of a will is distinct from the question of the intention of a testator, who may, in plain and unmistakable language, undertake to devise property not subject to his testamentary disposition.

It was evidently the testator's intention to give his wife a life estate in all the property, instead of an estate of inheritance in half of it. The will must be read in the light of surrounding circumstances. His words must be taken to mean just what a person in his condition, at the same time and place, and under the same conditions, would naturally use them to express. He spoke the language of a living man. He spoke of all his property, and meant all the property which he had been managing and controlling, and over which he had the absolute power of disposition. (Hit. Dig. 3571.)

It is not reasonable to suppose that Silvey, having eight children, would leave one half of his property to his wife absolutely, and give her the other half during her natural life.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The entire estate was community property. Silvey left a widow (since his death become the wife of Riddle) and eight children. His will (so far as is claimed to be pertinent to the question here) was as follows:

“Item First — I will that out of my estate all my just debts be paid.

“Item Second — I will and bequeath the entire residue of my property to my dearly beloved wife, Susan, to be held, used, and enjoyed by her during her natural life, and after her death to be equally divided between * * * our children.”

Upon the death of Silvey, one half of the estate vested in his surviving wife, and the will is conceded to be inoperative as to that moiety. The Court below seems, however, to have been of opinion that the surviving wife could not be permitted to claim her moiety as survivor, under the statute, and, at the same time, claim an estate for life in the other moiety under the devise of the husband, and she was accordingly decreed to elect whether she would take one moiety in fee, and no more of the estate, or would take the entire estate for life, with remainder over to the children at her death.

It is said, in support of this decree, that though it be true that the devise must in law be confined in its operation to one moiety only, it was, nevertheless, the intention of the testator to dispose, by will, of the whole estate — that he intended to devise to the children an estate in remainder in the wife's statutory moiety at the same time that he purposed to vest her with an estate for life in the other moiety, which, but for the will, would have gone to the children as heirs at law of her father; and it is urged, that if the wife insist upon her right under the statute, she must be considered as thereby repudiating the will, and cannot be permitted to claim the benefit of its provisions in her favor.

There is nothing, however, in the language of the will which evinces an intention on the part of Silvey to dispose of the entire estate. The devise must be read as applying only to that moiety which was within his testamentary power. A purpose to attempt the disposition, by will, of property, which, by statute, would pass to the wife, as survivor of the matrimonial community immediately upon his death, is not to be readily inferred, especially where, as here, the words employed by the testator may have their fair and natural import, by applying them only to that moiety of which he had by law the testamentary disposition.

I am of opinion that the case of Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 252, is, upon all the points involved, decisive of this case. The general question in that case, as here, concerned the effect upon the right of the surviving wife of a devise by the husband of the community estate. Upon examining the record of that case remaining on file in this Court, it appears that the will of Beard was substantially as follows: "First—I give and bequeath to my mother * * * the sum of three hundred dollars, to be paid by my executors out of any moneys which may come into their hands from my estate after my death. * * * Second—I give and bequeath to my wife * * * the sum of five hundred dollars, to be paid by my executors out of any property after my decease. * * * Third—I give and bequeath to my daughter * * * all the property, of whatever kind or species, and all my money, except the amounts already bequeathed to my mother and my wife; * * * and I desire that none of said property shall be sold or disposed of before the 1st day of April, 1855, at which time I empower her guardians to sell all of such property," etc.

It was argued there, as here, that the surviving wife was necessarily driven to her election, whether she would claim under the will or against its provisions; and it appearing in that case that she had already accepted the legacy of five hundred dollars bequeathed to her, it was, therefore, insisted that she had thereby already elected to claim under the will, and, therefore, could not set up a claim to the moiety of the estate under the statute as survivor of the matrimonial community; and in this connection the rule was invoked by the counsel, that "one who takes an interest under the will cannot dispute the will." But whilst recognizing the general principle, that one who takes under a will cannot afterwards dispute its validity, the Court there said: "But the principle does not apply in the present case. The deceased had no authority to dispose of but one half of the property; this he might do to whomsoever he pleased. The plaintiff does not contest that right, but only seeks to withdraw her own property from the operation of a conveyance, which, it is claimed, has despoiled her of it. This she may do with the greatest propriety, as the legacy received by her was part of her husband's estate, and not her own."

In that case, it will be observed, the husband bequeathed to the wife a legacy, which was, of course, to be raised out of his own moiety of the community estate. In the case at bar, while he made no bequest to his wife, he devised to her an estate for life in his moiety. If the acceptance by the wife of the legacy, under her husband's will in the former case, was consistent with her claim subsequently made to a moiety of the estate as survivor, it is clear that her claim in the case at bar to one moiety in fee, and the other for her natural life, cannot be successfully resisted here.

The decree of the Court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree not inconsistent with the views expressed in this opinion.'

HENRY MYERS, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE ESTATE OF KATY FLORENCE MYERS, DECEASED, v. THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES FOR THE DEATH OF AN INFANT.—Under the Act of April 26th, 1862, a jury may award exemplary damages for the death of an infant by the wrongful negligence of another.

IDEM — INTERFERENCE BY COURT.—The discretion of the jury in fixing the amount of such damages should not be interfered with by the Court, except in cases of the most palpable abuse of such discretion.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES.—The infant daughter of M., seven years old, was run over and killed by a steam fire engine controlled by a servant of San Francisco. In an action for damages M. obtained a verdict for five thousand dollars. Held, that the damages assessed were not so excessive as to justify a presumption that the jury was misled by passion, prejudice, or ignorance.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff obtained a verdict and judgment for five thousand dollars, and the defendant appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

W. C. Burnett, for Appellant, argued that where only negligence is shown, compensation for actual loss is all that can be recovered. (Sedgwick on Measure of Damages, Sec. 38.) The plaintiff only charges that defendant's servant was negligent and careless, not that there was malice or gross negligence. He also argued that the verdict was so excessive as to justify the presumption that the jury were influenced by passion and prejudice. (Turner v. North Beach and Mission Railroad Company, 34 Cal. 594.) The verdict was, therefore, an abuse of discretion.

Quint & Hardy, for Respondent, argued that exemplary damages are allowed under the statute, without any averment of malice or gross negligence. (Oldfield v. N. Y. and H. R. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 314.) Also, that the verdict of the jury was not excessive, the jury having given what they deemed a just compensation. (Railroad Company v. Barron, 5 Wallace, 90, 104; Sherman & Redf. on Neg., Sec. 618; Oldfield v. N. Y. and H. R. R. Co., supra; Bowler v. Lane, 3 Met., Ky. 311; Childs v. Drake, 2 Met., Ky. 146; *Goodsell v. By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

This is an action for damages under the statute of April 26th, 1862, entitled "An Act requiring compensation for causing death by wrongful act, neglect, or default."

The person whose death is alleged to have been caused by the negligence and carelessness of defendant's employé, was the infant daughter of plaintiff, about seven years of age, who, as is alleged, was run over and crushed to death by a steam fire engine while being driven at a furious and dangerous rate of speed, and in a negligent and careless manner, the said engine being the property and under the control and management of defendant, and driven by its employee.

The questions of carelessness and negligence of defendant and the contributory negligence of the deceased infant, were fairly submitted to the jury, and, I think, the evidence fully justified the conclusion at which, from their verdict, they appear to have arrived.

The rule, or measure of damages claimed by appellant, is manifestly untenable under the statute.

The jury having determined that the death of the plaintiff's intestate was caused by the wrongful negligence of defendant, the first section of the Act renders it liable to an action for damages; and the third section most clearly authorizes the jury, when such liability is established, to give damages beyond the pecuniary loss sustained by the next of kin. The language of the section is: "In every such action the jury may give such damages, pecuniary and exemplary, as they shall deem fair and just, and may take into consideration the pecuniary injury resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin of such deceased person."

The statute, then, having authorized the jury to give exemplary damages, when the death is caused by the simple negligence of defendant, the discretion of the jury in fixing the amount of such damages should not be interfered with by the Court, except in cases of most palpable abuse of such discretion. The statute supersedes the common law rule, and must control. Most of the States have statutes authorizing actions by personal representatives, or next of kin, of deceased persons against the person or corporation through whose simple or willful negligence the death was occasioned; but our statute upon the matter of damages authorized, is essentially different, and less restricted than any cognate statute of other States, so far as I am at present advised.

In New York and Connecticut the maximum of damages is limited to five thousand dollars, and in these States, as also in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, damages are required to be assessed with reference to the pecuniary injury. In Kentucky, by statute, if the death of a person, not an employee, be caused by the negligence or carelessness of the proprietor or proprietors of any railroad, the personal representative of such deceased person is authorized to institute suit and recover damages in the same manner that the person himself might have done for any injury when death did not ensue, and under this statute the Supreme Court of Kentucky holds that exemplary damages may be recovered. (Bowler v. Lane, 3 Met. R. 313.)

The damages assessed by the jury in this case, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, are not, in my judgment, so excessive as to justify a presumption that the jury was misled, either by passion, prejudice, or ignorance; hence their verdict should not be disturbed on the ground of abuse of their discretion.

DUTY OF COURT TO VACATE ORDER INADVERTENTLY MADE.—Where a Court, through its own inadvertence, has prematurely made an order granting a motion for a new trial before the final submission of the motion, it is the duty of the Court, upon its own motion, to vacate the order so made.

EVIDENCE CONTRARY TO ADMISSIONS IN PLEADINGS.—All evidence contrary to the admissions of the pleadings should be disregarded, the admissions being binding on the party making them.

Statement of Facts.

FINDING NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.—In a suit to compel the conveyance of land, H. alleged the purchase by herself of an interest in the land, and an agreement by P. to exchange title to other lands for the title to hers; that she had deeded her interest to P. under the agreement, but that P. had refused to deed to her. The answer admitted the purchase by H., but averred that it was made with money loaned by himself to her; admitted the conveyance by H. to himself, but denied the mutual agreement to convey. The referee who tried the case, found that the purchase was made by H. but with P.'s money, and that P. had paid no consideration for the deed from H. Judgment was for P. Held, to be error, because not supported by the evidence—all evidence contrary to the admissions of the answer being disregarded.

PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF INNOCENT PURCHASER.—In a suit to compel the conveyance of land, where it is alleged that the land was deeded to P. through fraud on the part of her affianced husband, prior to marriage, the findings being silent on the subject, with no exceptions to them as defective, and P. claiming to be a purchaser for value in good faith, without notice of plaintiff's equities, it will be presumed that all the facts necessary to support the judgment in favor of P. were found.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was a suit in equity to compel the defendants to convey to the plaintiff an undivided one half interest in two parcels of land—one known as the Geyser Springs tract and the other as the Nicassio Rancho—upon an alleged agreement by the defendant, Joel S. Polack, to so convey. It is alleged in the complaint that in the year 1857 the plaintiff purchased an interest in Goat Island of Frank Pixley, and in the following year purchased another interest in the same island from Edward A. King, and another interest in the island of William Hart, Jr.; that in 1861 the defendant Joel agreed to exchange by deed an undivided one half interest in the Geyser Springs and Nicassio property for the plaintiff's interest in Goat Island; that in pursuance of the agreement the plaintiff gave him a deed to her Goat Island property, and that immediately afterwards he gave her exclusive possession of the Geyser Springs land, but failed and refused to give her a deed to either of the parcels of land; that at the time of the agreement the title to the Nicassio Ranch stood in the name of one Pratt, but was really owned by the defendant Joel; that he procured Pratt to make a deed of the ranch to the defendant Mary, who was then unmarried, but to whom the defendant Joel was then engaged to be married, and whom he subsequently married; that the defendant Mary knew of these facts; that the deed to her was made to delay and defraud the creditors of the defendant Joel; and that he is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of twenty thousand dollars—the value of the Geyser Springs property being ten thousand dollars. The answer denies most of the allegations of the complaint, but makes the following admissions:

“The defendant admits that on the 10th day of February, A. D. 1857, plaintiff purchased of one Frank M. Pixley an interest in the Island of Yerba Buena, for the sum of five thousand five hundred dollars; but denies that the whole purchase money thereof was paid by plaintiff, and alleges that only the sum of six hundred and fifty dollars was paid, and that the balance of four thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars is still due from said plaintiff to said Pixley.

“Admits that said plaintiff did, on the 9th day of April, A. D. 1858, purchase of Edward L. King, for the sum of one thousand dollars, by deed made on that day, another interest in and to said island; but denies that said sum of one thousand dollars, or any part thereof, was paid by said plaintiff, or by any person than this defendant; and alleges the fact to be that said purchase was made for said plaintiff by this defendant as her agent, and that the said sum of one thousand dollars paid by her therefor was money loaned and advanced to her therefor by this defendant, and at her special instance and request.

“Admits that plaintiff did, on the 24th day of June, 1858, purchase of one William Hart, Jr., another interest in said

Statement of Facts.

Island of Yerba Buena, for the sum of four hundred and sixty dollars; but denies that said sum of four hundred and sixty dollars, or any part thereof, was paid by said plaintiff or by any other person than this defendant, and alleges the fact to be that said purchase was made by this defendant for said plaintiff, as her (said plaintiff's) agent, and that said sum of four hundred and sixty dollars paid by her heretofore, was money loaned and advanced to her therefor by this defendant, and at said plaintiff's special instance and request."

The case was tried by a referee, who reported findings and a judgment for the defendant. The first finding of facts was as follows:

"That the defendant, Joel S. Polack, on the 10th day of February, 1857, in the name of the plaintiff, purchased for the consideration of the sum of six hundred and fifty (650) dollars, of F. M. Pixley, an interest in the Island of Yerba Buena. That on the 9th day of April, 1858, the said defendant, Joel, purchased in the name of the plaintiff, for the consideration of the sum of one thousand (1,000) dollars, another interest in said island. That on the 24th day of June, 1858, the defendant, Joel, purchased in the name of the plaintiff, for the consideration of the sum of four hundred and sixty (460) dollars, another interest in said island. That the several sums of money so paid for said respective interests in said island, was the money of the defendant, Joel, and no part of the same was the money of or furnished by the plaintiff. That the plaintiff, by deed dated September 11th, 1861, conveyed her interest in said island to the defendant, Joel S. Polack; that the expressed consideration in said deed was the sum of one thousand (1,000) dollars, but no part of said consideration was at any time ever paid by the defendant, Joel, to the plaintiff."

Argument for Appellant.

The plaintiff moved for a new trial; the motion was denied, and he appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

H. F. Crane, for Appellant.

Where a Court has granted a new trial a party acquires a vested right of which he cannot be deprived, especially without an opportunity of being heard, and in case of failure in his resistance to save his exceptions, and see that some record is kept of the proceedings, and that some intelligible order is entered, from which he may appeal.

The first finding is for the plaintiff, upon the principal issue, to wit: the parol agreement; and is in exact accordance with the pleadings and proofs of the plaintiff, and directly against the pleadings and evidence of the defendants.

The first, second, third, and fourth clauses of the first finding of the referee are against and contrary to the express admissions and averments of the sworn answers of the defendants. The answer admits expressly that plaintiff made the purchase of Pixley, as averred in the complaint, and also avers that plaintiff paid six hundred and fifty dollars of the purchase money. The finding is that Polack made the purchase in the name of plaintiff, and that the money paid was his money. As to the King and Hart titles, the defendant's answer expressly admits that plaintiff made the purchases through Polack, as her agent, and avers that he loaned her the money to pay. The findings on these points are against the averments and admissions of the defendant's answer, because the referee finds that defendant, Polack, purchased these titles in the name of the plaintiff, but paid for them with his own money. Thus, it will be seen, that the referee has found against the sworn admissions of the record, which are conclusive on the defendants. (1 Greenleaf on Ev. Secs. 27, 205; Mulford v. Estudillo, 22 Cal. 181.)

Argument for Respondents.

John R. Jarboe, for Respondents.

This Court will not take notice of or review any proceeding, right or wrong, in the Court below, unless that proceeding is embodied or presented in some statement on appeal. (Practice Act, Secs. 338, 333, 195, 346; Harper v. Minor, 27 Cal. 109.)

If plaintiff had desired to suggest to this Court that the power of the Court below had ceased with the order made by the Judge on September 21st, 1870, and that the vacating order, and the order of December first was error, he should have made an appeal from the vacating order, and filed a statement setting up the order of twenty-first of September, and the proceedings had in setting it aside, or he should have assigned error in a separate statement on appeal from the order of December 1st, 1870.

On the 21st of September, 1870, the cause was not finally submitted; defendants' brief was not filed, nor due. The argument was not, therefore, closed, and an order disposing of the cause was premature and void. Again, the order was not made by the Court, but was merely filed with the papers, and not copied in the minutes. An order made out of Court without notice, may be vacated without notice.

The answer of the defendants was, in substance, a denial of the fact that plaintiff had purchased the interests in Goat Island with her own money; a denial of any agreement, verbal or written, on the part of J. S. Polack, to convey one half, or any part, of the Geysers to plaintiff; a denial that he had ever put plaintiff in possession of the Geysers, in pursuance of any agreement, or other way, and an allegation on the part of Mrs. Polack, that she had, long before her marriage to defendant, J. S. Polack, and for value, and without notice of any of plaintiff's claims, bought of defendant, J. S. Polack, the Geyser Springs Rancho.

The first finding of the referee is not in conflict with de-defendants' answer; because while the answer admits the possession by plaintiff, they set up that all the money was advanced by Polack, except in one instance. And in Polack's testimony he swears that all the moneys were his, and that he took the deeds in plaintiff's name because he supposed she would pay him back the money and keep the island.

Admitting the deed to defendant of Goat Island to have been voluntary, as plaintiff says, yet, as the referee finds that plaintiff had no interest in the island, it would not affect the rights of parties either way. If the finding was defective on this point, plaintiff should have moved to correct.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

This cause was tried before a referee, who reported his findings and a judgment in favor of the defendants, which was duly entered; and thereupon the plaintiff moved for a new trial. The motion was argued, and the defendants' counsel was allowed a certain period within which to file a brief in opposition to the motion. Before the time had expired, the Judge, apparently through inadvertence, wrote and signed an order at chambers granting the motion, and filed it with the papers in the cause, and caused it to be noted in the daily rough minute book kept by the Clerk. But when his attention was called to the fact that the order was prematurely made, he rescinded it on the ex parte motion of the defendants' counsel, who was then permitted to file his brief; after which the Court denied the motion, and the plaintiff has appealed as well from the judgment as from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

If we can review this order on the record here presented (a point not necessary to be now denied), I think there was no error in vacating the order upon the facts contained in the stipulation of counsel. It was prematurely entered, evidently through the inadvertence of the Judge, and before the motion was finally submitted for decision.. It had not even gone into the engrossed minutes of the Clerk; and it was the duty of the Court, as soon as its attention was called to the fact, to vacate of its own motion, an order prematurely made, through its own inadvertence, before the final submission of the motion.

One of the grounds of a motion for a new trial was that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings of the referee; and as to some of the findings this point is well taken. The first finding is directly against the admissions of the answer of Joel S. Polack. In the answer it is explicitly admitted that the several interests of Pixley, King, and Hart, in Goat Island, were purchased by the plaintiff, and that on the purchase of Pixley, she paid, of her own money, the sum of six hundred and fifty dollars; but the answer avers that Polack loaned her the purchase money paid to King and Hart. The first finding is to the effect that all these purchases were made by Polack in the name of the plaintiff, and that he paid all the purchase money out of his own funds. All evidence contrary to the admissions of the pleadings should be disregarded, the admissions being binding on the party. (1 Greenl. Ev. Secs. 27-205; Mulford v. Estudillo, 32 Cal. 131.) This finding was clearly not justified by the evidence; but it is claimed that this finding is immaterial, in view of the subsequent findings, which, it is said, are decisive of the action. This is doubtless true, if it be conceded that the error into which the referee fell in the first finding had no influence upon his mind in deciding upon the conflicting evidence on the other points in the case. The contest turned mainly on two questions, to wit: First—Whether the consideration of the conveyance from the plaintiff to Polack of her interest in Goat Island was a promise by the latter to convey to the plaintiff one-half of the Geyser Springs property, or whether the conveyance was made solely on account of the plaintiff's indebtedness to Polack for the advances made by him on the purchase by her of the interests of King and Hart in Goat Island. Second—Whether Polack put the plaintiff into possession of the Geyser Springs, in virtue of his verbal promise, to convey to her one half of the property. On both these issues the referee found against the plaintiff, on the erroneous assumption that the plaintiff held the interests in Goat Island, acquired through Pixley, King, and Hart, not in her own right, but in trust for Polack, who had purchased the property in the plaintiff's name, and paid for it with his own money. But if the referee had assumed as true the admissions of the answer on this point, as he ought to have done, it might, and probably would, have materially influenced his judgment in weighing the conflicting evidence on the contested points above mentioned. At all events, we cannot assume that this error of the referee did not and could not properly influence his mind in deciding on the credibility of witnesses, who flatly contradicted each other as to the most material facts of the case. Assuming that Polack purchased and paid for the Goat Island property, and took the deeds, for his own convenience, in the plaintiff's name, the referee may well have concluded that the plaintiff and her daughter were not worthy of credence when they testified that Polack promised to convey to the plaintiff one half of the Geyser Springs, in consideration of a conveyance to him of the mere legal title to the Goat Island property, of which he was already the equitable owner. But he might have taken a very different view of the credit to which they were entitled, and of the probable truth of their statements, if he had assumed that the plaintiff was, in fact, the owner of the Goat Island property, subject only to a debt of one thousand four hundred and sixty dollars due to Polack for the money advanced on the purchases from King and Hart. The defendant Mary Polack, however, claims to have been a purchaser for value, in good faith, and without notice of the plaintiff's equities of the Geyser Springs prior to her intermarriage with the other defendant. The findings are entirely silent on this branch of the case, and there was no exception to the findings as defective. In such cases the rule is well settled in this Court that we will presume all the facts to have been found which are necessary to support the judgment. We cannot, therefore, disturb the judgment as to Mary Polack.

Judgment affirmed as to the defendant Mary Polack, and reversed as to the defendant Joel S. Polack, and remanded for a new trial as to him.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Byers & Elliott, for Appellants, argued that the Court had no jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action, and cited 2 Story on Const. Secs. 1663, 1665; 1 Kent's Com. 366, 367; The People v. The Steamer America, 34 Cal. 679. They also argued that the damage resulted from an inevitable accident, for which a carrier is not responsible. (2 Kent, 826; Faulkner v. Wright, 1 Rice, 107; Neal v. Sanderson, 2 Smedes & Marsh. 572; Eveleigh v. Sylvester, 2 Brevard, 178.)

J. H. Budd, for Respondent.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

In this case there is no brief on file on the part of the respondent, although there is on file what purports to be a reply to respondent's brief. We are therefore compelled to investigate the case without the assistance of counsel, so far as respondent is concerned.

The complaint charges that defendant is a common carrier, and as such undertook to carry for plaintiff twenty-one tons of wheat from the City of Stockton to San Francisco; that the wheat was delivered to the defendant and received by him, but was, while in transit, damaged through the fault of defendant. To recover this damage is the object of this suit. The answer admits that the defendant was a common carrier. The contract and the loss were proven substantially as alleged. This appeal is by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial.

The defendant contends that the Court has no jurisdiction, because the action arises upon a maritime contract, and is cognizable in admiralty. This position is manifestly untenable. The Judiciary Act, which defines the jurisdiction of the District Courts of the United States, and confers upon them admiralty jurisdiction, secures to suitors a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it. It has been repeatedly held that the State Courts have concurrent jurisdiction of causes of action cognizable in admiralty where only a common law remedy is sought.

The vessel of the defendant, at the time of the loss, was moored at the wharf at the City of Stockton, where vessels usually lie while loading and unloading. But a portion of plaintiff's wheat had been taken on board, when the tide receding left the vessel upon the mud in the slough. There happened to be under the vessel a piece of cord-wood which was pressed down into the mud, but which, owing to the weight of the vessel, punched a hole in the bottom of the vessel, which caused it to fill with water, and hence the loss.

The Court finds, that the damage was occasioned by a large piece of cord-wood, which had sunk to the bottom of the place where the vessel lay; but whether it came to lie there accidentally, or had been placed there by some person, the Court was unable to determine. The parties were both ignorant of its being there, until after the damage had been done; that at the time of the injury the defendant's vessel was strong and in good condition and sufficient to have safely carried the plaintiff's goods, but for the accident.

Under these circumstances there can be no doubt of the liability of the defendant. A common carrier is not only responsible for negligence, but is an insurer against any loss not occasioned by act of God, the public enemies, or the fault of the party suffering the loss. When loss occurs the burden of proof is upon the carrier, to show that it resulted from one or the other of these excepted cases.

It is not necessary to decide whether defendant would have been liable, had it appeared that the stick of wood had sunk to its place without the interposition of the agency of man. The falling of the tide, leaving the vessel upon the bottom of the slough, must have been anticipated. There was no sudden, unlooked-for physical event, against which no prudence could guard. It does not appear that the vessel could not have been so moored that it would not have been left aground when the tide receded. It may be claimed, with some degree of plausibility, that the defendant would be liable for want of proper care.

Statement of Facts.

Judgment and order affirmed.

REPLEVIN — ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT.—Where the action was replevin in the detinet, and the Court found that the value of the property was six hundred dollars, that the plaintiff was its owner and entitled to its possession, and that the defendant detained it from him, and then gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the property, or for the sum of one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty cents, at the option of the defendant; held, to be error; first, because it gave the defendant the option to retain the property by paying a named sum; and, second, because the sum to be paid was less than the value, as found.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, County of Santa Cruz.

On the 12th of October, 1869, Strahle & Hughes leased certain billiard tables to McEwen for one year, under a written agreement that he should pay them a monthly rent of forty-three dollars and eighty-four cents, and at the end of the year should have the right to purchase the property for the sum of five dollars. On the 12th day of July, 1870, McEwen sold the tables to one Otto, informing him that fifty-three dollars and eighty-seven cents of the rent remained unpaid. In the same month Otto sold the property to the defendant for eight hundred dollars, and afterwards tendered to Strahle & Hughes fifty-three dollars and eighty-seven cents, which they refused to receive, claiming that there was due them the sum of one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty-four cents. In July, 1870, Strahle & Hughes sold their interest in the tables to the plaintiff, who brought this suit to recover the property, or the value of it. The Court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the property, or for one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty cents.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Albert Hogan, for Appellant.

Heacock & Adams, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

The Court below found that the title to the personal property sued for was in Strahle & Hughes, and was vested in Cummings by the transfer they made to him in July, 1870, and that it had never vested in McEwen, Otto, or the defendant, Stewart; that Cummings, after the transfer to him, and before commencing the action, demanded of the defendant the possession of the property, but the latter refused to comply with the demand; that the rent due upon the lease had not been paid according to its terms; that Otto, from whom the defendant derived the property, had tendered to Strahle & Co. only fifty-three dollars and eighty-seven cents, when the amount really then due for rent was one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty-four cents; that Strahle & Co. had refused to receive the smaller amount so tendered; and that the value of the property was six hundred dollars.

Thereupon judgment was rendered that plaintiff recover the property, or one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty cents, with interest thereon.

Subsequently to the rendition of this judgment, the defendant having deposited in Court the amount of the judgment and costs, the Court ordered that the property in controversy be redelivered to the defendant, that he be "declared to be the owner thereof," and that satisfaction of the judgment be entered. This appeal is from the judgment and the order.

The Court having found that the property belonged to the plaintiff, and not to the defendant, and the latter having no right to detain it after the demand made upon him for its delivery, and it being also found that its value was six hundred dollars, it followed by necessary legal conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to the property, if it could be had, or if it could not, then to its ascertained value — six hundred dollars.

The amended answer of the defendant denied the title of the plaintiff, and denied his right to the possession of the property in controversy. It did not set up the lease from Strahle & Co., under which the defendant had received it, nor did it aver performance or any excuse for non-performance by the defendant, or by McEwen, or Otto, of the conditions and stipulations of the lease, nor offer to pay the rent then due, or due at any time and unpaid, or allege any matter whatsoever entitling the defendant to be relieved from the ascertained forfeiture of the right of possession of the property under the terms of the lease. The defense rested wholly upon the asserted legal right of the defendant to the property and to its possession. There was, therefore, no case presented for relief upon equitable grounds, or by the payment or tender of the rent due upon the lease. That one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty cents was due as rent, and not merely the smaller sum of fifty-three dollars and eighty-seven cents, tendered and refused, was only important as establishing that under the terms of the lease the defendant had lost the right to the possession of the property sued for, and was not to be considered for the purpose of affecting the amount of money for which judgment was to be rendered if the plaintiff should succeed in the action.

Again, the action was replevin in the detinet, and the facts being ascertained that the property was of the value of six hundred dollars, that the plaintiff was its owner and entitled to its possession, and that the defendant detained it from him (no damages for the detention being found), it resulted that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the possession of the property, if delivery thereof could be had; otherwise, for its value as found.

But the judgment as rendered, was for the property or for one hundred and seventy-six dollars and twenty cents, with interest, etc., and as thus rendered it gave the defendant the option to retain the property by paying a named sum of money, and that sum, too, less in amount than the ascertained value of the property itself.

I think that the judgment and order should be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to render judgment for the plaintiff, in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

Mr. Justice SPRAGUE expressed no opinion.

ment was rendered enjoining B. from disturbing H. in the use of three hundred inches of water. Held, that the judgment was consistent with the verdict and with justice.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, County of Santa Barbara.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

J. Franklin Williams, for Appellants.

Charles E. Huse, for Respondent.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The plaintiff alleges that in 1867 he constructed a ditch, whereby he appropriated, and thenceforth continued to use, for milling and other useful purposes, the water of a certain creek flowing along the margin of his land; that afterwards, and whilst he was so using the water, the defendants, with force and violence, tore down his dam, so as to prevent the flow of water in the ditch, and refuse to permit him to maintain the dam, threatening again to destroy it if he should rebuild it; that the defendants are unable to respond in damages, and that the injury which he would suffer, if the dam is abated, would be irreparable. The prayer is for damages and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with plaintiff in the use of the water.

The answer, after denying most of the material averments of the complaint, sets up new matter, to the effect that the first ditch constructed by the plaintiff was a small ditch, carrying only a part of the water of the creek, leaving a surplus, which the defendants appropriated for domestic purposes and irrigation; that after they had so appropriated the surplus water, the plaintiff constructed a new ditch of larger capacity, which carried off and diverted all the water of the creek from its natural bed, and entirely cut off that portion of the water which the defendants had appropriated. As affirmative relief, they pray for damages against the plaintiff.

At the trial a jury was impaneled, to whom special issues were submitted, and who found, in effect, that the construction of plaintiff's ditch in 1867 was an appropriation of the waters of the creek to the extent of the capacity of the ditch, which was sufficient to carry the greater portion, but not all the water of the creek; that the plaintiff, therefore, did not appropriate all the water of the creek; that in the Spring or Summer of 1870 the plaintiff built a new dam or ditch, which diverted a portion of the water of the creek, but not enough to diminish the quantity appropriated by the defendants. The Court entered a judgment fixing the quantity of water to which the plaintiff is entitled at three hundred inches, which it finds to have been the capacity of the plaintiff's first ditch, and enjoining the defendants from disturbing the plaintiff in the use and enjoyment of that quantity of water. But no damages were awarded either to the plaintiff or defendants. From this judgment the defendants appeal on the judgment roll alone, and insist that on the facts found by the jury the injunction ought to have been dissolved and the complaint dismissed. But I discover no error in the record. The plaintiff first appropriated all the water which his original ditch would carry, which the Court finds was three hundred inches; and the defendants afterwards appropriated the whole or a portion of the surplus. Subsequently the plaintiff constructed a new dam or ditch; but the judgment limits the quantity of water to be diverted by the plaintiff to three hundred inches, which is the amount originally appropriated, and leaves all the surplus for the use of the defendants. The judgment appears to me to be entirely consistent with the verdict and with justice, so far as the facts are disclosed in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

JOHN W. MORRIS v. RENCH ANGLE.

NEW TRIAL STATEMENT TREATED AS SUCH, THOUGH CALLED STATEMENT ON APPEAL.—Where a transcript on appeal showed that a notice of motion for new trial was given and argued in due time, and that the points made on such motion could not properly be considered without a statement on such motion, and that no objection was made on such motion for want of such statement; and the transcript contained a statement manifestly intended as a statement on new trial, but headed "Statement on Appeal:" held, that such statement should be treated as a statement on motion for new trial.

PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY OF PROCEEDINGS OF DISTRICT COURT.—It is not to be presumed that a District Court would proceed to hear and determine a motion for new trial on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings, without a settled statement as required by law.

APPEAL — MATTERS NOT PART OF JUDGMENT ROLL MUST BE EMBODIED IN STATEMENT OR BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.—Notices of motion to strike out portions of pleadings, or to dismiss action and orders upon such motions, and judgment rolls in other suits introduced as evidence, do not constitute a part of the judgment roll in a case, and hence are not a part of the record on appeal, unless embodied in a statement or bill of exceptions.

TRANSACTION CONSTITUTING ABSOLUTE SALE AND NOT MORTGAGE.—Where Morris and Angle owned a lot of sheep, and Morris executed a bill of sale of his half to Angle, who was in possession, in consideration of the surrender to him of his own note, previously given to Angle, and the giving to him of Angle's note for the balance; and Angle at the same time agreed in writing to sell back to Morris at a future time, on payment of the money represented by the notes: held, that the transaction constituted an absolute sale, and not a mortgage.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Mendocino.

This was an action to recover the one half of eighteen hundred and ninety-seven sheep, being a lot of seven hundred and fifty claimed to have been mortgaged by plaintiff to defendant on May 30th, 1866, and their increase up to the commencement of the suit in October, 1869; and in default of such sheep, for the sum of three thousand seven hundred and ninety-four dollars. The contracts and papers passing between the parties, and the surrounding circumstances, are fully stated in the opinion. There was a judgment in the Court below in favor of plaintiff for the sum of four hundred and eighty-nine dollars and twenty-three cents and one half of eleven hundred and forty-five sheep. Defendant appealed from the judgment and also from an order overruling his motion for a new trial.

Statement of Facts.

The statement contained in the transcript on appeal, though called and headed "Statement on Appeal," showed in terms that it was a statement on motion for new trial. The grounds of alleged error were set forth expressly as those upon which defendant would "rely upon the hearing of said motion for new trial," and the document concluded with the words: "Wherefore, defendant asks for a new trial in this cause."

The statement noticed the fact that certain motions had been made to strike out portions of the complaint and to dismiss the action; that they had been overruled, and that defendant excepted; but it did not embrace the papers used in such motions, or show the grounds or the orders made. These notices and orders, as also the judgment roll in a previous suit between the same parties, were printed in the transcript; but not as a part of the statement or of a bill of exceptions.

The testimony on the part of the plaintiff, contained in the statement, tended to show that defendant often talked with plaintiff about the best way to take care of the sheep, that he once asked plaintiff to find a place to keep them, and said that plaintiff must do his part; that he rented the sheep to one Petty, and said to him, "Keep account of the wool, as I have to settle with Morris;" that he said once to Morris: "Let us go down the country and find a sheep range for our sheep;" that on another occasion he said that he had a mortgage on the sheep from Morris; and at another time he said that Morris would have some sheep if he paid for or redeemed them. The defendant on his part denied that he had said anything of the kind, or of any such import or meaning.

Leeman Haile, for Appellant.

The note of Morris to Angle having been delivered up by the latter to the former at the time the bill of sale of the sheep was made, it is plain that the transaction did not constitute a mortgage to secure that note. There was then no longer a debt or evidence of a debt owing from plaintiff to defendant. A mortgage is a security for the payment of money upon a subsisting debt; there cannot be a mortgage without a debt, for the one wholly depends upon the other. (1 Hillard on Mortgages, 2; Wright v. Ross, 36 Cal. 441.)

The bill of sale is absolute on its face, and was clearly intended as an absolute sale. The agreement cannot be held to have been intended as a defeasance, or have the effect of rendering the sale a mortgage, for the reasons that it does not purport to be a defeasance, or in any manner refer to the bill of sale; it is not for the same sheep conveyed in the bill of sale, but for sheep of the same quality as those "now owned by the said party of the first part;" it is not for the sheep conveyed in the bill of sale, with their increase for one year, but for the same number, to wit: three hundred and seventy-five, to be delivered one year from date; nor does the price to be paid by the terms of the agreement correspond to the debt upon which the pretended mortgage is alleged to have been given — the price to be paid being six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, in gold coin, and the pretended debt being four hundred and twenty-six dollars.

McGarvey & Carothers, and Thomas B. Bond, for Respondent.

The several motions to strike out and the motion to dismiss, the orders made upon them, and the judgment roll in the previous case of Morris v. Angle, are not properly included in the transcript, for the reason that they are no part of the judgment roll in the case at bar and are not embodied in any statement or bill of exceptions. They should, therefore, be stricken out. (More v. De Valle, 28 Cal. 174; Harper v. Miner, 27 Cal. 109.)

There is also no statement on motion for new trial, or anything purporting to be such a statement, in the transcript. There is nothing but a statement on appeal. In the absence of a statement on motion for a new trial, the insufficiency of evidence to justify the decision cannot be inquired into, and if it could, the evidence being conflicting, the Court would not disturb the decision. (Hagar v. Lucas, 29 Cal. 310; Gayliard v. Hoberlin, 18 Cal. 895.)

There is no finding, it is true, of any indebtedness from Morris to Angle; but there is nothing to show that all the evidence is before the Court, and the presumption is that there was evidence to sustain the judgment. (Tewksbury v. McGraff, 33 Cal. 237.)

The transaction, though it may be strictly speaking a mortgage, has all the properties of a pledge. Not only is that the effect of the documents taken together, but the testimony shows that the parties had frequent settlements concerning the expenses of taking care of the sheep and the profits from the sale of wool and mutton, and that in said settlements defendant presented accounts against Morris for salt, shearing, herding, and other expenses, subsequent to the execution of the bill of sale, and told Petty to "keep account of the wool, as he had to settle with Morris."

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The statement found in the transcript with the caption "Statement on Appeal," is manifestly the statement of appellant on motion for a new trial; the matters therein contained clearly indicate that the same was intended as a statement on motion for a new trial; and further, the transcript discloses that defendant in due time and form gave notice of his intention to move for a new trial, and that the motion was in due time and form made by him, which motion was argued before the Court by the counsel of the respective parties, and no objection appears to have been made by plaintiff to the hearing of such motion for want of a proper statement on which to base the same; and it is not to be presumed that the Court would proceed to hear and determine a motion based upon the ground "that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings," without a settled statement as required by law.

The appeal is by the defendant from the judgment, and also from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The notices of motions to strike out and to dismiss, and the orders of the Court upon such motions, also that portion of the transcript denominated the judgment roll in a former suit between these parties, do not legitimately constitute a portion of the record in this case on appeal. They are not embodied in any statement or bill of exceptions, and constitute no part of the judgment roll in this case, hence cannot be regarded on this appeal.

The plaintiff claims, and the Court below so found, that the transactions between the parties of May 30th, 1866, constituted a mortgage by plaintiff to defendant to secure an existing indebtedness of plaintiff to defendant. Defendant insists that the evidence does not sustain this finding, but that such finding is against the evidence. If this point is well taken, there is no necessity for considering other points urged by appellants. The transaction of May 30th, 1866, is evidenced by two separate instruments in writing; and to these instruments, and the surrounding circumstances of the parties thereto, at the time of their execution, we must look for a true interpretation of what the parties intended to accomplish by the execution of these writings. From these writings, and the surrounding circumstances attending their execution, as disclosed by the evidence, the parties, in my judgment, most clearly intended to accomplish an absolute sale of an undivided half of seven hundred and fifty sheep, by the plaintiff to the defendant, in consideration of six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents then paid by defendant to plaintiff, as follows: Four hundred and twenty-six dollars by the surrender of his note for that sum held by defendant, and the balance, two hundred and thirty dollars and twenty-five cents, by defendant's note, then executed and delivered to plaintiff; and further, to arrange the terms for a purchase of three hundred and seventy-five sheep of a specified quality, by plaintiff from defendant, to be consummated on the 1st day of June, 1867. The circumstances attending the making and execution of these two instruments of writing on the 30th of May, 1866, most conclusively demonstrate that the terms of each instrument fully and plainly express the intention of the parties thereto. These circumstances and facts are substantially as follows: Prior to the 30th day of May, 1866, plaintiff and defendant had been joint owners of seven hundred and fifty sheep, which were then on defendant's ranch. Plaintiff, on that day, was indebted to defendant in the sum of four hundred and twenty-six dollars, for which defendant held his note, bearing interest at the rate of two per cent per month; and for the purpose of paying and taking up that note he made an absolute and unconditional sale of his interest in the herd of sheep for the sum of six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, which he received by taking up his note to defendant for four hundred and twenty-six dollars thereof, and taking the promissory note of defendant for the residue. This part of the transaction between the parties is partially evidenced by a bill of ~~sale~~ executed by plaintiff, in the following language:

"For and in consideration of the sum of six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, I have this day sold to R. Angle all the right, title, and interest that I own and have in and to the certain flock of sheep now in the possession of R. Angle, and which said flock of sheep the said R. Angle and myself have heretofore jointly and equally owned. This sale is made upon the basis of one dollar and seventy-five cents per head. The number sold estimated at three hundred and seventy-five sheep. No allowance made to either party for any actual variation of the estimated number. The receipt of the purchase money, to wit: six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, is hereby acknowledged.

"Signed,

JOHN W. MORRIS."

Upon the execution of this bill of sale by plaintiff, the defendant delivered to him the promissory note of four hundred and twenty-six dollars, heretofore referred to, and made and delivered to plaintiff his (defendant's) promissory note for the residue of the purchase price of said sheep; and thereupon, on the same 30th day of May, 1866, plaintiff and defendant made and executed in writing and in duplicate an agreement in language as follows:

"This article of agreement, entered into this 30th day of May, A. D. 1866, between R. Angle, party of the first part, and John W. Morris, party of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the promises and undertakings of the said party of the second part hereinafter set forth, doth agree with the said party of the second part to deliver to the said party of the second part, on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1867, at Walker Valley, in the County of Mendocino, three hundred and seventy-five sheep, of the same quality as those now owned by the said party of the first part. And the said party of the second part doth agree with the said party of the first part, that he, the said party of the second part, will, at the time and place aforementioned, to wit: on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1867, and at Walker Valley, in Mendocino County, pay to the said party of the first part the sum of six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, in gold coin of the United States of America.

“In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands, this 30th day of May, 1866. [Signed.] R. ANGLE, JOHN W. MORRIS.”

Such are the writings and attendant circumstances evidencing the character of the transactions between plaintiff and defendant, on the 30th May, 1866, in reference to plaintiff's undivided half interest in the flock of seven hundred and fifty sheep. The fact that the defendant surrendered to plaintiff, on the receipt of the above bill of sale, the only evidence of indebtedness he then held against plaintiff, and at the same time executed and delivered to plaintiff his own promissory note for the residue of the purchase price of the sheep as named in the bill of sale, and did not retain or hold any evidence of an indebtedness on the part of plaintiff to him, most strongly and conclusively tends to show the intention of the parties was to absolutely and unconditionally transfer the title and property of plaintiff in the sheep to defendant. The subsequent agreement, in writing, above set forth, given in evidence on the trial by plaintiff, did not in the slightest degree tend to indicate any other or different intention in the transaction evidenced by the bill of sale than such as is indicated by its terms; and subsequent expressions of defendant, given in evidence on the trial by plaintiff, even if perfectly understood and related by the witness, were entirely inadequate to change or modify the terms or effect of a deliberate agreement previously made, or to convert what, at the time, was intended to be an absolute sale, into a mortgage. Had all the seven hundred and fifty sheep died upon the hands of defendant before the 1st day of June, 1867, the entire loss manifestly would have fallen on him; and had the market value of sheep, of like quality, advanced to two dollars and fifty cents per head by the 1st day of June, 1867, the plaintiff could rightfully have insisted upon the delivery to him, by defendant, of the three hundred and seventy-five sheep on tender of six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, or damages for failure so to do. The total loss of all his sheep, by defendant, would not have discharged him from the obligation under his agreement of May 30th, 1866; nor would the plaintiff have been relieved from his obligation to pay defendant six hundred and fifty-six dollars and twenty-five cents, in gold coin, on the 1st of June, 1867, for three hundred and seventy-five sheep, of the specified quality, had the market value of sheep of like quality at that time fallen to one dollar per head.

With these views, it becomes unnecessary to notice other questions discussed by counsel.

The judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial should be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings. So ordered.

JOHN REEDY AND JOHN BIXBY v. J. WESLEY SMITH, WALTER L. SMITH, HOSEA E. DUDLEY AND D. CONRAD.

COMPLAINT ON CONTRACT—DEMURRER FOR UNITING SEVERAL CAUSES OF ACTION.—Where a complaint set forth a contract by defendants to build a dam, and their failure to comply therewith; alleged damages to plaintiffs, on account of loss of profits which they would have made by their ditch, if the dam had been built, and demanded a judgment for damages; held, that a demurrer on the ground that it united two causes of action would not lie.

CONTRACT HELD BINDING THOUGH SIGNED BY ONLY ONE PARTY.—Where a contract by which one party was to build a dam and the other to pay therefor in certain installments, was signed only by the first party; but it appeared the other party paid his installments as therein provided, and both acted upon it as binding; held, that a finding of a District Court to the effect that it was executed and binding, should not be disturbed.

CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS.—The object of construction of a contract is to ascertain the intention of the parties in entering into it.

MEANING OF STIPULATION TO DO A THING "AS SOON AS PRACTICABLE."—A contract to do a thing "as soon as practicable," implies that circumstances may occur which will delay the completion of it. The word "practicable" cannot be understood with regard to the means at the command of the contractors, for they may be entirely inadequate; but in ascertaining what was intended, the nature of the contract, the difficulties to be overcome, and the importance to the other party of an early completion of it, are to be considered.

"PRACTICABLE" DOES NOT MEAN "WITHIN THE RANGE OF HUMAN MEANS."—Where, in an action on a contract to build a dam "in the year 1867, or as soon thereafter as practicable," the Court instructed the jury: "If you believe it was practicable, or if it was within the range of human means to have constructed it, then defendants are liable for not doing so; the word practicable means that which can be accomplished by human means;" held, error.

DAMAGES UNDER CONTRACT AS DISTINGUISHED FROM DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.—Where a contract for building a dam, and guaranteeing it to stand for five years after completion, and the payment of installments therefor as the work progressed, provided that if within the five years it washed away it was to be rebuilt, or the installments, or a proportional part thereof, according to the time the dam stood, should be refunded; held, that the rule of damages laid down by the contract had reference solely to the guarantee, and that damages for failure to build at all must be ascertained by the ordinary rules.

Statement of Facts.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, County of Mariposa.

This was an action upon an alleged contract between the parties, entered into June 21st, 1867, by which the defendants agreed to build a dam across the Tuolumne River, about a mile and a half above the Town of La Grange, sufficiently high to cause the water of the river to flow in ordinary requirements in the ditch owned by plaintiffs—said dam to be completed in the year 1867, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and guaranteed to stand five years after completion; in consideration whereof plaintiffs agreed to pay one thousand five hundred dollars on August 1st, 1867, two thousand five hundred dollars when the dam should be half done, two thousand five hundred dollars when it should be completed. six thousand five hundred dollars with interest in twelve months after completion, and providing for repairs or rebuilding or repayment of the installments paid, or a proportional part thereof, according to the time the dam might have stood, if it should be washed away within the five years. It appears that plaintiffs paid the first two installments, amounting to four thousand dollars, and defendants proceeded to build the dam; but in November, 1867, and before the completion of the labor, all their work was washed away, and nothing further was done. The complaint averred that defendants could readily and easily have built the dam in 1867, or in 1868, but had neglected to carry on the work with proper energy; that plaintiffs were thereby deprived of realizing profits to the amount of ten thousand dollars from their ditch, and it prayed for damages in that amount, and for costs.

Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground, among others, that several causes of action had been improperly joined; that is to say, a cause of action on the express contract, a cause for general damages for breach of contract, and a cause for damages for being deprived of the value of the ditch. This demurrer was overruled, and defendants then answered, denying the allegations of the complaint and the execution of the contract, and setting up, among other things, that there was a verbal contract between the parties to the same effect, and that there were various modifications of it afterwards.

It appeared in proof on the trial that the written contract set out in the complaint had been signed by the defendants only, and they objected that it was therefore not binding upon them for want of mutuality. The objections were overruled and the contract admitted in evidence, against their objections. There was also evidence tending to show a verbal contract to the same effect.

Among the instructions given by the Court to the jury before whom the cause was tried, besides the one quoted in the opinion, was one to the effect that the plaintiffs must recover, if at all, not only the amount of money advanced by them, but all damages in addition, which they had sustained by reason of the defendants' non-compliance with their contract.

The verdict and judgment having been in favor of plaintiffs for five thousand five hundred dollars, defendants appealed.

C. Dorsey, P. D. Wigginton, and L. F. Jones, for Appellants.

The complaint contains several causes of action improperly united. It claims the money paid under the contract by plaintiffs to defendants, which was all the damages that plaintiffs, under any circumstances, could claim in case defendants violated the contract, and also claims damages on account of the water ditch.

The contract was an executory contract, containing mutual and dependent promises and conditions, and it does not appear ever to have been signed by plaintiff. Such a contract does not become the contract of any of the parties, until they all sign it. (Tewksbury v. O'Connell, 21 Cal. 60; Lockhart v. Ogden, 30 Cal. 554; Livingston v. Rodgers, 1 Caines, 584; Emery v. Neighbor, 2 Halstead C. L. 145; 2 Parsons on Con. 582; Arnold v. Richmond Iron Works, 1 Gray 434; Orcutt v. Nelson, Id. 536; Whitestone v. Stodder, 8 Mart., La. 95; Weston v. Genesee Mutual Insurance Company, 2 Kern. 258.) The fact that defendants went on and built the dam would give them a right of action against the plaintiffs for the value of the work done; but they could not sue plaintiffs on the written contract, if they never had signed it. The right of action would be on a parol contract; on the implied promise to pay for the work ordered to be done. Because defendants performed the work believing that plaintiffs had signed the contract, could not make the contract under which the work was done a written contract, so far as plaintiffs were concerned. The plaintiffs could only be bound on a parol contract, and the written contract set out in the complaint could avail none of the parties, except so far as it might be evidence tending to show what the terms of the parol contract were.

The instruction as to the meaning of the word practicable was clearly not law. Any act which may be done by human means may be perfectly practicable and possible to one person, and impracticable and impossible to another person. But the meaning which the parties intended to attach to the word was that the dam should be built in the year 1867, or within a reasonable time thereafter, due regard being had to the defendants' means, their engagements, and the nature of the work to be performed. (See 2 Parsons on Con. 497; Atwood v. Emery, 1 C. B. 110; Paley's Moral Philosophy, 104; Potter v. Ontario and L. M. Ins. Co. 5 Hitt. 147; Webster's Dictionary, words Possible and Impracticable.)

There was also error in the instruction as to damages.

Argument for Appellants.

The contract contains within itself the measure of damages in the event that it was not complied with by the defendants. If the dam was washed away within five years the defendants were to rebuild it, or repay to the plaintiffs the amounts advanced by them; and this provision of the contract limits the measure of damages, in case it is violated by defendants, to the amount of money paid by plaintiffs.

J. B. Campbell and Alexander Deering, for Respondents.

The complaint is not demurrable. It sets out a contract, and the acts of plaintiffs under it. It is not the "depreciation of the value of the ditch," but the use of the water running through the ditch, that plaintiffs urge as a ground of damages; and it was the very purpose of the dam "to cause the water to flow, in ordinary requirements, in the ditch." If the complaint was deemed indefinite in its statement of damage, an objection should have been made that could have reached it, in a proper way, in the lower Court. It cannot be raised by demurrer. (1 Van Santvoord's Eq. Practice, 190.) But the respondents had a right to set forth all the facts of the case, and if, in so doing, they established a right to recover on two different grounds, it is no cause for demurrer. (Mills v. Barney, 22 Cal. 240.)

The authorities cited by appellants, as to contracts void for want of mutuality, go to the extent only that they can be avoided if both parties have not acted. But it has been repeatedly held that when both have acted under the contract, though executed by one only, they can be sued, and want of mutuality is no defense. (Chitty on Contracts, 17; Worrall v. Munn, 1 Selden, 229.)

As to the instructions of the Court to the jury, there is but a partial statement of evidence; and we submit that such being the fact, this Court will not reverse the case their contract. What would be reasonable, as I have said, would depend, in a great measure, upon the nature of the difficulties to be overcome and the importance of an early completion to the plaintiffs, in reference to which the defendants must have contracted. I think, therefore, the instruction was erroneous.

The rule of damages laid down in the contract has reference solely to the guarantee that the dam shall stand for five years from the date of its completion. The damages for failure to construct the dam according to contract, if any, must be ascertained by the ordinary rules upon the subject.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

JOHN KEYS v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF MARIN COUNTY.

AUTHORITY OF DISTRICT COURTS AS TO CERTIORARI.—The District Courts and the Judges of those Courts have authority to issue the writ of certiorari. The amendments to the Constitution do not affect the question.

PROCEEDINGS OF SUPERVISORS SUBJECT OF REVIEW.—The proceedings of a Board of Supervisors, in laying out a highway, involved the exercise of judicial functions in the sense of rendering such proceedings the subject of review through the instrumentality of a writ of certiorari.

JUDICIAL DISCRETION AS TO CERTIORARI.—The granting or refusal of a writ of certiorari for the purpose of reviewing the action of a Board of Supervisors, is within the sound discretion of the Court, having due regard to public convenience.

CERTIORARI BARRED BY THE LAPSE OF A YEAR.—Unless circumstances of an extraordinary character be shown to have intervened, the remedy through a writ of certiorari should be held to be barred by the lapse of one year.

EXPENDITURES OF PUBLIC MONEY TO BE CONSIDERED.—The Board of Supervisors of Marin County made an order opening a highway, and, under the belief that the proceedings were final, considerable sums of the public moneys were expended in improving the road. Held, that parties injured by the road, who failed to complain for more than a year after the order was made, should be remitted to their ordinary remedies.

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Marin County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

E. B. Mahon, for Appellant.

Under the constitution of the State, as amended, the District Court, and much less the Judge at chambers and on ex parte application, has no power or jurisdiction to issue such writ. By Article VI, section four, of that instrument, original jurisdiction to issue this writ and to hear and determine proceedings under it, was given to the Supreme Court. (Tyler v. Houghton, 25 Cal. 28; Miller v. Sup. of Sac. County, 25 Cal. 95.)

The remedies by action are adequate. If the proceedings are void, trespass will lie (2 Hill, 28, 29), and there is a remedy provided by the statute under which the road was laid out. (Statutes of 1866, p. 715, sec. 18.)

The application for the writ is too late—it is nearly two years after the order was made, and after large expenditures have been incurred. If the defendant was dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Supervisors, and not content with the remedy given him by the statute, he should at least commence his proceedings to set aside their action within a reasonable time. (17 Abb. P. R. 324; People v. Mayor of N. Y., 2 Hill, 13; Elmendorf v. Mayor of New York, 25 Wend. 673; People ex rel. Finch v. Overseer of Poor of Berne, 44 Barb. 467; People v. Supervisors of Queens, 1 Hill, 198.)

The writ of certiorari does not lie to review the action of the Board of Supervisors in laying out a highway. It is the exercise of the right of eminent domain, executive in its character and not subject to review. The office of the writ of certiorari is to bring in review the proceedings of Boards, etc., when acting judicially. An examination of the decisions of this Court will show that it has always been confined to that office. Shafter, Southard & Seawell, for Respondent.

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This appeal is taken from the judgment of the District Court of the County of Marin, rendered upon the return to a writ of certiorari, issued by the Judge of that Court upon the petition of Keys, and vacating certain proceedings of the Board, by which it had located and established a public road, commencing near the Town of Tomales. The order of the Board brought under review was entered upon its records on the 5th day of November, 1868, and the application for the writ was made on the 7th day of October, 1870, nearly two years after the entry of the order.

We are of opinion that the District Courts, and the Judges of those Courts, have authority to issue the writ of certiorari (Pr. Act, Sec. 456, and Act of April 20th, 1863, concerning Courts of justice, etc., Sec. 25), and that the late amendments to the Constitution of the State do not affect the question.

We think, too, that the proceedings of the Board, in establishing the road, involved the exercise of judicial functions in the sense of rendering those proceedings the subject of review, through the instrumentality of the writ of certiorari. (Pr. Act, supra.) The objections urged by the appellant in each of these respects must, therefore, be overruled.

But the granting or refusal of a writ of certiorari, for the purpose of reviewing such proceedings as those here in question, is to be determined by the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. Considerations of the public convenience are not to be overlooked in its determination. In The People ex rel. Church v. The Supervisors of Allegany, 15 Wend. 206, the Court said: "In the exercise of the superintending power of this Court over inferior jurisdictions, the writ of error is a writ of right, and issues on conforming to such regulations as have been prescribed by law. But the writ of certiorari, especially in those cases where it is used for the purpose of reviewing the acts and decisions of the special jurisdictions which are created by statute, and do not proceed according to the course of the common law, such as Boards of Supervisors, Commissioners of Highways, and the like, does not issue ex debito justitiæ, but only on application to the Court and special cause shown. The reason is, that these bodies exercise powers in which the people at large are concerned, and great public detriment or inconvenience might result from interfering with their proceedings."

So, too, in The People ex rel. Agnew and others v. The Mayor, etc., of New York, 2 Hill, 12, which was a certiorari to review the proceedings of the corporation of the City of New York in constructing a public improvement, BRONSON, J., in delivering the opinion of the Court, said: "The allowance of the writ rests in the sound discretion of the Court, and it has often been denied where the power to issue it was unquestionable, and where there was apparent error in the proceedings to be reviewed." In the same case he further observed that it was "important to notice that the ordinance for making the improvement was passed, the work done, and the assessment made and confirmed more than three years before the certiorari was sued out. The time for bringing a writ of error from a final judgment is limited by law to two years; and I think a case can rarely happen when it would be proper to allow a certiorari after the lapse of a longer period. This is a sufficient ground for quashing the writ, aside from other considerations tending to the same result."

It has been observed already that in the case at bar nearly two years were permitted to elapse after the entry of the order complained of before application was made for the writ. An appeal to this Court from a final judgment of a District Court, is barred by the lapse of one year; and we are of opinion that, unless circumstances of an extraordinary character be shown to have intervened, the remedy through a writ of certiorari should be held to be barred by the lapse of a like period of time.

It appears by the record before us, too, that after the entry of the order complained of by which this public road was established, or supposed to have been, considerable sums of the public moneys have been expended in the erection of bridges and otherwise rendering the road suitable for the use for which it was intended, doubtless in the belief that the proceedings were free from question as to their legal sufficiency. Under such circumstances, and after such great delay, it is better that parties injured by the proceedings of the Board, or supposing themselves to be so, should be remitted to the ordinary remedies afforded them by the law, rather than allowed to seek redress through the instrumentality of this writ.

The judgment of the Court below must, therefore, be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the writ; and it is so ordered.

Argument for Appellant.

A. C. BROWN AND FRANCES BROWN, HIS WIFE, v.
THE CENTRAL LAND COMPANY, SHERMAN
DAY, O. T. H. PALMER, CYRUS H. BRADLEY, FREDERICK B. HASWELL, EDWARD McLEAN, AND JACOB HARDY.

For CROCKETT, J., SPRAGUE, J., concurring:

POWER TO SELL ON CREDIT, WHEN TIME OF CREDIT NOT SPECIFIED.—Where Brown and wife authorized Taylor to sell their land on credit, without specifying the time of such credit, and Taylor sold on a credit of seven years; held, that Taylor could only sell upon a reasonable credit, and that the question of the reasonableness of the credit was to be determined only after testimony heard.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, Alameda County.

This was an action to quiet title to certain lands in Oakland Township, Alameda County. The defendants Day, Palmer, Bradley, Haswell, McLean, and Hardy, disclaimed. To the answer of The Central Land Company, setting up the contract between Brown and wife and Taylor, the plaintiffs demurred. The demurrer having been sustained and defendant declining to amend, there was a judgment for plaintiffs. The defendant appealed.

Charles A. Tuttle, for Appellant.

If the Central Land Company has an equitable interest in the land by virtue of the facts set out in the answer, the judgment is erroneous. The contract contemplates that

Argument for Respondents.

Taylor might make sales, giving credit for a portion of the purchase money beyond September 12th, 1869, without limiting the time of the credit. As it is expressly provided that the sums on credit should bear interest after that date, the intention was that the length of credit might be whatever Taylor saw fit to give.

Again, the contract gave Taylor and his assigns an equitable interest in the land. It was an executory contract. There was no forfeiture provided for on it, except as to all lots not sold, or contracted to be sold, within two years from its date. No money was paid down, but there were mutual promises. "A promise is a good consideration for a promise, and it is so previous to performance and without performance." (1 Parsons on Con. 373, 400.)

The plaintiffs' relation to the land after the contract was made, was an equitable lien upon the purchase money, holding the legal title as security for the enforcement of the lien. (Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 409.)

The plaintiffs come into a Court of equity seeking to set aside their own contract, but making no equitable averments in their complaint to authorize it to be set aside. They might have made averments (if any such existed), which, if proved, would have entitled them to equitable relief as against their own contract. But under the form of pleading which they have adopted, they must rely on their title, and let us rest on our contracts as they stand. They knew of the existence of our contracts, and if any reasons existed why they were entitled to have them set aside or declared void or forfeited, they should have averred them.

Montgomery & Evans, for Respondents.

The contract cannot be treated as a sale vesting any present interest in Taylor, for the reason that there is no mutuality, inasmuch as Taylor does not agree nor in any manner

Opinion of Crockett, J., Sprague, J., concurring.

bind himself to take the property. (1 Parsons on Con. 373; 1 Bouvier's Inst. 245.)

Taylor was not clothed with unlimited power to extend the time of credit. Whatever discretionary powers were intrusted to him for the extension of credit beyond the two years, were so intrusted, not in his capacity of purchaser, but in his character of agent of Brown and wife, to be exercised for their benefit when selling the premises for them to a third person. They might with safety have been willing to allow him, as their agent, to fix the time of payment, when he was interested with them in fixing upon a reasonable time; but it does not follow, because they were willing to trust to his discretion while his interests were identical with their own, that they were equally willing to trust that discretion when his interests were in direct antagonism to theirs.

Considering Taylor in the light of an agent, the defendant acquired no interest in the property, because the one half of the purchase money was not paid within the two years, and because there was no power of substitution in the instrument under which Taylor derived his authority. He could neither sell his agency to Haswell, nor delegate it to Bradley. (2 Kent, 633; Smith's Mer. Law, 147; 1 Parsons on Con. 71; Story on Agency, Secs. 18, 29; Sayre v. Michael, 7 Cal. 535.)

Again, at the time that Haswell and Bradley, the former as assignee, and the latter as sub-agent of Taylor, undertook to sell Brown's land to The Central Land Company, they were simply selling to themselves, being stockholders in the company.

By CROCKETT, J., SPRAGUE, J., concurring:

The substance and legal effect of the contract between Taylor and plaintiffs may be summed up as follows: That the plaintiffs agreed that at any time within the two years next ensuing, Taylor might purchase for himself, or sell to others, the whole or any portion of the land now in controversy, at a price not less than one thousand dollars in gold coin per acre; but if sold for a larger price, the excess over that sum should go to Taylor; and on receiving the said sum of one thousand dollars per acre in ready money they would surrender the possession and execute a conveyance to the purchaser; but Taylor was not limited to sales for ready money, and might sell on credit, the term of which is not specified in the contract; and the conditions on which credit sales could be made, were: First — That ten per cent of the purchase money should be paid to the plaintiffs in ready money at the time of sale; Second — That the notes or bonds of the purchaser for the remainder of the purchase money, bearing interest after the two years limited in the contract between Taylor and the plaintiffs, at the rate of one and a quarter per cent per month, should be assigned and delivered to the plaintiffs for their security; but they were not to be required to surrender the possession or to convey any title until the whole purchase money and interest were paid, except that, in case one half of the purchase money was paid within the two years next succeeding the date of the contract between Taylor and the plaintiffs, they would, in that event, surrender the possession and convey the title to the purchaser, taking from him a mortgage on the property sold, to secure the remainder of the purchase money with interest. This is the substance of the contract, as I interpret it, or of so much of it as it is necessary to recite.

It will be perceived that the duration of the credit, if sales of that character should be made by Taylor, is not expressly specified or limited in the contract. Nevertheless, the law will presume in such cases that it was the intention of the parties that the time of credit should be reasonable, and such as was usual and customary on sales of real estate in that vicinity. The law will not impute to the plaintiffs the intention to enter into an absurd contract, whereby they delegate to another the authority to sell a valuable estate on credits to be absolutely fixed by the uncontrolled discretion of the agent, unless that intention is clearly expressed in the contract. When the plaintiffs entered into the contract with Taylor, it evidently never occurred to them that they were authorizing him to sell this valuable property on a credit of fifty or one hundred years, during all which time no interest was to be paid on the purchase money until the expiration of the credit. I think it is obvious that none of the parties could have understood the contract as conferring on Taylor an authority so absurd as this, under which he might, practically, have sequestered the property and withdrawn it from commerce for an unlimited period. But his discretion in this respect was either absolute and unlimited, or it was subject to the condition that the credit must be reasonable and such as was usual and customary on sales of real estate in that vicinity. The latter is clearly the correct construction of this branch of the contract. The answer avers that the sale to The Central Land Company was made within the two years, at a price exceeding one thousand dollars in gold coin per acre; that ten per cent of the purchase money was paid in cash, and promissory notes given for the remainder, payable seven years after date, with interest at one and a quarter per cent per month; and that the notes, properly indorsed, together with ten per cent of the purchase money, were tendered to the plaintiffs within the two years. The transaction appears to have been in strict accordance with the authority conferred upon Taylor, unless the term of credit was unreasonably long, and in excess of the time usually allowed on credit sales of real estate in that vicinity. Whether a credit of seven years was unusual, and contrary to the general custom in that vicinity, is a question of fact to be decided on the testimony; and whether it was unreasonable, under all the circumstances, is a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined after the testimony is heard.

There is nothing in the point that the contract was not mutual. Taylor covenanted to cause the property to be subdivided, and a map of it to be made and recorded, at his own expense, and that he would use his best efforts to effect sales within the two years. This was a sufficient consideration on his part to support the contract. Nor did the contract establish between Taylor and the plaintiffs a relation of personal trust and confidence which precluded him from executing the contract of sale to The Central Land Company by an attorney in fact. Taylor's powers were strictly defined by the contract. He had no discretion to exercise in respect to the plaintiff's rights or interests, except in regard to the term of credit; and, as to that, the law restricts it to a reasonable period, with which the plaintiffs must be content, such being the legal effect of their contract. There was no relation of personal trust or confidence between them. The sale by Taylor to Haswell of one half his interest under the contract, cuts no figure in the case. They both united in the contract of sale to The Central Land Company, and it is immaterial whether Haswell had any interest in the contract or not.

As the facts are presented by this record, I think there is but one question in the case requiring a solution, to wit: Whether the credit allowed to The Central Land Company was in accordance with the usage and custom in that vicinity in credit sales of real estate, and was reasonable under all the circumstances. This question can only be decided after the testimony is heard.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with an order to the Court below to overrule the demurrer to the answer.

This action was instituted by the plaintiffs (in possession of certain lands in Oakland Township, Alameda County), who allege that the defendant, a corporation, incorporated under the laws of this State, claims title to the premises adversely to the plaintiffs, by which claim, they aver, their title is clouded, etc.; and they pray that the claim made by the corporation be adjudged invalid, etc.

The defendant filed its answer, setting up a claim to the premises and averring that its interest therein was derived as follows: That on the 12th day of September, 1867, Brown and wife, as parties of the first part, and one George B. Taylor, as party of the second part, mutually entered into a contract as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 12th day of September, A. D. 1868, by and between A. C. Brown and Frances Brown, his wife, parties of the first part, and George B. Taylor, party of the second part, all of the County of Alameda and State of California, witnesseth: The said parties of the first part, in consideration of the sum of fifty thousand dollars, in United States gold coin, to be paid as hereinafter set forth, do hereby covenant and agree to sell and convey to the said party of the second part, and to his heirs, representatives and assigns, upon the terms and conditions hereinafter expressed, certain premises lying and being situate in the Township of Oakland, County of Alameda, and State of California, bounded and described as follows, to wit:" (here follows the description of the premises). “And the said party of the second part does hereby further covenant and agree, for the space of two years from the date hereof, to make diligent effort to effect a sale of said lots and parcels, and of all the said premises, at prices which shall not be less than one thousand dollars, in United States gold coin, for each acre sold, including the streets and any other parts given up to public use. And in case that sales shall be made of said lots or parcels, or any part of said premises, and time extending beyond two years from this date shall be given on any portion of the purchase money, the minimum price at which the same shall be sold shall be at the said rate of one thousand dollars per acre, in gold coin, together with the interest thereon from and after the expiration of two years from the date hereof, at one and one quarter per cent per month, in like gold coin.

“And the said party of the second part does hereby further covenant and agree, that the money proceeds of all sales by him made shall immediately, upon the receipt thereof, be paid over to the said A. "And the said parties of the first part do hereby covenant and agree with the said party of the second part, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, that if at any time within two years from the date hereof, the said sum of fifty thousand dollars, in United States gold coin, shall be paid to them, or to either of them, they will immediately upon the receipt thereof execute to the said party of the second part, his heirs, representatives, or assigns, a conveyance of the premises hereinbefore described.

"And the said parties of the first part do hereby further covenant and agree, that they will execute and deliver to purchasers from the said party of the second part conveyances of the premises purchased according to the terms of the several contracts of sale entered into, provided that such contracts shall be such as are herein authorized to be made, and the said party of the second part shall do and perform all the acts and things herein required by him to be done and performed; and provided further, that all acts of conveyance shall be at the expense of the said party of the second part, or of said purchasers.

Opinion of Wallace, J., dissenting.

“ And the said parties of the first part do hereby further covenant and agree to execute to the party of the second part, his heirs, representatives, or assigns, or to purchasers from said party of the second part, his heirs, representatives, or assigns, upon the written request of the latter, conveyances of any lot, parcel, or portion of said premises; provided, that within said two years the minimum price of one thousand dollars per acre, in United States gold coin, shall have been paid to the said parties of the first part, or either of them, on the lots or parcels to be conveyed.

“ And the said parties of the first part do further covenant and agree that whenever, within two years from the date hereof, in the case of any lot or parcel sold, the purchaser shall have paid one half of the purchase price thereof, they will convey to such purchaser the lot or parcel by him purchased, upon receiving from him bonds or notes for the balance of the purchase price then remaining unpaid, according to the terms of the contract of sale made with him, and a mortgage on the premises conveyed to secure the same; provided, that the contract of sale shall be such as is herein authorized; and that they will receive such bonds or notes and mortgages to the amount thereof as payments pro tanto upon the said sum of fifty thousand dollars. It is further understood and agreed, that in the case of all sales made or contracted, the said party of the second part may retain to his own use five per cent of the price agreed upon, to be deducted out of the first payment of purchase money; provided, however, that at least ten per cent of the purchase price shall always be collected at the time the contract of sale is made, and shall be paid over to the said A. C. Brown, as hereinbefore recited; and provided further, that the sum so retained shall not be included in any estimate of said fifty thousand dollars, or of said minimum of one thousand dollars, on the payment of which deeds become due from said parties of the first part.

Opinion of Wallace, J., dissenting.

"All acts of conveyance required by the terms of this agreement shall be at the expense of said party of the second part, or his purchasera.

"At the expiration of two years from the date hereof, this agreement shall become void as to all lots, parcels, tracts, and parts of said premises not then sold, or contracted to be sold; but all contracts of sale then remaining executory shall be carried into execution, provided they shall conform to the requirements herein expressed; and from the proceeds thereof one thousand dollars per acre, with interest thereon from and after two years from this date at the rate of one and one quarter per cent per month, all in United States gold coin, shall be paid to the said parties of the first part, including what may have been theretofore paid on such contracts, and the remainder shall become the property of said party of the second part.

"And it is further understood and agreed, that until such times as deeds shall be executed in pursuance of this agreement, the said parties of the first part shall remain in possession; but on executing a deed of any part of said premises they shall deliver up the possession of such part."

The defendant further avers that in May, 1868, Taylor sold and assigned to one F. B. Haswell an undivided half of his interest in said contract, and in the property and rights held by him thereunder; and that in August, 1869, Taylor appointed one Cyrus Bradley to be his attorney in fact, with authority to enter into contracts on his behalf, etc.

It is then alleged in the answer that in September, 1869, Haswell and Taylor (the latter acting by his attorney in fact, Bradley) made sale of the premises, or the greater portion of them, to the defendant, for fifty-one thousand dollars, in gold coin, five thousand one hundred dollars of which was paid in hand at the time, and the balance to be paid on or before seven years thereafter, with interest, etc.

Opinion of Wallace, J., dissenting.

At the time this sale was made, the defendants Day, Palmer, Haswell, McLean, Hardy, and the defendant Cyrus H. Bradley (the said attorney in fact of Taylor), were stockholders in the Central Land Company.

It is important to ascertain in limine, whether or not, under the contract in question, Taylor was intrusted by the plaintiffs with the exercise of a discretion in making sales upon credit, and in the proper exercise of which discretion by him they had an interest. There is no doubt that the contract as made permitted Taylor to become the cash purchaser of the property for himself. In case, however, that he should become such purchaser, the plaintiffs would, of course, receive in hand the stipulated price of one thousand dollars per acre for the premises. But it was also stipulated that sales might be made by Taylor involving the cash payment of no more than ten per cent of the purchase price. In that event it was distinctly provided that bonds and notes should be taken from the purchaser for the balance of the purchase price, on which time might be given, and that such bonds and notes, unless falling due within two years, should bear interest at a rate fixed in the contract; that Taylor, in the event of a sale upon credit, was invested with discretion as to the extent of the credit to be given upon the deferred payments, necessarily results from the fact that no limit to the credit he might give was prescribed by the terms of the contract itself, and it certainly requires neither illustration nor argument to show that this discretion was one, in the correct exercise of which, by Taylor, the plaintiffs, as the vendors of a valuable estate, situate in a highly improved and rapidly advancing region, would necessarily have a deep interest. Indeed, this is the view upon which I understand the opinion of Mr. Justice CROCKETT to proceed, for it is there laid down that the plaintiffs are entitled to be protected against the unreasonable exercise of this discretion by Taylor, and that, should it appear that the credit, as given, exceeded that which was usual and customary upon sales of real estate in the vicinity of this property, the plaintiffs may be relieved.

Opinion of Wallace, J., dissenting.

I. It being ascertained that Taylor was intrusted by the plaintiffs with the exercise of a discretion as to the length of credit, to be given, it is clear that he could not delegate his discretion to Bradley — the trust was personal, for the Browns had not confided it to any stranger whom Taylor might select.

II. But supposing that he could be permitted to confide it to Bradley, the latter could not, in any event, exercise it in a transaction in which he was himself the beneficial purchaser. As the substitute of Taylor, it was obviously his duty, in conducting the sale, to obtain for the principals of the latter the most favorable terms in his power — quam maximo potest. But how was he to be expected to do this in a sale to himself — to the corporation in the stock of which he was personally interested as an owner? His position, upon either hand, involved him in that conflict between his duty to others and his apparent interest for himself, which the law will not countenance or permit. The salutary rule which would forbid Taylor purchasing for himself, upon credit fixed by himself, must also forbid Bradley, the nominee and substitute of Taylor, from doing so, and the interests of the plaintiffs should be as sedulously protected in the one case as in the other.

I, therefore, dissent from the views of my associates, and am of the opinion that the demurrer to the answer of the Central Land Company was correctly sustained by the Court below, and that its judgment should be affirmed here.

D. ROBINSON v. C. ROBINSON.

DEFECTIVE FINDINGS — PARTNERSHIP.— D. R. sued C. R. for the recovery of money alleged to be due as part of the purchase price of land held in common; C. R. denied the debt, alleged a copartnership and an indebtedness by D. R. to him; he demanded judgment for a dissolution of the copartnership, an accounting, and a sale of the land. The Court decreed a sale of the land and a payment of a sum of money to D. R., the remainder of the proceeds to be equally divided between the parties. The record failed to show findings as to the existence of the copartnership, or as to the tenancy in common. On appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone: held, that the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a restatement of account between the parties, or for a new trial, as the Court below may direct.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Second Judicial District, Plumas County.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff and defendant own a tract of land in common; that the plaintiff desires a partition, but the partition cannot be made without prejudice to the rights of the parties; that the defendant purchased his interest from the plaintiff, and that part of the purchase money remains unpaid; wherefore, he prays that the defendant's interest be sold to pay the debt.

The answer denies the tenancy in common, or that the defendant purchased from the plaintiff, or that he owes him anything; and alleges a partnership in the purchase of the land, with an agreement to cultivate it and share the profits; that the defendant paid his portion of the purchase money; that the deed was given to the plaintiff alone subject to the agreement; that since the purchase the defendant has expended large sums of money for labor, materials, improvements, and cultivation, and that the plaintiff has received the profits and failed to account for them; wherefore, the defendant demands judgment for a dissolution of the copartnership, an accounting, and a sale of the land.

Statement of Facts.

The case was tried by the Court without a jury, and the following findings were filed:

" That plaintiff bought the real estate set out in the complaint in the Spring of 1867, on the joint account of himself and the defendant, and that plaintiff took the deed to said premises in his own name by consent of defendant. That in 1867 it became necessary to the use of said premises that a good and substantial barn should be erected thereon, and that plaintiff did erect such a barn, at the cost of one thousand one hundred dollars; that the cost of the premises was the sum of one thousand six hundred and twenty dollars, as purchase money. That in 1867 the rents, issues, and profits of said land or farm were equal to the expenditures made by plaintiff in the gathering and sowing the crops thereon. That in the year 1868 plaintiff received from said farm rents, issues, and profits to the amount of four hundred dollars. That in the year 1869 defendant and the plaintiff, by his tenant, jointly occupied and farmed said land and divided the proceeds thereof. That the accounts of plaintiff for advances and expenditures in connection with the purchase and improvement and management of the same are as follows:

"These articles are still on the farm, and in use by the defendant, and can be retained by him, and require no sale or distribution.

to cost and present increased value of the land, and under the fact that defendant erected it more in view for his own convenience than with regard to the increased value of the land."

The Court rendered a decree for the sale of the land, and ordered that from the proceeds ninety-seven dollars and fifty cents be paid to the plaintiff, and that the remainder be divided equally between the parties. The defendant appealed.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

From the record in this case, I understand the Court in its findings of fact, to state an account of the respective parties, plaintiff and defendant, with a partnership or firm, composed of plaintiff and defendant as equal partners. If I am correct in this, and assuming the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth items, credited to defendant in his account as stated, to have been advances by him on partnership account, and not advances by plaintiff to him individually (as indicated by these items as entered in the account), then the account, as presented in the findings, discloses upon its face three manifest errors:

First — In not charging plaintiff, in his account with the partnership, with the four hundred dollars received by him of the proceeds of the ranch;

Second — In crediting defendant, in his account with the partnership, with two hundred dollars — the one half of plaintiff's receipts from the ranch; and Third — In not crediting the defendant, in his said account, with one hundred and thirty-nine dollars and fifty cents expended by him for farming utensils used upon the ranch.

Opinion of the Court — Sprague, J.

With these corrections the plaintiff's account with the partnership would show advances on partnership accounts in excess of his receipts of partnership funds in the sum of one thousand six hundred and twenty dollars and fifty cents, and the defendant's account with the partnership would show advances by him on partnership account to the amount of one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifty cents, and no receipts; and, thus corrected, would show a balance in favor of defendant of two hundred and forty-two dollars, which he should receive from the proceeds of the sale of all the partnership assets after payment of the costs and expenses of this proceeding; and the residue of the proceeds of such sale should be equally divided between the plaintiff and defendant.

But from the entries in defendant's account with the firm, as found in the record, it would appear that the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth items credited to him as advances on partnership account, were really advanced to plaintiff individually, and not for the use, or on account of the partnership. With these seven items, and the item of two hundred dollars (half of plaintiff's receipts from ranch), left out of defendant's account with the firm, such account would show the aggregate of defendant's advances on partnership accounts to be one thousand five hundred and fourteen dollars and fifty cents.

It is, however, by no means clear from the record presented, that the Court below, in its findings and decree, proceeded upon the basis of a partnership between plaintiff and defendant in the purchase and conduct of the ranch. There is no direct finding of the existence of such a partnership, nor is it found that the ranch was held and owned by the parties as tenants in common, and not as partners.

This appeal is taken simply from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone, and by reason of errors apparent upon the record, as presented, the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a restatement of account between the parties, or a new trial, as the Court below may direct.

FILING UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL.—An undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the notice of appeal is filed.

NOTICE AND UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL.—The Supreme Court has no authority to relieve a party from the consequences of a failure to comply with the statute in relation to the service and filing of notices and undertakings on appeal. The statute of 1861 applies only to insufficiencies in point of mere form of such notices and undertakings.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.—An order of Court adjudging a party guilty of contempt is not appealable.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Third Judicial District, County of Santa Clara.

In February, 1869, the plaintiffs sued out a temporary injunction restraining the defendants, their agents, and servants, until the further order of the Court, from obstructing or closing a certain traveled way described in the complaint.

Argument for Appellant.

The defendants filed a demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled; the defendants were allowed to answer, and after trial of the case the Court ordered that the temporary injunction be made perpetual. A new trial was denied and the defendants appealed. At the April Term, 1871, the Supreme Court ordered the Court below to sustain the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. On filing the remittitur, May 17th, 1871, the District Court sustained the demurrer and granted the plaintiffs leave to amend their complaint within ten days, but made no order in regard to the injunction. On the 22d day of May the defendant Shallenberger, by advice of his counsel, closed the way by running a fence across it. Plaintiff Fox filed his amended complaint on the 27th of May and served a copy of it upon the defendant. Subsequently, he filed an affidavit setting out the facts as to the defendant's action in closing up the way; and the defendant Shallenberger was required to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of Court. After a hearing of the matter, the Court made an order adjudging him guilty of contempt for a violation of the temporary injunction, and he appealed.

The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Moore, Laine & Leib, for Appellant.

The question of contempt or no contempt may be reviewed. The law of the land governs as to what is or is not a contempt, and not the arbitrary opinion of a Judge. (Calderwood v. Peyser, ante, p. 110.) It is provided in the Practice Act that an appeal may be taken from "any special order made after final judgment." (Pr. Act, Secs. 336, 347.)

This, we submit, is a special order made in this case after final judgment.

Our appeal was from the whole judgment, and the reversal of such judgment carried with it the injunction. In other words, the injunction fell with the judgment in the case, and the bill itself fell when the demurrer was sustained, and as the Court did not revive the temporary injunction, nor issue a new restraining order, there was no injunction in being to be violated on the 22d. of May, 1871; when the defendant did the act complained of. (McGarrahan v. Maxwell, 28 Cal. 75; Calderwood v. Peyser, supra.)

Opinion of Wallace, J., Temple, J., concurring.

J. Alexander Yoell, for Respondent, relied upon the point that, no notice of appeal having been served on the respondents, or either of them, nor upon their counsel, the appeal was not taken according to law, and must be dismissed.

By WALLACE, J., TEMPLE, J., concurring:

The appeal is taken from an order of the District Court entered in the cause. It is claimed by the respondent that the order itself is not the subject of appeal, and that if it were, an appeal has not been properly taken and perfected. It is unnecessary, however, to consider the question as to whether or not the order is the subject of an appeal, as I think the appeal must be dismissed upon the other ground.

The order was made and entered on June 5th, 1871; and on the seventeenth of June a notice of appeal was filed, but had not been served at or before the time at which the undertaking on appeal was subsequently filed. Of course the filing of an undertaking on appeal, without service of the notice of appeal, was utterly nugatory. It seems to have been so considered by the counsel for the appellant, for on the second day of August following (and within sixty days from the entry of the order in question), he caused a copy of the notice of appeal (which had remained on file ever since June seventeenth), to be served upon the respondent's attorney, and within five days after such service he filed an undertaking on appeal in proper form. But as the filing of the first undertaking was inoperative, because filed before service of the notice of appeal, so the filing of the second undertaking was also inoperative to perfect the appeal taken, inasmuch as the last undertaking, though filed within five days after service of the notice, was not within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal. (Pr. Act, Sec. 348.)

The times at which, and the successive order in which the several steps are to be pursued to take and perfect an appeal, are distinctly prescribed by statute, and must be observed; otherwise the appeal must fail here, if timely objection be taken by the respondent. We have no authority to relieve a party from the consequences of a failure in these respects. Under the Act of 1861, p. 589, Sec. 3, it is true that relief may be had against the insufficiency, in point of mere form, of the notice filed and served, or of the undertaking filed; in other words, an appeal, if taken, may, upon compliance with the provisions of the Act of 1861, be supported, though it had been insufficiently taken in the first instance; but there is a clear distinction between an appeal insufficiently taken and one not taken at all. Were the statute of 1861 construed to afford relief in cases in which the steps as pursued were themselves utterly abortive, it is obvious that the provisions of the Practice Act prescribing the modus of taking and perfecting an appeal would be practically abrogated. The filing of the notice of appeal must always precede the service — the service of the notice must precede the filing of the undertaking, which filing must itself be within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal. (Pr. Act, Sec. 348.)

Because the undertaking in this case was not filed within five days after the notice of appeal was filed, the appeal should, in my opinion, be dismissed; and it is so ordered.

JOHN C. WHITE v. WILLIAM H. LYONS.

COMPLAINT EITHER LEGAL OR EQUITABLE NOT DEMURRABLE.—If a complaint states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, it is not demurrable on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

EQUITABLE COMPLAINT SETTING OUT LEGAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—Though a complaint purporting to be a bill in equity is insufficient as such, yet if the facts alleged are cognizable in a court of law, the proper relief will be administered; and a demurrer for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action will not lie.

RECOVERY BACK OF MONEY RECEIVED FOR ALLEGED ILLEGAL PURPOSE.—Where, in a suit to recover money in the hands of defendant, it appeared that he had been employed as an attorney, and furnished with money to purchase school land warrants, and therewith to procure title to certain lieu lands, and that at his advice some of the certificates of purchase were taken in the names of third persons and assigned to plaintiff, and defendant set up in defense that (the taking of the certificates in that way being contrary to law) the money was paid to and received by him for an illegal purpose, and could not be recovered back; Held, that the contract under which the money was received was not unlawful, and that though the purchase of the certificates referred to might have been illegal, yet, it appearing that he had been fully credited with all moneys paid for them, his defense could not avail him.

COMPUTATION OF INTEREST—REDUCTION FROM TEN TO SEVEN PER CENT.—The Act of March 30th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 553), reduced the rate of interest, in case of the absence of a contract, from ten to seven per cent per annum; and the effect was that, though ten per cent might be computed up to the taking effect of that Act, only seven per cent was allowable afterwards.

STATUTE REDUCING INTEREST PROSPECTIVE IN OPERATION.—The Act of March 30th, 1868 (Stats. 1867-8, p. 553), reducing the rate of interest, was only prospective in its operation, and was not intended to take away or impair rights which had already accrued under the prior statute.

Argument for Appellant.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, San Joaquin County.

The complaint in this case, after setting forth facts entitling him to judgment at law against the defendant, prayed for an accounting that defendant might be adjudged to pay to plaintiff, in gold coin, what might appear on such accounting to be due, and for general relief. To this defendant demurred, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer being overruled, and an answer put in, there was a trial before the Court, and a judgment rendered on November 18th, 1863, in favor of plaintiff, for the sum of one thousand six hundred and thirteen dollars and seventy cents, and interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum on nine hundred and thirteen dollars and seventy cents thereof from November 18th, 1863, and on seven hundred dollars thereof from July 1st, 1864 — in all two thousand three hundred and seventy-six dollars, in gold coin — the judgment to draw interest at seven per cent per annum. Findings were filed sustaining the judgment. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he then took this appeal from the judgment.

Hall & Montgomery and S. P. Scaniker; for Appellant.

We must look to the relief sought, as well as to the facts stated in a complaint, to determine the forum to which the plaintiff has brought his case for redress. Here he has appealed to a Court of equity, and he must show that he has an equitable cause of action. But on the facts alleged no foundation is laid for equity jurisdiction for accounting — a relief afforded only where mutual or complicated accounts and dealings exist between the parties. The exact amount of money placed in defendant's hands is fixed at three thousand three hundred dollars, and the exact amounts expended by him are fixed with the same certainty. It is true there is a charge of fraudulent conversion; but such a charge will not sustain an action in equity for an account. There was a plain and complete remedy at law; and it is a familiar principle and well established, that in such case there is no foundation for the interposition of a Court of equity, and no equitable jurisdiction. The demurrer ought, therefore, to have been sustained.

In the procuring of the certificates both parties manifestly coöperated for overreaching the law and securing forbidden and unjust advantages — a purpose immoral and illegal, whatsoever may have been the moral sense that prompted them. The fund was committed to the one party by the other, dedicated to the procuring of title from the State for the latter's lands, by methods contravening the letter and spirit of the State's land system. As between principals and agents in all such cases, the guilt is deemed to be equal, and the maxim is: In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. The money, thus situated, is not recoverable by the principal. (Story on Agency, Sec. 235, and note 2, Sec. 344; Perkins v. Savage, 15 Wend. 412; Morgan v. Graff, 5 Den. 365; Gregory v. Haworth, 36 Cal. 653; Martin v. Wade, 37 Cal. 168.)

The judgment was also against law in allowing interest at any rate greater than seven per cent per annum — that being the rate fixed by law at the date of the judgment.

J. H. Budd, for Respondent.

The old distinction between the forms of legal and equitable pleadings are done away with, and the code requires only a statement of the facts constituting a cause of action. (Practice Act, Sec. 39; Piercy v. Sabin, 10 Cal. 27; Goodwin v. Hammond, 13 Cal. 169; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243.) A demurrer will not lie to the prayer of a complaint.

Opinion of the Court — CROCKETT, J.

The contract between plaintiff and defendant was one between an attorney at law and his client, and was not illegal. Plaintiff understood that the land was to be secured to him by the location of school land warrants. In this there was nothing illegal or against public policy. Under this contract, and with this understanding, the money was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, and whatever was done after this was done by defendant, and by and through his advice as the attorney of plaintiff. It is the first case, and will, probably, be the last, in which an attorney at law has taken his client's money and then advised him to do and have done acts (which the attorney now claims is against law), and then coolly claimed that he had a right to retain the money, for the reason that his client acted under his advice.

If defendant can be held for the money as received by him to the use of plaintiff, then there was an implied contract to repay the same to plaintiff with legal interest from the time the defendant converted the money to his own use. And the rate of interest, as it was fixed by statute at the time of the conversion, became a part of this implied contract.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. Under the code there is but one form of action in this State, and if the complaint states facts which entitle the plaintiff to relief, either legal or equitable, it is not demurrable on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. If the facts stated are such as address themselves to the equity side of the Court, the appropriate relief will be granted by the Court, sitting as a Court of equity. On the other hand, if the facts alleged are purely cognizable in a Court of law, the proper relief will be administered in that form of proceeding. But a complaint which states a sufficient cause of action, either at law or in equity, is not demurrable as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. In this case the defendant does not question the sufficiency of the facts alleged to constitute a cause of action in a proceeding at law, but insists that this complaint is a bill in equity, and that a Court of equity has no jurisdiction of the case. In that event, the Court will treat it as an action at law, and administer the proper relief in that form of proceeding.

Nor can we disturb the judgment on the ground that the findings are not justified by the evidence. If the evidence does not preponderate in support of the findings, there is at least a substantial conflict in it; and in such cases it is the well settled practice of this Court not to disturb the judgment.

The defendant, however, insists that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, because the transaction between the parties was illegal, and the money which is sought to be recovered was paid by the plaintiff and received by the defendant for an unlawful purpose, and that no cause of action can arise out of a transaction which was in itself illegal and contrary to public policy. But the answer to this point is, that the contract between the parties under which the money was received by the defendant was not unlawful or contrary to public policy. The plaintiff desired to secure for himself the title of the State to certain lands, and employed the defendant, as an attorney at law and as a person skilled in that branch of business, to procure the title. The plaintiff appears to have been ignorant of the particular method by which the title of the State was to be obtained, except that it was to be effected by means of school land warrants, or certificates of purchase, for what are termed "lieu lands;" that is, lands to be selected by the State in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, as authorized by law in certain cases. It appears from the findings that the defendant accepted this employment, and undertook to procure the title in this method. The money was paid by the plaintiff for this purpose. But subsequently, under the advice of the defendant, and at his suggestion, certain of the certificates were taken in the names of other persons, for the use of the plaintiff, and were afterwards assigned to him. This part of the transaction is claimed to have been illegal, and a fraud upon the law. If this be conceded, it does not aid the defendant. He has been credited in the judgment with all sums paid by him on account of these certificates, and there is no proof that any portion of the money which he received from the plaintiff, except that which was paid on account of these certificates, was to be, or was, in fact, applied or used in any illegal transactions. On the contrary, after crediting the defendant with all his disbursements and a reasonable compensation for his services, there remains in his hands a large sum, which the findings show he has converted to his own use. No reason, founded either in law or justice, is perceived, why this money should not be refunded with interest. But, I think, the Court erred in fixing the rate of interest at ten per cent per annum up to the date of the judgment. When the conversion occurred that was the rate fixed by statute in transactions of this character. But the Act of March 30th, 1868, reduced the rate from ten to seven per cent per annum; and from the time when this Act took effect the interest should have been computed at seven per cent per annum. In the absence of a contract for interest, it is only allowed as damages for a failure to pay the money due (15 Wend. 80); and it is competent for the Legislature to fix the amount which shall be recovered. But the Act reducing the rate was only prospective in its operation, and was not intended to take away or impair rights which had already accrued under the prior statute. In Bullock v. Boyle, 1 Hoffman, N. Y. Ch. R., 294, the effect of statutes modifying the rate of interest is fully and elaborately discussed, and the authorities collated by the Vice Chancellor; and the conclusion at which he arrived is, that a change in the rate, as a general rule, operates only prospectively, and does not affect rights already accrued. On this point, see, also, Thornton v. Fitzhugh, 4 Leigh R. 209.

The judgment is affirmed, except as to the rate of interest; and in respect to the computation of interest, the Court below is directed to modify the judgment by computing the interest at ten per cent per annum up to the time when the Act of March 30th, 1868, took effect, and thereafter at the rate of seven per cent per annum; and it is further ordered that neither of the parties recover costs on this appeal.

SAMUEL SOULE, ADMINISTRATOR, ETC., OF THOMAS R. HOPE, DECEASED, v. FRED. BILLINGS, J. STEARNS, L. D. ALLEN, C. C. BUTLER, PETER DONAHUE, WILLIAM PIERCE, AND MANY OTHERS.

A STRANGER TO AN ACTION CANNOT MOVE TO DISMISS IT.—In an ejectment case for a large tract of land, and in which many fictitious defendants were named: held, that a person, not named nor served as a party, and who had neither appeared, answered, or demurred, nor asked to be made a party, was a stranger to the proceedings, and could not, though an owner of land embraced within the tract sued for, maintain a motion to dismiss the action as to such land.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment for an undivided fourth part of a tract of about eighty acres of land in the City and County of San Francisco. The suit was originally commenced in the name of William A. Quarles, Administrator of the Estate of Thomas R. Hope; but afterwards, Soule being appointed administrator in his place, he was substituted in this case. The defendants embraced about seventeen persons well known, and a great number of fictitious names, alleged to be unknown.

The action was commenced on April 17th, 1868. On July 18th, 1870, a motion was made by George Turner, on behalf of himself and his wife, Sarah R. Turner, to dismiss the action as to them and as to lots one, two, five, and six, in block two hundred and seventy-one, of the Western Addition of San Francisco, and included in the tract sued for, on the grounds that Sarah R. Turner, the owner of such lots, was a citizen, well known upon the records as such owner, but was not named as a party; that no suing by a fictitious name was proper as to lands of such well known owner; that no summons had ever been served upon said owner, though the suit had been brought for so long a period; that the action was evidently intended to cloud and embarrass the title of the said owner; and that it was not prosecuted properly or in good faith or with proper diligence. A supplemental motion to the same effect was made on January 23d, 1871, and affidavits were presented sustaining the grounds upon which the motion was urged.

After argument, the Court below sustained the motion as to Mrs. Sarah R. Turner, and the action was dismissed as to her. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

Estee & McLaurin, for Appellant.

The summons had not been served, nor had any answer, demurrer, or written notice of appearance, been served or filed in the cause. The Court, therefore, had not acquired jurisdiction, and could not entertain the motion. (Practice Act, Secs. 35, 523.)

Sarah R. Turner, not being a party defendant in the action, was not entitled to make the motion to dismiss.

George Turner, for Respondents.

The motion to dismiss was an appearance; and whether it was a special appearance for the motion or a general appearance in the cause, the court below had jurisdiction. (Glidden v. Packard, 28 Cal. 649; Deidesheimer v. Brown, 8 Cal. 339.)

The dismissal of the action was a proper exercise of the discretion of the Court below. (Grigsby v. Napa, 36 Cal. 588.)

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

The respondents do not appear to have been made or ever to have become parties to the suit in which, upon their motion, the order appealed from was made; neither of them was named as a party plaintiff nor defendant, and no service of summons appears to have been made upon them or either of them, nor has any appearance been entered in the suit for either; neither of them has answered nor demurred, nor have they asked to be made party thereto or to intervene therein; but without right or authority derived from any code of civil procedure with which I am acquainted they intrude a motion in a proceeding to which they are strangers, which results in an order of the Court dismissing the suit as to a portion of the subject matter thereof.

This novel and summary mode of quieting title may be convenient, but is without legal sanction.

The Court, in my judgment, should not have entertained respondents' motion, and its judgment based thereon, dismissing appellant's suit as to certain lots named in his complaint, is clearly erroneous, and should be reversed and cause remanded, with directions to deny the motion; and it is so ordered.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF JOSEPH MARIE GASQ, DECEASED.

ALLOWANCE OF ATTORNEY'S FEES IN SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES.—A ruling of a Probate Court, in fixing the amount of compensation to be allowed an administrator in payment of counsel in the settlement of an estate, will not be disturbed, unless there is a plain abuse of discretion.

ADMINISTRATOR USING ESTATE FUNDS CHARGEABLE WITH INTEREST.—Where an administrator did not keep the funds of the estate separate from his own money, but used them for his own purpose; held, that he was properly chargeable with interest.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

Letters of administration upon the estate of the deceased were issued to William A. Quarles, Public Administrator of the City and County of San Francisco, in November, 1868; In April, 1871, he filed his account, in which, among other things, there was a charge of one thousand dollars in favor of his attorney in settlement of the estate. Exceptions were made to this account by the heirs at law, on the ground that one thousand dollars, or any sum in excess of two hundred and fifty dollars, was an unreasonable compensation for an attorney under the circumstances, and, it appearing that the Administrator had used the funds of the estate for his own purposes, that he should be charged with interest. The Court found that the charge in favor of the attorney was excessive, and reduced his compensation to five hundred dollars; and the Administrator was required to pay interest on the amount in his hands due the estate. From the order to this effect the Administrator appealed.

Bartlett & Pratt, for Appellant.

The item of one thousand dollars to the attorney should have been allowed. The payment was made in good faith, and could not be recovered back by the Administrator from the attorney. It would be unwise to compel administrators to accept the cheap services of poor attorneys by too rigidly scrutinizing the fees paid.

The Administrator should not have been charged interest. It was his duty to keep the funds of the estate in hand, ready to meet any emergency. During that time he could not put the funds to earning anything for the estate. Neither does it appear that during that time the Administrator used the funds in any way; and in the absence of such express proof and finding, the presumption is strong that he properly performed his official duty, and held the funds in reserve for such exigencies as might arise. It does not follow because the Administrator, after the expiration of the year, used the funds for his own purposes, that he should, therefore, be charged interest during that year.

Sawyer & Myrick, for Respondents.

The findings of the Court on the attorney's fee, and on the question of interest, were conclusive. Witnesses were examined, and the action of the Court was based upon the testimony given. The Administrator, in paying the attorney one thousand dollars, assumed the risk of its being allowed.

In reference to the question of interest, it appears that the Administrator did not keep the estate funds separate from his own, but used them for his private purposes, even during the first year. He did not keep the funds on hand at all, but put them out at once, as soon as he received them. He cannot use the moneys of the estate without being charged with their use. (2 Redfield on Wills, 882, 886; Utica Ins. Co. v. Lynch, 11 Paige, 520.)

Opinion of the Court — Temple, J.

By the Court, TEMPLE, J.:

This Court will not reverse the ruling of the Probate Court in fixing the amount of compensation, which it would be proper to allow the Administrator in payment of counsel in the settlement of the estate, unless there is a plain abuse of discretion. Such matters are peculiarly within the knowledge of the Probate Judge, and it is very difficult for this Court to form any satisfactory conclusion upon the subject.

It is found that the Administrator had not kept the funds of the estate separate from his own money, but has used them for his own purposes. He was, therefore, properly chargeable with interest. (Utica Ins. Co. v. Lynch, 11 Paige, 525.)

Order affirmed.

J. E. DE LA MONTAGNIE v. THE UNION INSURANCE COMPANY.

SALE OF WARD'S PROPERTY BY GUARDIAN, WITHOUT ORDER OF COURT, VOID.—Where shares in an insurance company belonging to an infant, but were issued to his guardian, under the name of "Augusta R. PURCHASE OF WARD'S PROPERTY FROM GUARDIAN — CAVEAT EMPTOR.—Every alienation of the property of a ward by a guardian, if made without an order of Court, is void; and it is of no import whether the purchaser has knowledge that it belongs to the ward or not.

and judgment, rendered in December, 1868, were to the effect that plaintiff should recover two hundred and seventy-four dollars, the deterioration in value of the stock between the time of the demand by plaintiff and the trial, and for a transfer of the stock. The defendant appealed.

Sidney V. Smith, for Appellant.

At common law a guardian could sell the personal property of his ward without application to any Court; but it was always considered safer to obtain the direction of a Court of chancery. (2 Kent, 228.) Under our statute regulating the relation of guardian and ward, the power of the guardian to sell any personal estate of the ward without an order of Court is expressly taken away. (Guardian and Ward Act, Secs. 20 and 25; see also Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 591.)

The plaintiff having derived title to the stock through a transfer to and an assignment from "Augusta R. Josephi, Guardian," had sufficient notice, or at least was put upon inquiry, as to the title of the stock not being in Mrs. Josephi. The addition of the word "Guardian" to her name was an indication that she did not hold the stock in her own right; it was enough to excite the suspicion of any prudent man (See Decan v. Shipper, 35 Penn. St. 239.)

F. & W. H. Sharp, for Respondent.

The defendant cannot make the defense which it sought to set up, and now urges to defeat the judgment. It issued the stock to Mrs. Josephi, with the simple addition of "Guardian." If it treated this designation as simply descriptio personæ, it cannot now question her right to transfer the stock in the same manner and capacity. If the ward interposed no objection to the proceeding, the company cannot. If the guardian in any manner violated the terms of his trust, it is for the Court; or his bondsmen, or the ward to complain.

Again, the Court found that the plaintiff took without notice; and the company was bound, therefore, to transfer to him. (George v. Kendall; 15 Wend. 640.) Having issued the stock to Mrs. Josephi as guardian, it is estopped from questioning any transfer made by her in that capacity. (Dyer v. Rich, 1 Met. 180.)

By the Court, WALLACE, J.:

This is an action to recover the value of certain shares of the capital stock of the corporation defendant, which the plaintiff alleges to be his property, and to have been converted by the defendant to its own use.

It appears that one James Michael, deceased, was at the time of his death owner of some thirteen shares of the capital stock of this insurance company, evidenced by a certificate standing in his own name, and that, under the order of distribution of the Probate Court, these shares came to Michael Frank Michael, an infant son of the decedent, and of whose person and estate his mother, Augusta R. Josephi, was the duly appointed guardian; and upon surrender of the original certificate by her a new certificate was issued to her, which ran on its face to "Augusta R. Josephi, Guardian," and she thereupon, and without any order of or authority from the Probate Court, sold the stock to De la Montagnie, "and on the same day assigned the said certificate thereof to him by an indorsement thereon, signed by her 'Augusta R. Josephi, Guardian.'" The corporation defendant refused to recognize the transfer, and declined to issue a new certificate of stock to De la Montagnie, upon his proffered surrender of this one.

The first question is, whether or not the sale and transfer, under the circumstances, vested a title to the stock in De la

Points decided.

Montagnie. The Court below found in this connection that the latter "had no knowledge that the said Augusta R. Josephi held the said stock as guardian of Michael Frank Michael, or that said stock belonged to him;" but that fact, in our opinion, is of no import. In Kendall v. Miller, 9 Cal. 591, it was held by this Court, that a sale made by a guardian of a portion of the estate of the ward, without authority from the Probate Court, conveyed no title to the purchaser; and the rule announced in that case was subsequently recognized here, at least by fair implication, in Schmidt v. Wieland, 35 Cal. 343, as being the correct exposition of the statute in force, regulating the sale of the property of wards by their guardians. We think, too, irrespective of adjudged cases, that the plain intent of the statute is to make void every alienation of the property of the ward, if made by the guardian without the order of the Court; and that the rule, in itself, is one of wholesome application to such sales, whether of the personal or real estate of the ward.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to render judgment for the defendant.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE, being disqualified, did not sit in this case.

SCHOOL OR LIEU LANDS — CERTIFICATE OF LOCATION WILL NOT SUPPORT EJECTMENT.—A certificate of location of school or lieu land, issued under the Act of April 27th, 1863 (Stats. 1863, p. 591), is not evidence of legal title, and will not support ejectment.

(Stats. 1863, p. 591), which inaugurated a new system of land law, intended to be complete in itself.

CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE AS EVIDENCE OF TITLE.—Under the Act of April 27th, 1863, for the sale of certain lands belonging to the State (Stats. 1863, p. 591), the Registrar's certificate of purchase of School or lieu land is the only prima facie evidence of legal title prior to a patent.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Napa County.

The Court below, on the trial of this action, found that the title of the land involved passed from the United States, by virtue of a patent dated May 20th, 1867, to the defendant Thompson and his associates, and that they were the legal owners thereof; that the Act of Congress of March 3d, 1863, granting the right of preëmption to certain purchasers on the Suscol Ranch took from the State of California all power, right, or authority to sell or dispose of the said land; and that the defendants were entitled to judgment against the plaintiff. Such a judgment having been entered, and a motion for new trial overruled, plaintiff appealed.

M. A. Wheaton and George Cadwalader, for Appellant.

The land sued for is a part of a thirty-sixth section, which was granted to the State on March 3, 1853, just ten years before the Suscol Act was passed. The plaintiff purchased the State title, and paid for it in full, and applied for a patent, when defendants filed a protest, and caused the case to be certified into the Court below for trial, at the same time offering and applying to purchase from the State, if the State owned the land. It is plain that the defendants have managed to keep one step behind the title in their efforts to get it. While it was in the State they went to the United States for it; and after the State has sold it to us, and got our money for it, they try to buy from the State. Unless the defendants can make us their trustees, they cannot reach the title of the land. We have the legal title;

Argument for Respondents.

we got it strictly according to law, and we have a right to its possession.

The statutes have declared, and the Courts have often decided, that certificates of location are evidence of title (See Richter v. Riley, 22 Cal. 641.)

Pendegast & Stoney, for Respondents.

Plaintiff's certificate of location was no evidence of title. The Act of April 27th, 1863, under which the certificate issued, denies by implication any weight as evidence to certificates of location. It provides that certificates of purchase shall be prima facie evidence of legal title; and as the certificate of location precedes the certificate of purchase in the proceedings to acquire title, and is a lower link in the chain, this provision of the statute excludes the idea that it is to have the same force as evidence upon the principle of the maxim, expressum facit cessare tacitum.

Nor does payment of the purchase money to the Treasurer give the certificate of location the dignity of a certificate of purchase. The law attaches no importance as evidence to the receipt of the Treasurer. Payment is one of the steps toward the certificate of purchase; but to avail the applicant in proving title to the land it must have been followed by "the certificate of purchase issued by the Register." (Act of 1863, Sec. 17.)

The plaintiff does not claim under the United States, because he refused to purchase under the Suscol Act. His claim is only under the State, and he can assert no better right than she had. But at the date of the survey the land was all occupied and cultivated, and, consequently, the title to it did not vest in the State, and no title passed to plaintiff.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The quarter section of land in contest in this case is a portion of a thirty-sixth section, and is included in the general tract known as the "Suscol Ranch." The action is ejectment, and as proof of title the plaintiff relies upon a certificate of location issued under the Act of April 26th, 1863, entitled "An Act to provide for the sale of certain lands belonging to the State." (Stats. 1863, p. 591.) The statute requires an applicant desiring to purchase from the State, lands included in sixteenth or thirty-sixth sections, to make his application to the State Locating Agent for the proper district, and if the application is approved, it is made the duty of the agent to apply to the Register of the proper United States Land District for the land on behalf of the State, for the use of the applicant. If the Register approves the selection by the State, the Locating Agent is to forward the papers to the State Surveyor General, and if he approves the location and selection, it is the duty of the applicant, within a specified time thereafter, to pay a certain percentage of the purchase money, or, if he sees fit, he may then pay the whole purchase price to the County Treasurer; and when the whole is paid, it is made the duty of the Register of the State Land Office to issue to the applicant a certificate of purchase. Section seventeen of the Act provides that "when a certificate of purchase has been issued by the Register, the same shall be deemed prima facie evidence of legal title to the land for which the certificate of purchase is issued;" and the same section provides that the certificate, all rights acquired thereby, "shall be subject to sale and transfer by deed or assignment executed and acknowledged before any officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments of deeds," etc. The certificate put in evidence by the plaintiff was not the certificate of purchase referred to in this section, but the certificate of location, issued by the State Locating Agent, approved by the United States Register and the State Surveyor General. Having elected to pay the whole of the purchase price in one payment, and to waive the credit allowed by law for a portion thereof, the plaintiff also put in evidence a receipt from the County Treasurer for the whole purchase money. His title, therefore, consists of the certificate of location and a proper receipt for the whole of the purchase money. The defendants deny that these will support ejectment; and if this proposition can be maintained, the plaintiff must fail in his action. The plaintiff, however, insists that under an Act passed in 1859 ejectment will lie on a certificate of location, such as he has produced in this case. That Act contains but one section, and is in the following words: "The certificate of purchase or of location of any lands in this State, issued or made in pursuance of any of the laws of the United States or of this State, shall be deemed prima facie evidence of legal title in the holder of said certificate of purchase or location, or his assignees." (Stats. 1859, p. 227.) If this act remained in force, wholly unaffected by the act of April 27th, 1863, there could be no question of the sufficiency of the plaintiff's certificate to support the action. But by the act of 1863 the Legislature made many important changes and modifications in the mode of disposing of the lands belonging to the State. It, in fact, inaugurated a new system, which was intended to be complete in itself. It provided new agents, who were to receive and pass upon applications to purchase, and established a State Land Office, to be presided over by a Register, to whom important duties are confided. He is in some measure to review the proceedings of subordinate officers, and he alone is authorized to issue a certificate of purchase, the effect of which, as declared by the seventeenth section, shall be to vest in the holder of it, ence to any question of estoppel, now for the first time thought of by appellant. The questions asked and testimony given were clearly material, relevant, and competent to explain the nature of the possession Phelps claimed to hold, as well as to contradict his previous statements.

There was no error in refusing to permit Abner Phelps to take the stand for the third time in rebuttal of testimony of Mrs. Pfoff. The proposition was to have him repeat what he had already said in his testimony in rebuttal. His recall was at any rate a matter entirely without the discretion of the Court. No error can be predicated upon a refusal.

By the Court, SPRAGUE, J.:

After a careful examination of the testimony, as presented by the record, I find that upon the question of possession of the demanded premises and the character thereof, from 1853 to 1863, there is direct and substantial conflict between the evidence presented by plaintiff tending to establish actual possession in Abner and Edwin Phelps, through whom she claims title, and that presented by defendants tending to establish actual possession in other parties, through whom they claim title; and as to the years 1854 and 1855, the evidence tending to establish actual possession in Abner Phelps is in direct conflict with that tending to establish such possession in J. F. Hutton, Sr., and one Haraszthy, through whom defendant Brummagim's testator, Beideman, claimed title. The findings, therefore, under the uniform practice of this Court, will not be disturbed on review.

The objection to the evidence of a conversation between Abner Phelps and Hutton, Jr., in 1860, while Phelps was in possession of the premises, was not well taken. This evidence tended to explain the character of possession held by

There is nothing in the point urged against the ruling of the Court, refusing to allow plaintiff to recall the witness, Abner Phelps, for the purpose indicated, which was to contradict the evidence of Mrs. Pfoff, formerly Mrs. Bach, so far as the same was in conflict with the testimony already given by the witness Phelps.

THOMAS H. HANSON v. JAMES S. McCUE.

LAW OF UNDERGROUND CURRENTS OF WATER.—Where underground currents of water, flowing in defined channels, are shown to exist, the rules of law which govern the use of similar streams flowing upon the surface of the earth, are applicable to them.

SPRINGS PRESUMED TO BE SUPPLIED BY PERCOLATION.—In a controversy respecting the use of the waters of a spring, where there was nothing to show that it was supplied by any defined flowing stream; held, that it must be presumed to be formed by the ordinary percolations of water in the soil.

PERCOLATING WATERS BELONG TO OWNER OF SOIL.—Waters filtrating or percolating in the soil belong to the owner of the freehold—like the rocks and minerals found there; and he may use them as he chooses, free from any usufructuary rights of others.

RIGHTS OF OWNERS OF SPRINGS OF WATER.—Where the owner of a spring of living water, supplied by percolation only, and having no natural channel or outlet, constructed an artificial channel, by means of which he conducted the water over certain intermediate vacant lands to his residence, and a subsequent occupant of a portion of the intermediate land enjoyed the use of the water flowing through the channel for fifteen years; held, that such occupant acquired no rights as against the owner of the spring, and could not prevent him from tapping such spring and using all its waters for his own profit.

had no right to complain of such appropriation below him, the fact that he did not complain for fifteen years and upwards would not create any presumption of a grant of an easement as against him, nor prevent him from using all the water of his spring as he pleased.

REASON OF PRESUMPTION OF GRANT OF EASEMENT FROM USER FOR LENGTH OF TIME.—The presumption of the grant of an easement, when indulged against a proper party, is because his conduct, in submitting to the use for such length of time without objection, cannot be accounted for upon any other hypothesis.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, Marin County.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

The spring therein referred to is situated on the hillside north of the Town of San Rafael, and is usually known as the San Rafael or Dixon Spring. The defendant appealed.

E. B. Mahon, for Appellant.

Even if plaintiff had an absolute right to the surface water running in the channel, and if the spring and channel were on plaintiff's land, yet such a state of facts would not entitle him to enjoin defendant from digging for any useful purpose on his (defendant's) own land. How much less can he do so when the spring is on defendant's land, and the grantor of defendant was the maker of the channel; and when plaintiff fails to show a clear right, or in fact, any right, to the water?

If any easement has been acquired by either of the parties, it is the defendant who has acquired a right, namely: to discharge the water of his ditch and spring upon plaintiff's land. Defendant's grantor was the actor; his estate is the dominant estate, and plaintiff's is the servient estate.

The law of surface streams does not apply to unknown subsurface streams or supplies. All the well-considered, and especially all the recent decisions on the subject are to this effect. (See Ellis v. Duncan, 21 Barb. 230; Haldeman v. Burkhardt, 45 Penn. St. 520; Acton v. Blundell, M. & W.

Argument for Respondent.

324; Angell on W. C. 168; Radcliff's Exrs. v. Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 200; Trustees of Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. 316.) In the latter case it is decided "that the law controlling the right to subterranean waters is very different from that affecting surface streams. In the former case the water belongs to the soil, is part of it, is owned and possessed as the earth is, and may be used, removed, and controlled to the same extent by the owner."

As to the prescriptive right claimed by plaintiff, it is plain that there can be no prescription without adverse user; and there can be no adverse user without creating a right of action. In the case at bar no right of action accrued to defendant as to the percolations through his land. He could not sue plaintiff, and reciprocally plaintiff cannot sue him. (Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Penn. 528.)

C. T. Botts, for Respondent.

Both English and American Judges have drawn the distinction between subterranean streams and percolations; but there is much conflict of opinion and contradiction of authorities as to how far a person may sink a well or shaft, or make any other excavation for a useful purpose, if he thereby incidentally divert the filtration or percolation by which his neighbor's well or stream is fed. On one side Balston v. Bensted, 1 Campbell, 403; Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 7 Exch. 283; and Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Penn. St. 528, are leading cases; on the other, Chasemore v. Richards, 2 H. & N. 186, and Haldeman v. Burkhardt, 45 Penn. St. 514.

We claim, however, that there has here been a deliberate attempt made—an attempt which the injunction arrested—to divert a superficial stream by cutting off the same stream in its subterranean flow, and this for no other purpose than bona fide the obtaining of water for commercial purposes. Further, it nowhere appears, either in the allegations of the complaint, the findings of the Court, or otherwise by the record, that the spring in question is itself supplied, in whole or in part, by the flow of any defined stream of water, either subterranean or passing along the surface of the earth. Underground currents of water, flowing in defined channels, are known to exist in considerable volume, particularly in limestone regions; and where their existence is shown, there is no doubt, either upon reason or authority, that the rules of law which govern the use of similar streams flowing upon the surface of the earth, are applicable to them. Such a stream, whether emerging or sinking, is in a greater or less degree a fertilizer of the land through which it flows. The right that it should flow "ubi solebat" comes ex jure naturæ and no one, merely because he is the proprietor of the soil through which it passes, can claim the corpus of the water of the flowing stream, or intercept its natural descent to the lands of the proprietor below. It not appearing that the spring here is supplied by any defined flowing stream, it must be presumed that it is formed by the ordinary percolations of water in the soil. The Court, it is true, as we have already seen, mentions in its findings "the hidden and subterranean veins, streams, and sources of said spring" as being about to be cut off by the excavation; and the counsel for the plaintiff argues that this amounts to a finding that there is a subterranean stream of a defined character, and flowing in a defined channel, which is about to be diverted. But it is evident that the finding means, in substance, that the spring is supplied in some way by hidden veins or subterranean streams; but the Court does not find that there is any stream known to exist at all, or if there is, whether it flows in a defined channel, which is the important point to be found. It amounts only to a finding that the "sources" of the spring—be they what they may—are about to be cut off. I do not understand the finding as establishing the exceptional fact that the spring here is fed by a known running stream of water flowing in a defined channel. The question, then, comes to this: One who is owner of the freehold—usque ad infernos—digging in the soil for the lawful purpose of his own profit, and not actuated by the malicious intent to wantonly deprive the plaintiff of the flow of water, is, at the instance of the latter, enjoined from so digging, because he will thereby divert the waters which percolate the soil from the spring from which the artificial water-course leads to the lands of the plaintiff. Water filtrating or percolating in the soil belongs to the owner of the freehold—like the rocks and minerals found there. It exists there free from the usufructuary right of others, which is to be respected by the owner of an estate through which a defined stream of water is found to flow. The owner may appropriate the percolations and filtrations as he may choose, and turn them to profit if he can. To hold otherwise would be to hold that the plaintiff here could lawfully claim a right to convert the lot of McCue into a mere filterer for his own convenience. “Such a claim (said the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in 23 Penn. R. 528), if sustained, would amount to a total abrogation of the right of property. No man could dig a cellar or a wall, or build a house on his own land, because these operations necessarily interrupt the filtrations through the earth. Nor could he cut down the forest, or clear his land for the purpose of husbandry, because the evaporation which would be caused by exposing the soil to the sun and air would inevitably diminish, to some extent, the supply of water which would otherwise filter through it. He could not even turn a furrow for agricultural purposes, because this would partially produce the same result.”

I am of opinion that the plaintiff has no such interest in the percolating waters found in the defendant's land as will support this action.

It is next argued, however, that the fact that the plaintiff, and those whose estate he has, have enjoyed the stream flowing from the spring for upwards of fifteen years without interruption, and adversely to the defendant and his grantor, will support a presumption of a grant of an easement by the latter to the former.

The presumption of the grant of an easement, when indulged, is because the conduct of the other party, in submitting to the use for such a length of time without objection, cannot be accounted for on any other hypothesis. The acts done by the party claiming the benefit of the presumption, and his predecessors in estate, must, however, have been in themselves such as the other party having the right to object to, or complain of, did neither, but submitted to them without objection or challenge. Such acts, if continued during a sufficient period of time under such circumstances, would raise the presumption relied upon. But it will be seen at once that McCue, or those from whom he purchased, could, in the nature of things, have no right to complain that the water in the artificial channel, after leaving the spring, was appropriated below by the owners of the Hanson lot. If they had no right to complain in the first instance we are not driven to the presumption of the grant of an easement to account for why they did not complain.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

I concur with Mr. Justice WALLACE in the opinion that the defendant, who is the owner of the spring, may lawfully divert the percolations by which it is supplied, provided it is not done through mere negligence, wantonness, or malice. In The Trustees of Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. 316, the law on this subject was carefully and elaborately examined, and the authorities industriously collated and reviewed. The propositions established by that decision, and the authorities cited, are: First—That the use of the waters of subterranean streams, flowing in well-defined channels, is governed by the same rules which apply to surface streams, flowing in natural channels; but mere percolations which feed a neighboring spring or well are subject to a different rule, and may be diverted by the owner of the soil, provided it is not done from mere negligence or malice. Second—That the same rule prevails, even though the spring or well supplied by percolation be on the land of an adjoining proprietor, as was the case in Trustees of Delhi v. Youmans. If these propositions be sound (of which I entertain no doubt) the defendant would have had the right to dig upon his own land, for any purpose not proceeding from mere malice, even though he had thereby diverted the percolations from a spring on the plaintiff's premises. If the plaintiff was the owner of the Dixon Spring, with a consequent right to the use of all its water, the defendant would have the clear right to dig upon his adjoining land, for any useful purpose, notwithstanding he might thereby divert the percolations, and thus destroy the spring. He would not be allowed to do it from mere wantonness and malice; but the owner of the soil is entitled to use the percolations through it, for any purpose which he may deem beneficial, or may divert them in another direction, in the prosecution of any work on his own land which he may consider advantageous to him. I deem it unnecessary to inquire into the reason of the ruling, which, however, is fully stated in the carefully considered case already cited, and the numerous authorities therein referred to. I do not understand the plaintiff's counsel to deny that the defendant might lawfully divert the percolations from the spring, provided it was only incidentally done in the prosecution of an independent or collateral work on his own premises; but he claims that the sole object of the tunnel is to cut off the supply of the water, and thus destroy the spring, which he insists the defendant has no right to do, by a work expressly prosecuted for that especial purpose. But the findings show that the object of the tunnel is to collect the water for a commercial purpose, to wit: to furnish the neighboring village of San Rafael a supply of fresh water — and this certainly is a proper and useful purpose. If the defendant has the right to divert the percolations by digging a ditch for the mere purpose of drainage, or by sinking a well, essential to the enjoyment of his property, I can perceive no reason why he may not accomplish the same result for any other purpose which he may deem advantageous to him; I think he may do it for any purpose which is not purely malicious. If these views be correct, it is clear that the plaintiff has acquired no rights by prescription which could debar the defendant from exercising his right to divert the percolation from the spring. We have already seen that he could exercise this right, even though the spring was on the plaintiff's premises, and a title founded on prescription, which presumes there was a grant from the true owner, certainly cannot be more available to the plaintiff than a title in fee to the spring itself. But the Court finds that it was the intention of the defendant to tap the spring at the surface, in case he should fail to obtain a sufficient supply of water otherwise. If the plaintiff is entitled to enjoin him from doing this, it will be time enough to restrain him when he is about to put his threat into execution. But if he ought to be enjoined from tapping the spring on the surface, the injunction should, at all events, be limited to that. But I express no opinion as to the propriety of such an injunction, on the facts presented by the record. For these reasons I concur in reversing the judgment.

R. S. THOMPSON v. OWEN CONNOLLY.

DESCRIPTION OF LAND IN JUDGMENT PRESUMED DEFINITE.—Where a judgment divided land as between the parties by a line as laid down upon a certain map annexed to the judgment, and it was objected that the line was too vague and uncertain, and that the map furnished no data for its correct location: held, that all intendments were in favor of the judgment, and, in the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary, it would be assumed that the line could be located with entire precision.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

W. H. Patterson, for Appellant.

The division line of the property awarded to the plaintiff and defendant, respectively, is too indefinite and uncertain to support the judgment against a direct attack in the same proceeding. As will be seen on inspection of the original map attached to the judgment roll, the line is not a line of survey, but simply an imaginary one on paper, without measurement, course, or distance. Not being one of the calls in the description set out in the complaint, it cannot be presumed to have been ascertained and settled in the action. And whenever it becomes necessary to ascertain and settle it to determine the rights of the defendant, he is entitled to contest it.

It is not necessary to claim that the judgment is void, but only that the verdict is insufficient in its recitals to support it. (Riley v. Smith, 9 Allen, 370; Atwood v. Atwood, 22 Pick. 283; Miller v. Miller, 16 Pick. 215; Smith v. Jenks, 10 Sergeant and Rawle, 153; Orten v. Noonan, 18 Wis. 447.)

Elisha Cook, for Respondent.

The verdict is sufficiently certain (and will so be considered unless the record clearly shows that it is not) for the Sheriff to ascertain the land referred to therein. There is nothing in the record showing that the Sheriff could not readily ascertain the property, and every intendment being in favor of the verdict and judgment, the presumption is that every call, mark, line, tract, map, and other thing, referred to in the verdict, can be readily ascertained by the Sheriff. (Tyson v. Passmore, 7 Barr. 273; 17 Serg. & Rawle, 393; 5 Watts, 371.)

If, as claimed by appellant, no land is designated or can be ascertained by reason of uncertainty, the verdict and judgment are harmless; no injury has been done and the appeal should be dismissed. If the verdict was informal, the appellant should have excepted to it at the time of its rendition and should have moved the Court below for a new trial and to set aside the verdict. There is no pretense that the verdict is void.

By the Court, CROCKETT, J.:

The action is to recover the possession of a fractional fifty-vara lot situate in the City of San Francisco, and bounded on three of its sides by streets. The verdict of the jury was in these words: "We, the jury in this cause, find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the possession of all the lands, being that portion of fifty-vara lot No. 6, in Block No. 214, colored in red and lying west of the Hill tract line as laid down on a certain map filed this day in this cause; and we further find a verdict in favor of the defendant for all the land colored white and lying east of said Hill tract line, as appears by said above named map." A judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict, and a copy of the map was annexed to and forms a part of the judgment and judgment roll.

This appeal is by the defendant, from the judgment, on the judgment roll, and the only ground relied upon for a reversal of the judgment is that the verdict, in describing and locating the division line between the two parcels of land, awarded to the plaintiff and defendant, respectively, is too vague and uncertain to support the judgment. In support of this proposition, it is said that the line of the Hill tract is a mere imaginary line, and that the map furnishes no data for its correct location, nor for ascertaining the quantity of land awarded to the parties severally, or the precise location of either parcel. But we cannot assume that the line of the Hill tract is a purely ideal line, having no visible existence on the ground. For aught that appears, it may be defined by visible monuments, and its exact location may be a matter of notoriety in the vicinity. All the intendments are in support of the judgment, and there is nothing in the record to raise a reasonable doubt that the land awarded to the plaintiff and defendant, severally, can be located with entire precision.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice TEMPLE did not participate in the foregoing decision.

AGLIE STOPPELKAMP v. CHARLES MANGEOT AND AUGUSTINE CEZAR.

CHANGING TERMS OF LEASE BY LANDLORD.—The mode of changing the terms of a lease upon notice by the landlord, depends wholly upon the statute; and the cases in which such changes can be made are limited to those in which it is expressly authorized.

ESTATES BY LEASE—TIME SPECIFIED, AND TIME INDEFINITE.—A lease for a specified period of time, as for one month, creates an estate substantially different from that created by a lease for an indefinite period, with rent payable monthly, or by lease from month to month. Where the time is specified, the lease terminates by the mere lapse of time. No notice is necessary to entitle the landlord to re-enter, or to enable him to recover possession. But where the lease is from month to month, the lease does not terminate by the mere lapse of time—neither party can terminate the relation without notice to the other in advance.

TENANCY FOR YEARS, AND FROM YEAR TO YEAR.—If a tenant for years holds over with the consent of his landlord, express or implied, paying yearly rent, without any further arrangement as to time, the tenancy may thus be converted into a tenancy from year to year.

TENANCY FOR YEARS.—A tenancy for the specified period of one month is a tenancy for years, and not a tenancy from year to year, or from month to month.

TENANCY FROM MONTH TO MONTH.—A tenant for the specified period of one month, who holds over with the consent of his landlord, thereby becomes a tenant from month to month.

IDEM — REPUDIATED BY ACT OF LANDLORD.—S. sued M., alleging that he had leased certain lots to M. for one month, for twenty-five dollars; that fifteen days before the close of the month he gave notice, in writing, under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act of 1863, that the rent for the next month would be five hundred dollars, payable in advance; that M. had held over, and had failed to pay the rent; held, that by giving the notice of a change of terms before a tenancy from month to month commenced, and following it up by a demand of rent, and immediately thereafter of possession, he repudiated the holding over on the original terms, and the claims of the parties were adverse, and actually hostile, from the moment of the expiration of the specific terms alleged, and there never was a tenancy from month to month.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE AS TO JURISDICTION OF COUNTY COURT.—The provisions of the statute conferring jurisdiction upon County Courts in actions to recover the possession of premises held over by tenants against the consent of the landlord, are constitutional.

Argument for Appellant.

QUERY.—Whether the provisions of the sixth section of the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act of 1863, as to changing terms of lease by notice from the landlord in the mode therein prescribed, are constitutional?

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

P. G. Buchan, for Appellant.

The judgment cannot be sustained, because the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This point can be taken on appeal, and is one of the points made in the statement. (Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 486; Russell v. Byron, 2 Cal. 86; White v. Pratt, 13 Cal. 521.)

It will be perceived that this tenancy was for the period of one month, and was not a tenancy "from month to month," in the language of the statute. At the end of that month, the defendant, if he remained on the premises, was a tenant holding over after his term had expired, and was entitled to thirty days notice to quit, if the landlord intended to terminate the tenancy. If he had paid another month's rent and remained in possession, or if he remained in possession over the month, with the consent of his landlord, then he became a tenant from month to month, and fifteen days before the twentieth of August (not fifteen days before the twentieth of July), this notice to change the terms of the lease could have been given. The Court will find the section of the statute under which the notice was given, in 1 Hittell's Dig. par. 3134, Sec. 6, of the Act in reference to forcible entries and unlawful detainers. It provides that in "all leases of lands and tenements, or any interest therein from month to month, the landlord may" give the notice of fifteen days before the expiration of the month, to change the terms of the lease, etc. The last clause of the section itself defines what a holding from month to month is. It says:

Argument for Appellant.

“In all leases of lands or tenements, or any interest therein for a month, or any term less than one year, and the tenant holds over his term by consent of his landlord, the tenancy shall be construed to be a tenancy from month to month, or a tenant for such term less than a year as the case may be.”

This notice was served on the third of July; that is, on the thirteenth day of the term, “and the holding over his term by consent of his landlord” had not, and could not then have occurred, so that he was not then a tenant from month to month. This is too clear for argument. The demand, therefore, for five hundred dollars on the twentieth of July, instead of twenty-five dollars, was illegal, and payment properly refused. The Court, however, not only rendered judgment for restitution of the premises, but for one thousand five hundred dollars, three times the amount of the rent thus demanded.

The County Court had no jurisdiction, because this was not an action for forcible detainer, and it is only in such a case that the County Court has jurisdiction. We are aware that this point conflicts with the opinion of this Court in the case of Caulfield v. Stevens, 28 Cal. 118, where the Court decided that the County Court had exclusive jurisdiction in such cases. As to exclusive jurisdiction, that decision is overruled in Courtwright v. The Bear River Company, 30 Cal. 573. The question here is not in what Court this case should have been brought, but has it been brought in a Court that had jurisdiction? That depends on the meaning of the words in the Constitution giving the County Court “original jurisdiction (not exclusive jurisdiction) in actions of forcible entry and detainer.” It is perfectly evident that if this language is held to include all unlawful detainers not accompanied by force, it gives the County Court original jurisdiction in all cases of ejectment where the possessor unlawfully, but not forcibly detains the possession from the true owner. The Constitution gives the District Courts original jurisdiction "in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property."

The Constitution of this State confers upon the District Courts exclusive jurisdiction in all civil cases where the demand in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars. Jurisdiction is conferred upon the County Courts over actions of forcible entry and detainer. Actions may be maintained in those Courts quasi-criminal, to recover the premises forcibly, or, for the sake of the argument, we will admit unlawfully and wrongfully detained, and to punish the wrongful detainer. But actions can not be maintained in those Courts to recover rent, as rent, to the amount of fifteen hundred dollars. In other words, they cannot give judgment for the sum of fifteen hundred dollars for a cause of action arising on contract.

If it is to be held that the fifteen hundred dollars is a penalty imposed by the Court for criminally holding over after the non-payment of rent, and that it is not for a cause of action arising on contract, then we say that the sixth and thirteenth sections of the Act in reference to forcible entries and detainers are unconstitutional and void.

J. M. & D. F. Verdenal, for Respondent.

The first point raised by the appellant is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

To us, there seems to be about as much distinction between a tenant from "month to month" and a tenant for "a month" as that between a tenant from "year to year" and a tenant for "years"—a distinction rather in words than substance. (Woodf. L. & J. 113.) The counsel argues that, if the appellant "remained in possession over the month, with the consent of his landlord, then he became a tenant from month to month." We contend that he did hold over the premises with his landlord's consent. The amount of rent to be paid was changed, but there was no attempt to change the tenancy from what it then was—a tenancy for a month, or "month to month." There was no attempt to sever the then existing relation of landlord and tenant. The tenant to hold over on the payment of an increased rent; and, by holding over after the termination of the month, the tenant, according to the counsel's own argument, became a tenant from "month to month." Independent of this, the very section quoted by counsel, on page four, expressly declares a tenancy from "month to month" to be "all leases of lands or tenements, or any interest therein, for a month, or any term less than one year."

The Legislature seems to have regarded all tenancies less than a year as tenancies from "month to month," and it would certainly seem absurd, upon its face, that in the case of a tenancy from "month to month" the landlord could change the terms of the tenancy, and that he could not change the terms if it was a tenancy for "a month." In the latter case the landlord could do nothing but give thirty days notice to his tenant to leave, even though both parties were willing that the tenancy should continue. Besides, all the facts in the case show the tenancy to have been one from month to month, and the verdict cures the defect, if any there be. (Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268.)

As to the constitutional objection. In Caulfield v. Stevens, the question of jurisdiction is discussed at length, and definitely settled in favor of the full and complete jurisdiction of the County Court in the class of cases of which this is one; and, in the latest forcible entry and detainer case—Kower v. Gluck, 33 Cal. 403—a case appealed from the County Court, no point is taken to the jurisdiction of the Court below, nor does the Court even remotely hint at the question being unsettled. If the plaintiff in this case was desirous of obtaining the possession of her property for any reason, she would certainly have the right to avail herself of any legal remedy to wrest the possession from a reluctant tenant. Under the sixth section, she duly notified her tenant of the change in the terms of the tenancy, and he remained in possession with the full understanding that he must pay five hundred dollars rent, or leave. No undue advantage was taken of him; he knew the consequences of his action, and no doubt acted upon the advice of his able counsel.

By the Court, SAWYER, C. J.:

This is an action against a tenant holding over, to recover the premises under the Forcible Entry and Detainer Act of 1863. The complaint alleges that plaintiff, on the 20th of June, 1867, "leased, demised, and let to said defendant" the premises in question, "to have and to hold the said premises to said defendant, Charles Mangeot, for the month thence ensuing, at the rent of twenty-five dollars, payable on the twentieth day of the said month of June, in advance. That by virtue of said lease, the said defendant, Charles Mangeot, went into the possession and occupation of the demised premises, and still continues to hold and occupy the same." The complaint then alleges the giving of notice in time, under section six of said Act, that if defendant should hold over after the expiration of the month, the rent would be five hundred dollars per month, in gold coin, a demand and refusal of the rent, and a demand of the possession. The case was tried by a referee; the facts found in favor of plaintiff, and judgment rendered for possession and treble rent, at five hundred dollars per month.

The first point is, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or to sustain the judgment, in this, that the tenancy alleged is a tenancy for a specific time, viz.: one month, and not a tenancy from month to month, and is, therefore, not within the provisions of the sixth section, authorizing a change of the term of the lien by giving notice in the mode therein prescribed. The provisions of the sixth section are as follows: "In all leases of lands or tenements, or any interest therein, from month to month, the landlord may, and it shall be lawful for him, upon giving notice in writing at least fifteen days before the expiration of the month, to change the terms of the lease, to take effect at the expiration of said month. Said notice, when served upon the tenant, shall of itself operate and be effectual to create and establish, as a part of the lien, the terms, rent, and conditions specified in said notice, if such tenant shall continue to hold such premises after the expiration of said month."

Without this provision of the statute, of course, the landlord could not change the terms of the lease in the mode prescribed. This mode of changing the terms of the lease, and creating a new contract against the will of the tenant, then depends wholly upon the statute, and the cases in which such changes can be made must be limited to those in which it is expressly authorized. We cannot extend the stringent provisions of the Act to other cases not provided for. Unless a lease for a specified period of time, as one month, is the same identical thing in law as a lease for an indefinite period of time with rent payable monthly, or a lease from month to month, the provisions of section six do not apply to the former. And they are clearly not identical in law. They are different estates, with different incidents, and are designated in law by different technical terms. There is a substantial, not merely a verbal difference. On a lease for a specific time, as one month, the estate terminates by the mere lapse of time, and at the end of the term the lessee must go out. No notice is necessary to terminate the tenancy and entitle the landlord to reënter, or to enable the landlord to recover in case the tenant refuses to surrender the premises. But in the case of a lease from month to month, the estate does not terminate by the mere lapse of time. Neither party can terminate the relation without giving notice in advance for the time required by law. If a tenant for years holds over with the consent of his landlord, express or implied, paying yearly rent, without any further arrangement as to time, the tenancy may thus be converted into a tenancy from year to year. A tenancy from year to year may be a tenancy for years; that is to say, a tenancy for one year certain, with a right to hold over from year to year thereafter, unless due notice be given; but a tenancy for years, technically so called, is not a tenancy from year to year, and a tenancy from year to year only aims thereon to a further agreement, or by holding over after the term has expired by the consent of the landlord, express or implied.

In this case, the tenancy alleged in the complaint is a tenancy for a specified period of time, to wit: one month. It is technically a tenancy for years and not a tenancy from year to year, or from month to month. And the statute only authorizes a change of the terms of the lease in the mode pursued in the case of a tenancy from month to month. It was not authorized, therefore, in the case alleged in this complaint. The last clause of the section does not aid the plaintiff. It is as follows: "In all leases of lands or tenements, or any interest therein, for a month, or any term less than one year, and the tenant holds over his term by consent of his landlord, the tenancy shall be construed to be a tenancy from month to month, or a tenancy for such term less than a year as the case may be." This clause only enacts in express terms the common law. It simply provides that if the defendant had held over after the expiration of the month for which the premises were demised, with the consent of the landlord, he would from so holding over, there-
